PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1916.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy gracious favor and blessing for this day as we enter upon the obligations of the day, for Thy grace and Thy blessing alone can safeguard all that we count dearest to us, all that means most to us. The ideals of life come to us out of Thy revealed Word. The law of life has its foundation in Thyself. We must come at last to render an account to Thee, the God of all men.

Grant that this day we may so live and act and think that there shall be nothing to regret at its close, but a blessed consciousness of having faithfully discharged the solemn duties that pertain to the Members of this great Senate. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday, July 22, 1916, when, on request of Mr. OWEN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

Mary B. Taylor, widow of Isaac Taylor, deceased, v. The United States (S. Doc. No. 521).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4866. An act for the relief of Julia R. Goodloe;

H. R. 8787. An act for the relief of the heirs of Hundley V. Fowler, deceased;

H. R. 10484. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14725. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide a part of the town site of Plummer, Idaho, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 218. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of the gift of the Berkshire Trout Hatchery, Berkshire County, Mass.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a telegram which I ask to have read. It is very short.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., July 23, 1916.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We wish to vigorously protest against the British black list. To allow this black list to remain effective will not only put many neutral exporters out of business but will materially affect prices of American commodities, particularly cotton. Our cotton exporters are already feeling the effect of this unjust invasion of American rights. To us this black list does not appear to be a war measure, but a scheme of English merchants to corner the world's business by force.

GREATER SAVANNAH COMMERCIAL CLUB,
P. S. BACON, Chairman Executive Committee.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Benton County, Ark., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES. I have a copy of the report of the temperance committee adopted by the synod of Alabama of the Southern Presbyterian Church on November 18, 1915. It relates to the advertisement in certain newspapers of intoxicating liquors. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Commercial Club, of Seattle, Wash., and a telegram in the nature of a memorial from D. G. Collier, of San Diego, Cal., remonstrating against a tax on copper, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of the Piano and Musical Instrument Workers' International Union of America and the Railway Employees' Department of the American Federation of Labor, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of E. A. Farrington, of Rockland, Me.; Lewis D. Bement, of Framingham, Mass.; Edgar B. Goldstein, of White Plains, N. Y.; M. Berry, of Newport, R. I.; Joseph R. Barrell, of St. Louis, Mo.; Carl J. Feckheimer, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; I. H. Freund, of Chicago, Ill.; A. W. Hunt, of Providence, R. I.; E. M. Johnson, of Pawling, N. Y.; Almee Guggenheimer, of Oquossoc, Me.; Mary M. Hinkley, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; and of H. D. Andrews, of Lawrence Park, Bronxville, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Brenham, Tex., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Stoneham and Plantersville, in the State of Texas, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. OWEN presented a memorial of the Illinois State Medical Society, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit officials of the Public Health Service from joining medical societies, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of the Illinois State Medical Society, praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a Division of Mental Hygiene and Rural Sanitation in the United States Public Health Service, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Topeka, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Waterloo, Kans., praying for prohibition in the Island of Porto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit corporations from paying normal tax for bondholders under the income-tax law, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Eugene, Oreg., praying for the enactment of legislation for the prohibition of interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Glens Falls, N. Y., praying for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 7396. An act for the relief of Hiram P. Geaslin (Rept. No. 730); and

H. R. 14889. An act for the relief of the heirs of Jackson J. Mash, deceased (Rept. No. 731).

Mr. HARDWICK (for Mr. BANKHEAD), from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2208) for the relief of James L. Yokum, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 732) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 135) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 735) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6698) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 736) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 7) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes, reported adversely thereon, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14299) to amend section 33 of an act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MYERS from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 147) extending the provisions of the act approved June 16, 1898, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 737) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 6667) to incorporate the American Nurses' Association, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 738) thereon.

Mr. KERN, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10546) for the relief of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 739) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 153) to create a Bureau of Labor Safety in the Department of Labor, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 734) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) authorizing the appointment of a special joint commission of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the employment of Federal prisoners in industrial occupations for the benefit of the Government of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

COMPENSATION OF INJURED EMPLOYEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 733) thereon.

I will state that this bill was considered by a subcommittee consisting of Senators BORAH, HOLLIS, and myself, and it was submitted to Senators MARTINE of New Jersey, JOHNSON of Maine, SWANSON, ASHURST, PENROSE, and KENYON, who agreed that the report should be made, with the reservation of the privilege by one Senator to offer an amendment on the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3032) authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin, and I submit a report (No. 729) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 6702) for the relief of S. S. Yoder; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 6703) granting an increase of pension to Frank Plumlee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6704) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain land to school district No. 9, of Sanders County, Mont.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) giving authority to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to make special regulations for the occasion of the reunion of the Confederate Veterans' Association, to be held in the District of Columbia in the year 1917, and for other purposes, incident to said encampment; to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. REED submitted an amendment proposing to enable qualified voters of the United States engaged in the military service of the country as the Organized Militia and Volunteer Army to vote for electors of President and Vice President and for Members of Congress, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 16460), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $125 to pay H. G. Larimer for fees and expenses as an expert witness on behalf of the Government in the case of The United States v. Henry Samuels, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. WEEKS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

INSPECTION OF VESSELS.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13223) to provide for appeals from decisions of boards of local inspectors of vessels, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WAR DEPARTMENT ORDERS.

Mr. JONES. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 238) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all orders issued by his department during the last three years directing the nonemployment of, or discriminating between, citizens of the United States in connection with the work, activities, and projects carried on by his department.

Mr. OWEN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

FEDERAL FARM-LOAN ACT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have had numerous inquiries, hundreds daily, for copies of what is known as the rural-credits or Federal farm-loan act. I have no doubt other Senators have also been requested to furnish copies of that act. The Joint Committee on Printing ordered the limit within its power, but the number printed under that order has been exhausted. Demands are coming in, and I offer a resolution for printing extra copies of that act, and I ask to have it read and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution (S. Res. 239) was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 65,000 copies of Public Law No. 158, known as the Federal farm-loan act, of which 60,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. OWEN. I present a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, July 22, 1916.

HON. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to bring to your attention the inclosed statement prepared by this office, showing the increases and decreases in the national banks and national-bank capital for the 12 months ending July 1, 1916. This statement, I think, affords a very complete answer to the disparaging reports which are being published in newspapers hostile to the administration. For example, a newspaper clipping which I find on my desk this morning, copied from a New Orleans paper, says:

"A number of national banks, week by week, are surrendering their Federal charters and taking out State bank charters instead, and the published reason for this change is the high cost and troublesome exactions imposed on the banks by the Comptroller of the Currency. The number of Federal reserve banks is decreasing instead of increasing."

From the inclosed statement you will see that during this period 120 new national banks were organized and 92 existing banks increased their capital, while the number of banks liquidating (other than those consolidating with other national banks), together with the number of banks reducing their capital, was only 108.

The statement also shows that there was an aggregate increase in the capital of national banks during the year of $17,612,700, and that the total reduction of capital owing to liquidations (other than for consolidation with other national banks) and reductions of capital was only $8,940,500, making the net increase in national-bank capital for the year on this basis $8,672,200.

With high regard,

Faithfully, yours,

JOHN SKELTON WILLIAMS.

Statement showing the increases and reductions in the number of national banks and the capital of national banks during the period from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916.

New charters issued to 120 banks, with capital of	$8,005,000
Increase of capital approved for 92 banks, with new capital of	9,607,700
Aggregate number of new charters and banks increasing capital, 212, with aggregate of new capital authorized	17,612,700
Number of banks liquidating (other than those consolidating with other national banks), 87; capital of same banks	7,893,000
Number of banks reducing capital, 21; reduction of capital	1,047,500
Total number of banks going into liquidation or reducing capital (other than those consolidating with other national banks), 108; aggregate capital reduction	8,940,500
The foregoing statement shows the aggregate of increased capital for the period was	17,612,700
Against this there was a reduction of capital, owing to liquidations (other than for consolidation with other national banks) and reductions of capital of	8,940,500
Net increase	8,672,200

During this period there were 15 national banks, with an aggregate capital of $935,000 placed in the hands of receivers, and 4 national banks, with an aggregate capital of $155,000, were restored to solvency and reopened.

The Comptroller's Office refused 18 applications for charters for national banks during this period.

Of the 87 national banks liquidating during the year (exclusive of 45 which consolidated with other national banks) the records indicate that 75 consolidated with State banks or reorganized under State laws, while 58 State banks during the same period were converted into national banks or reorganized under the national banking laws.

SAFETY AT SEA.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I present a paper which, without taking the time of the Senate to describe, I deem of sufficient importance to have printed as a public document, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing for their consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

NATIONAL PARK IN HAWAII.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, and ask that it be now considered. It will take but a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, having met, after full and free conference agree to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its insistence upon its amendment striking out the following in lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 on page 8 of said bill:

"Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, and improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law; and."

JOHN F. SHAFROTH,

JOHN W. KERN,

MILES POINDEXTER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

SCOTT FERRIS,

EDWARD T. TAYLOR,

IRVINE L. LENROOT,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in pursuance of Senate joint resolution No. 60, creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce and the necessity for further legislation relating thereto, and so forth, I, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, announce the following five members of that committee as the Senate members of the joint subcommittee: The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

SIR ROGER CASEMENT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire, if it is in order, to ask that the resolution I offered some days ago be now taken up for action. I refer to Senate resolution 237, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to advise our ambassador to Great Britain to use his kindly offices, unofficially, to ask for the commutation of the sentence of death passed upon Sir Roger Casement.

Mr. OWEN. If it leads to no debate, I interpose no objection, but I do not wish to see the morning hour again consumed by debating this question.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I appreciate the situation, and I have no desire to incur any debate. I think the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will acquiesce in the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. STONE. So far as I am individually concerned I have no objection to the two resolutions, the one offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the one offered by the Senator from New Jersey, being laid before the Senate and to dispose of them in their order, offering one as an amendment or a substitute for the other, without debate. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not know that I caught just the remark of the Senator.

Mr. STONE. There are two resolutions.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will agree to have them both go before the committee.

Mr. STONE. Not the committee, but the Senate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Of course, it would be beyond me; I could not prevent them from going before the Senate, they are both before the Senate now. If I may be permitted, I want to say it seems to me the one offered by the Senator from California is not directed at the question at issue. The question at issue is not the leniency to Irish prisoners but the question at issue is whether the President shall be requested to advise our ambassador to Great Britain to use his kindly offices to ask for the commutation of the sentence of death passed upon Sir Roger Casement.

Mr. STONE. But the question I ask the Senator is whether he consents, as far as he is concerned, to submit the matter to a vote without further debate?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir; utterly. I have no desire to incur any further debate.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] is not present, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STONE. He is not in the city.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I withdraw the request. I do not want this matter disposed of without debate. I wish to be heard for two minutes, and I think I will be heard now.

Mr. STONE. The matter is not before the Senate now. We were trying to reach an agreement to have it disposed of without debate.

Mr. ASHURST. I was objecting to that. I want to be heard for two minutes. I know how pressed we are for time, and, therefore, I wish only to take two minutes; but that I will take.

Mr. STONE. Well, outside of that, will the Senator from New Jersey agree?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. STONE. Then, Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolutions being presented. I am not very particular about the order in which the two resolutions are presented. The Senator from New Jersey calls up his resolution, and if that is laid before the Senate, on behalf of the Senator from California I shall propose his as a substitute.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say that I am opposed to that resolution as a substitute. My reason, I assert again, is that it is not directed at the question at issue. The question at issue is this—

Mr. STONE. Now we are going to have debate.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But I feel I am justified in stating that the question at issue is the relief of Sir Roger Casement, not merely to express our desire for leniency to political prisoners.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I think we are to have debate upon it. I will move to refer both resolutions. I am perfectly willing to have them laid before the Senate with the understanding that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] shall take two minutes, and then I shall offer on behalf of the Senator from California his resolution as a substitute.

Mr. JONES. I hope it is not understood that the agreement between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from New Jersey will cut off debate on the proposition.

Mr. STONE. I will ask unanimous consent that with the exception of two minutes to the Senator from Arizona the resolutions be voted upon without further debate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Simmons
Brandege	James	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Clapp	Jones	Owen	Smoot
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Page	Sterling
Colt	La Follette	Penrose	Stone
Culberson	Lane	Pittman	Thomas
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Polindexter	Thompson
Curtis	Lodge	Pomerene	Tillman
Dillingham	McCumber	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fall	Martin, Va.	Reed	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Weeks
Gallinger	Myers	Shafroth	Williams
Groana	Nelson	Sheppard	Works
Harding	Norris	Sherman

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 237) submitted by Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to advise our ambassador to Great Britain to use his kindly offices, unofficially, to ask for the commutation of the sentence of death passed upon Sir Roger Casement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, what we may say here or elsewhere regarding Ireland's long struggle for freedom has, and can have, no bearing upon or relevancy to the present European conflict. But no doubt the war conditions surrounding England fired the zeal of Irish patriots with the hope of a successful revolution against the unspeakable oppression which had so long held Ireland in its intolerable chains. I am in favor of the passage of this resolution and would favor the passage of a much stronger one were I convinced that it would be of any efficacy in securing the relief for those unhappy people.

The same sentiments and aspirations that animated George Washington, John Adams, Sam Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, Benjamin Franklin, Warren at Bunker Hill, Nathan Hale, John Stark, Anthony Wayne, and Daniel Morgan in our Revolutionary War animated and controlled Sir Roger Casement, Patrick H. Pearse, Thomas J. Clarke, and their compatriots and coadjutors in 1916.

The same aspirations and sentiments that animated Andrew Jackson and his Kentucky and Tennessee riflemen at New Orleans in 1815, animated and controlled the Irish patriots in 1916. Let us, therefore, the free and untrammelled Senators of a Nation consecrated to liberty, not fail at this time to make proper expression of a genuine and warm sympathy for the Irish political prisoners, for they represent a race which for centuries has offered to the world a continuous example of pure motives, pathetic patriotism, strong and splendid, but unavailing courage.

Agricola, Roman statesman and general, and father-in-law of the historian Tacitus, advised the empire builders of his day that Imperial Rome should "war down and take possession of Ireland, so that freedom might be put out of sight." From the day of Agricola's brutal expression down to this good hour the Irish people have waged an uncompromising resistance, so that freedom in Ireland might not be "put out of sight"; and in all the troubled centuries, from the time of Agricola to this day, the Irish people have never sought to impose a yoke of tyranny upon other people or to build empires, but have sought simply their own freedom and independence.

Some years ago I read an extract from a speech attributed to the eloquent Senator Bob Taylor, of Tennessee, whose service here gave glory to this Senate. He said:

"If I were a sculptor I would chisel from the marble my ideal of a hero. I would make it the figure of an Irishman sacrificing his hopes and his life on the altar of his country; and I would carve on its pedestal the name of Robert Emmet.

"If I were a painter I would make my canvas eloquent with the deeds of the bravest people who ever lived, whose proud spirit no power can ever conquer, and whose loyalty and devotion to the hopes of free government no tyrant can ever crush. And I would write under the picture 'Ireland.'

"If I were a poet I would melt the world to tears with the pathos of my song. I would touch the heart of humanity with the mournful melody of Ireland's wrongs and Erin's woes. I would weave the shamrock into garlands of glory for the Emerald Isle, the land of heroes, the nursery of liberty. Tortured in dungeons and murdered on scaffolds, robbed of the fruits of their sweat and toil, scourged by famine and plundered by the avarice of heartless power, driven like the leaves of autumn before the keen winter winds, this sturdy race of Erin's sons and daughters have scattered over the face of the earth, homeless only in the land of their nativity, but princes and lords in every other land where merit is the measure of men."

In conclusion, I wish to say that I am very much in favor of the passage of this resolution requesting the President, through diplomatic channels, to ask Great Britain to exercise clemency in the treatment of Irish political prisoners, and I also express the hope that in dealing with Sir Roger Casement Great Britain will be wise enough to see that she can not get a "place in the sun" by snuffing out the lights of the world.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I should be disposed to favor either of the resolutions pending before the Senate at this time relative to the case of Sir Roger Casement. They both convey the same thought—the expression of a hope for clemency in behalf of one whose only offense is love of his native land.

In recent days, perhaps more than in other periods, many appeals have been addressed to the nations of the earth in the name of humanity, and I can not conceive of the sensibilities of any nation being disturbed by a respectful appeal coming from one of the units in the family of nations urging, in the name of a common humanity, that clemency be extended to a man guilty of no moral turpitude, animated by the purest purpose and moved only by a passion to free his people and his race from an oppression under which it has labored for seven centuries.

If Sir Roger Casement be a criminal, then George Washington and John Hancock and John Adams were criminals. They were all rebels protesting against wrong and tyranny. Mr. President, the names of those who fall no less than those who succeed in rebellion remain enshrined in the hearts of a grateful people.

What is the demarcation between the rebel who triumphs and the one who fails? Is one animated by a nobler purpose than that which moves the other? According to the standards that guide men, are they not both, the successful and the unsuccessful rebel, to be judged by the animating purpose of their conduct? Though its votaries fall, the struggle for liberty is eternal.

Mr. President, it has been stated that there is no precedent for this action. I am sure the distinguished Senator who made that statement must upon reflection recognize his own error. It has frequently happened in the past that the Executive of this Nation, voicing the sympathy and the hope of many thousands of our people, has conveyed to foreign countries an expression of the sentiments and the sympathy of the American people.

It was done by President Grant, in 1869, in behalf of Irish political prisoners; by Mr. Seward, as Secretary of State, in 1867, in behalf of clemency for Maximilian; by Mr. Jefferson, who, as Secretary of State, in 1793, urged the French Government to release Gen. Lafayette from imprisonment; and throughout the long line of Presidents and Secretaries of State scarcely an administration has come without some appeal in the name of humanity being conveyed by the Washington Government to some foreign power.

A Senator thought he found in this incident a parallel in the case of Mrs. Surratt; and he inquired what impression would be produced upon the American Government if, in 1865, Great Britain had respectfully asked the American Government to extend clemency to Mrs. Surratt. It might not have accomplished its purpose; but, at least, it would have checked the wrong, the injustice, the horrible crime of taking the life of an innocent woman at a time when this Government was not overzealous in respecting those rights of personal liberty which, except in war time, have so distinguished the laws and the government of this country since its inception. Is there an American to-day who attempts to vindicate the hanging of Mrs. Surratt? Is it not the universal judgment of the country that a cruel and unspeakable injustice was inflicted in time of terror upon an innocent woman? And if Great Britain or France or Germany at that time had sought to intercede to save the life of Mrs. Surratt, we Americans of this generation, at least, would be grateful for the intercession, for it might have spared the writing of one of the saddest pages in the annals of the Civil War or the period immediately succeeding.

I rose chiefly, Mr. President, however, to say a word regarding an observation made by my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and seconded, in a measure, by the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. During the discussion, reference being made to the War of Independence, the statement was made by the junior Senator from California [Mr. PHILLAN] that 50 per cent of the Continental soldiers were of Irish birth or Irish extraction, and, while the accuracy of the statement was not openly disputed, there was an implication of doubt in the remarks of the two Senators to whom I have referred, because one Senator asked, if it be accepted as a fact that 50 per cent of the Continental troops were Irish, and if the Germans and the Poles and the French were given the credit which is claimed in their behalf, were there any Americans fighting in the Continental Army?

Well, just what he meant by "Americans" may be a question, considering the sense in which he used the word. If he meant real Americans, there were none of them fighting in the Continental Army. They were in the employ of the British Army, receiving rewards for the use of the tomahawk and the scalping knife in trying to suppress the patriotic aspirations of an outraged people. If you mean by the American of that period the immigrant of English ancestry, the record shows that four-fifths of all the inhabitants of America during the Continental period boasting English ancestry remained loyalists, and were the Tories of that period.

Mr. President, in the third year of the War of Independence a parliamentary inquiry was instituted by the Government of Great Britain, and among the witnesses called on the 16th of June, 1779, before this committee sitting in London was Joseph Galloway, who was a native of this country, and who stated:

I have lived in America from my nativity to the month of October last, about 48 years. * * * I have lived in the Province of Maryland, in the Delaware Counties, and in the Province of Pennsylvania, chiefly in Philadelphia. My public profession was that of the law. I practiced in all the courts of Pennsylvania, in those of the Delaware Counties, and in the Supreme Courts of New Jersey. I was a member of the Assembly of Pennsylvania 18 years; speaker of the house 12. I was appointed by the assembly of that Province to attend the American Congress, which met on the 5th of September, 1774. During the last war, under an appointment of the same assembly, I was one of the commissioners for disposing of the money granted to the Crown, and have been several times a commissioner to treat with the Indians.

I speak of his antecedents to show his respectability, although he became a Tory. In his testimony he was asked this question, which I know will be of interest to some of the Members of this body:

Q. (By one of the committee.) That part of the rebel army that enlisted in the service of the Congress, were they chiefly composed of natives of America, or were the greatest part of them English, Scotch, and Irish?

And Mr. Galloway answered:

A. The names and places of their nativity being taken down, I can answer the question with precision: There were scarcely one-fourth natives of America; about one-half Irish, the other fourth were English and Scotch.

Mr. President, I venture to submit that this authority can not very well be impeached. The book from which I read is: "The Examination of Joseph Galloway, Esq., late Speaker of the House of Assembly of Pennsylvania, before the House of Commons, in a committee on the American Papers," published in London in 1779, and this book is accessible in the Library. Plowden, the historian, in his History of Ireland, published in 1809, said:

It is a fact beyond question that most of the early successes in America were immediately owing to the vigorous exertions and prowess of the Irish immigrants who bore arms in that cause.

The Marquis de Chastellux, a Frenchman who spent some time in America in 1782, wrote:

An Irishman the instant he sets foot on American soil becomes ipso facto an American. This was uniformly the case during the whole of the late war. While Englishmen and Scotchmen were treated with jealousy and distrust, even with the best recommendations of zeal and attachment to the cause, the native of Ireland stood in need of no other certificate than his dialect. Indeed, their conduct in the late war amply justified their favorable opinion, for whilst the Irish emigrant was fighting the battles of America by sea and land, the Irish merchants, principally of Charleston, Baltimore, and Philadelphia, labored with indefatigable zeal at all hazards to promote the spirit of enterprise and increase the wealth and maintain the credit of the country. Their purses always were opened and their persons devoted to the country's cause, and on more than one eminent occasion Congress itself, and the very existence of America probably, owed its preservation to the fidelity and firmness of the Irish.

In 1828 George Washington Parke Custis, grandson of Martha Washington, in answer to an appeal from Ireland for funds in aid of the struggle for Catholic emancipation, wrote:

And why is this imposing appeal made to our sympathies? It is an appeal from that very Ireland whose generous sons, alike in the day of our gloom and of our glory, shared in our misfortunes and joined in our success; who, with undaunted courage breasted the storm which, once threatening to overwhelm us, howled with fearful and desolating fury through this now happy land; who with aspirations deep and fervent for our cause, whether under the walls of the Castle of Dublin, in the shock of our liberty's battles, or in the feeble expiring accents of famine and misery, amidst the horrors of the prison ships, cried from their hearts, "God save America." Tell me not of the aid which we received from another European nation in the struggle of independence; that aid was most, nay, all essential to our ultimate success, but remember, years of the conflict had rolled away. Of the operatives in war—I mean the soldier—up to the coming of the French Ireland had furnished in the ratio of 100 for 1 of any foreign nation whatever.

Then honored be the good old service of the sons of Erin in the War of Independence. Let the shamrock be entwined with the laurels of the Revolution, and truth and justice, guiding the pen of history, inscribe on the tablets of America's remembrance "Eternal gratitude to Irishmen."

Ramsey, the historian of North Carolina, writing in 1789, declared: "For the last 70 or 80 years no nation has contributed so much to the population of America as Ireland."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to him that in Lecky's History of the Eighteenth Century exactly what the Senator says is stated to be true. He states in that history that fully half of the Continental Line were Irishmen, mainly from the north of Ireland.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The statement of the Senator from Minnesota is largely accurate. It is open to revision, in my judgment, when he states that the Irish were mainly from the north of Ireland. I think it will be found that they were about equally divided, because for a hundred years before the American Revolution no people on earth were so cruelly persecuted as the Irish in the south of Ireland, and no people during that period had a greater incentive to leave their homes and hazard the dangers of the ocean and the seas that they might find an asylum in distant lands against the wrongs and tyranny that oppressed them in their own country.

One of my colleagues near by has just made an observation which did not escape me, in which he said, in substance, that if the statement of the Senator from Minnesota be correct, that they were north-of-Ireland Irishmen, then they were not Irish at all. By the same method of reasoning the Senator making that observation, although an ornament of the American Senate, is not an American, because he is Welsh, inasmuch as his grandfather or great-grandfather was a native of Wales. By his own rule the Senator is a Welshman and not an American. It is sometimes forgotten that the so-called Scottish element in the north of Ireland is as Irish as those in the south. Scotland was colonized by the native Irish, and after some centuries many of the descendants of the early colonists returned to Ireland, the home of their ancestors. Racially they are one people.

I might say in this connection, Mr. President, that the first general who fell in the struggle for American liberty was a native-born Irishman, Gen. Richard Montgomery. The first British ship captured in the war was captured by the son of an Irish immigrant in Machias Bay, Me.—Capt. Jeremiah O'Brien. The richest man in the American colonies—the man who imperiled more than any other man, not even excepting George Washington, when he embraced the patriotic cause—was the grandson of an Irish immigrant, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton.

John Hancock, President of the Continental Congress, was a descendant of a native of Ireland.

Charles Thompson, Secretary of the Congress, who made the first official copy of the Declaration, was born in Ireland.

John Nixon, member of the Pennsylvania Council, who first publicly read the Declaration from the steps of the statehouse in Philadelphia in 1776, was a son of Richard Nixon, a native of County Wexford, Ireland.

John Dunlap, who first printed the immortal document, was born in Strabane, County Tyrone, Ireland.

Among the signers of the Declaration, Thomas Smith and George Taylor, of Pennsylvania, were both natives of Ireland. Matthew Thornton, of New Hampshire; George Reed, of Delaware; Thomas McKean, of Delaware; Edward Rutledge, of South Carolina, were sons of natives of Ireland.

Among the generals who fought under Washington, Richard Montgomery, Thomas Conway, John Armstrong, William Thompson, Andrew Lewis, William Maxwell, William Irvine, Edward Hand, Richard Butler, Walter Stewart, and Stephen Moylan were natives of Ireland. Maj. Gen. John Sullivan, Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, Gen. Anthony Wayne, Brig. Gen. James Clinton, Brig. Gen. Joseph Reed, Brig. Gen. John Nixon, and John Stark, were sons of natives of Ireland.

When I look about this Senate, having in mind the rather equivocal significance attached to the word "American" as I thought it was used here a day or two ago, and when I see, representing great Commonwealths, able and patriotic Senators who were born on foreign soil, and when I see other able and distinguished Members of this body who are the sons of immigrants or, in some instances, the grandsons of immigrants, I can not help the reflection that all the power, that all the glory of this great experiment of government by the people is due to the blood, the intellect, the enterprise, the energy, and the patriotic devotion of men from many lands and many races. If there be one nation which might assert unquestionably the right to petition a foreign power to do an act of clemency in the name of justice and humanity, it is a country such as ours, whose population is made up of the peoples of all the earth and whose sympathies embrace the world.

Reverting to the suggestion that we might have taken offense at Great Britain if that Government interposed in behalf of Mrs. Surratt, it will be well to bear in mind this difference between the two countries: If there were any considerable number of Americans in Great Britain, the case would be more analogous to our own, because in this country, with many people formerly part of the British Empire, or whose ancestors were part of the British nation, there would seem to be an especial propriety in Great Britain listening, under all these circumstances, to a respectful appeal for clemency in the name of humanity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. STONE. Which is the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE].

Mr. STONE. In accordance with the statement I made earlier, I offer the resolution, which is also on the President's table, proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] at the same time the pending resolution was offered. I offer that as a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The substitute will be read.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Missouri offers the following:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to ask the British Government to exercise clemency in the treatment of Irish political prisoners.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this resolution, but I want to make a single suggestion along another line.

It has been stated over and over again in the Senate, and was repeated by the Senator from New York to-day, that it is "universally" conceded that Mrs. Surratt was an innocent woman, and that in those terrible times, when there was great excitement and very likely many things were done that ought not to have been done, a woman entirely innocent of the crime charged against her was executed.

Mr. President, I have been a reasonably attentive student of the history of the Civil War, and I have never yet discovered any evidence that satisfies my mind that the Government executed an innocent woman. I think it was an unfortunate circumstance, much to be deplored, beyond a doubt; but that the execution was without cause at that time has escaped my attention if it is a historical fact.

I make this observation for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that it is not universally conceded that Mrs. Surratt was an innocent woman, as I believe that she was cognizant of the crime charged against her and deserved punishment at the hands of the Government. The question as to the severity of the punishment is another matter, on which I do not propose to enter.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if I may speak with reference to the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri, as I remarked before, it is not regarding the question at issue at all; and if it is adopted it will be adopted as a substitute. It takes the place of the resolution which I had the honor to offer. My resolution appealed directly for a commutation of the sentence of Sir Roger Casement. The people of Ireland, I feel, are not asking clemency at the hands of the British people. They are simply asking justice.

I believe that Great Britain will grant that which satisfies best her own interests, and if her own interests are best subserved by the adoption of the course requested in my resolution she will commute the sentence; otherwise she will not.

If, as I understand it, this resolution is to take the place of mine, while I have as much clemency in my heart as any other Senator, I shall vote "nay" on the question of substituting it for my own.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not rise to take part in this debate further than to say that in our earnest advocacy of a cause we are sometimes apt to lose sight of the fact that there is another side to the controversy; and I can not help but think that the advocates of the resolutions now pending have lost sight of the circumstances attending the Sinn Féin revolt, for the participation in which Sir Roger Casement and others were arrested and have on trial been convicted.

But waiving all this, I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the resolutions. But, Mr. President, the question is as to how we may best accomplish the result. I think, as a means to that end, we may well express some interest and sympathy in at least one great question now confronting the Government of Great Britain, and that is the question of home rule for Ireland. I think an expression of interest and sympathy on the part of this body in the efforts of English statesmen and Irish statesmen and leaders as well to bring about home rule for Ireland would further the object sought to be accomplished by any such resolution, and would perhaps, through our manifestation of interest in this one problem, tend to procure clemency on the part of Great Britain.

Hence with this in view, I have somewhat hurriedly prepared here a resolution, which I offer as a substitute for the pending resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States, mindful alike of what it believes to be in the best interest of the Government of Great Britain, of the Irish people, and the cause of self-government throughout the world, has viewed with satisfaction the progress of late made toward the accomplishment of home rule for Ireland. That such home rule will not only be in accord with American traditions and ideals, but with the general practice of Great Britain for the greater part of a century. That while the Senate has viewed with concern and has deplored the loss of life and property resulting from the late so-called Sinn Féin revolt, it expresses the hope that clemency will be exercised by the Government of Great Britain toward all prisoners held or tried and convicted as a result of their participation in such revolt.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate this expression of the views of the Senate, through the Department of State, to the Government of Great Britain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the sting and the evil in the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] the other day, the international insult and offense contained in it, have been removed; and the resolution pending as a substitute can not be attacked upon that ground.

I am still of the opinion that for one nation, through one of its official bodies, to arraign the validity of the course of justice in the courts of another, as was proposed the other day by the Senator from New Jersey, is necessarily from its very nature offensive. I am of the opinion that even in a very extreme case, like that of Mrs. Surratt, cited by me, where the whole world recognizes now that there was a hasty and unjust conviction "after a so-called trial"—not a trial at common law but under martial law, and of a woman who had never been a part of the naval or armed forces of the United States—that even in an extreme case like that a criticism by the House of Commons of Great Britain arraigning and denouncing the course pursued by the Federal Government would have been offensive and insulting. Nobody has ever said that a resolution passed by the House of Commons, or signed by members of the House of Commons, respectfully asking mercy in a case of that sort was without precedent. If I am not mistaken, the House of Representatives at one time passed some resolution concerning Kossuth, the Hungarian—though I am not quite sure; I think so—appealing to Austria for clemency.

Mr. President, I did not rise, however, to talk about that. I rose to talk about another thing. The Senator from New York has indulged in one of those truly amusing racial outbursts which so frequently occur in the United States. I was not long ago reading a book, the name of the author I have just at this moment forgotten, but it is a leading book, having the title "The Germans in America." Therein the author proves without absolute finality, according to his method of procedure, that 40,000,000 of the American people are Germans or of German descent. I have seen accounts showing that about that number were Irish. I have also seen accounts showing that some 15,000,000 were Scandinavian, and so on until when you get through with it, without counting a single English, Scotch, or Welsh derived man upon the continent of the United States, you have about 115,000,000 population that are Germans, Irish, Scandinavians, Polacks, Russian Jews, or something else.

Now, I will tell you how it comes about. An immigrant comes over here of Irish derivation, and one of his daughters marries a Mr. Smith, who has been living here a long time; whereupon the Irish put Smith's children down as "Irish-Americans." Then the oldest boy of Smith, still named Smith, marries a German; whereupon the Germans and Irish both put down the second Smith's son as a German-American and as an Irish-American—thus he is counted twice, although he is not twins. The next generation one of the family marries an American Polack, whereupon this third man belongs to all three, and is counted three times, although not triplets. Meanwhile, the English-derived Smith—poor, old, unhyphenated fellow—has been completely forgotten and left entirely out of account. That is about the way it occurs.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the people who came from Ireland or to the people who came from Germany or to the people who came, like the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], from Norway, or the gentlemen who came from Sweden or anywhere else. As the Senator from New York has said, the only truly native American is the North American Indian. We are all derived from somebody who came from somewhere in Europe except this native American.

The Senator made a little mistake about my great grandfather coming from Wales; it was his grandfather; but that just throws it all a little further back along the tide of time and makes very little difference. However, I do object to his saying that the Welsh and the English and the Scotch have had nothing to do with the building up of this country. As to the Scotch-Irish, what I said to him is true. They are not racially Irish. For 300 years they were engaged in murdering Irishmen and outraging their women, and the Irish for 300 years were engaged in reciprocating.

Yet every Scotch-Irish man in America is claimed as an Irishman. The Irish are just as good as the Scotch-Irish—every bit—but they are not racially the same stock; they are of Scotch and English racial derivation, settled as colonists in the north of Ireland.

Some time ago I picked up a book which undertook to prove that the success of the American Revolution was entirely due to the Scotch-Irish, not to the Welsh, nor English, nor Scotch, not even to the Irish, but the Scotch-Irish, who mainly came from the lowlands of Scotland and went over to Ireland as conquerors and oppressors, and were then, as they are now, the greatest enemies that the Irish race have, while the Irish, upon the other hand, are the greatest enemies that they have to-day, as they have been for hundreds of years, with a blood feud almost always formerly existing between them, striking away back to the days of Elizabeth and Cromwell. Many of the so-called Scotch-Irish are not Scotch at all, but were English who came over under Elizabeth—some even under Henry VII—and came over with pretty much the same view as the Cromwellians did—of robbing and exploiting the native Irish, which they proceeded to do. The native Irish, under Charles I, having an opportunity to return the compliment, returned it in full measure.

Those of us who are of English and Welsh and Scotch descent have as much right to be proud of our European derivation as any German-American or Irish-American in America. Yet when we speak of it somebody immediately suggests that we are more or less Tories, or, from the mere reference to it, at any rate, very near to being Know-Nothings.

Mr. President, just think a minute. This claim that over 50 per cent of the patriots in the American Revolution were Irish comes upon me rather unexpectedly. I have not time to run it back exhaustively; but in New England Hancock, Otis, the Adamsses, Gens. Warren and Putnam, all those men whose names are household terms, were of English derivation.

In Virginia the Washingtons, the Lees, the Masons, and all that numerous host of men who made the Old Dominion then, as it was during the Civil War and as it is now, one of the greatest Commonwealths that ever existed were of English derivation. The Randolphs were Scotch of the Scotch. Thomas Jefferson and Gen. Daniel Morgan were Welsh of the Welsh. Gens. Lincoln and Greene were of English derivation; Nash of North Carolina and Davidson of North Carolina, one of them Scotch, the other English. Col. James Williams, who laid down his life at the foot of Kings Mountain, was also of Welsh derivation, and Col. John Sevier, from Tennessee, who did more than anybody else to win the Battle of Kings Mountain, was of French Huguenot extraction. Isaac Shelby was not an Irishman. He brought to Kings Mountain the hardy Kentucky or, as it was then called, the Southwest Virginia contingent. Francis Marion, of South Carolina, was of French Huguenot extraction. Col. Hamilton, a brave officer leading one wing of our Army at Yorktown and who afterwards became better known as Alexander Hamilton, the father of the Treasury system of the United States, was Scotch, and Col. Monroe, and a host of them that a man might name, had not a drop of Irish blood in his veins, so far as I know or have ever heard. I doubt if 5 per cent of the population of America at the time of the American Revolution were of Celtic Irish birth or racial extraction. Mr. Galloway, whose testimony before Parliament was cited, either lied or was very ignorant.

Now, let every man, whose ancestors came from Ireland or from Germany or from Scandinavia, make due praise to those from whose loins more or less remotely he is derived, but I for one am not going to forget that the Welsh in America—and, by the way, there are no Welsh-Americans; they either remain British subjects or they become American citizens—the Welsh in America have furnished some of the artists, some of the poets, some of the statesmen, and some of the soldiers of this great Republic. If along the line remotely one of them intermarried with a German or an Irishman later on they did not cease to be half Welsh, and if the son of that union married with one of some other race they did not cease to remain half Welsh.

This America of ours is a great melting pot. The man who first used that phrase invented a phrase that fits the situation to a nicety. Everything is thrown in here, boiled together commercially and politically, and out of it comes that great composite result, the American citizen.

Here I stand of Welsh derivation. Behind me is a gentleman of Irish derivation; not very far from me is one of English, and a bit farther one of Scotch derivation. I daresay either one of us is as good an American as the other, provided that down in the bottom of our hearts we do not recognize anything else in the world as superior to Americanism in its call on us. And if we do, then every man who does it, whether Scotchman, Irishman, Dane, or Saxon, or what not, though he may be otherwise the best man upon the American Continent, is disloyal to America, disloyal to the land of his adoption—he ought to go back to the country whence he or his ancestors came.

Here comes a boy who joins the United States Army. His original derivation is Norway. He makes a good soldier. His people honor him afterwards in many, many ways. He now sits among us in this august body. I dare say that the Searcher of Hearts, who can look down into him, will find that the time has long since passed when he thought he owed any allegiance to Norway or any love or service that approximated even, much less exceeded, that which he owes to his adopted country.

I am getting a little bit tired of hyphenated Americans. Let a man remain a British subject or become an American citizen; let him remain a French citizen or become an American citizen; let him remain a subject of the Czar of Russia or become an American citizen; but let him not come here with allegiance to his native country or with the enmities and hates transplanted across the Atlantic to inject them, whether sentiments or enmities, into American politics and poison its body politic.

Of the two the man who allows his sentiment and his affection for the Government of his native land to control and direct his action here in relation to foreign affairs or in relation to domestic affairs, even in the drawing of a tariff bill or anything else—the man who allows his sentiment and the warmth of his heart to mislead him stands on an infinitely higher plane than the man who allows hate and enmity to misguide him.

If the Russian Jew comes to America, oppressed as he has been through years and years, let him leave behind him upon the shores of Europe the hatred and the enmity that have been passed down from generation to generation; or if he can not but feel it in his own heart, as, perhaps, he can not, let him at any rate make up his mind that that shall not influence his conduct as an American citizen or an American voter. Let the Pole or Alsatian from Germany, the Irishman from the British Empire, do the same thing.

I tell you now—and it is for this purpose mainly that I have sought the floor—if any man or set of men or coterie of men, however numerous they may be, shall enter into American politics for the purpose of accomplishing a European racial or governmental result, for the purpose of influencing American domestic affairs or foreign relations, so that they may be shaped and molded to suit some foreign power or to insult and hurt some foreign power—the two things mean the same—either he or they will hear from the American people.

No movement has ever taken place in this country yet for the purpose of emphasizing a European desire or a European hate, under whatsoever hyphenated or other name, that the American people have not visited upon the authors of it and the organizers of it their punishment at the polls, and they will do it again.

If any man hopes in this campaign to have tied to him, however many votes there may be, some organization whose purpose is to further some European Government's wish or want or policy or interest, or the hatred of some European people for some European Government whose subjects they have been, then I say before this campaign is over that that candidate will be praying to God, "Remove from me, O God, this body of death," for it will be like the punishment meted out in the olden time to certain criminals. It was to carry around with them on their backs the victim while the victim rotted, and the prayer of the punished man was "Remove from me, O God, this body of death."

Now, we are all Americans. We all say it; let us all be it. Who cares whether the ancestors of the O'Gorman family were Irish or whether the ancestors of the Williams family were Welsh, or whether the ancestors of the Hokes and the Smiths were English, or whether the Fletchers were English, or whether the ancestors of the Owens were Welsh? Who cares, provided you do your duty as American citizens?

If you are proud of the bards of Wales and of the sweet singers of Ireland, or, if you come from Germany, of Goethe, Schiller, and Lessing, or, if you come from France, of Racine and La Fontaine and Molière and Béranger, or, if they have come from England, if they be proud of that galaxy of English literary lights that has never been equaled in ancient or modern times by any people who ever existed, then be proud of them, and of the race which produced them. The world has had but one Shakespeare, it has had but one Milton, it has had but one Tennyson, it has had but one Chaucer, and in the world of science it has not had many men like Darwin and Huxley and Tyndall and Newton and Herschel, and men like that.

In warfare it has not had very many men—though it has had some—far superior to Prince Hal and the Duke of Marlborough and the Duke of Wellington, or their descendants in America, Greene and Lincoln and old Daniel Morgan. Let the Irish be proud of Moore, the sweet singer, of Burke, the prince of philosophers and orators, but unless they are very ignorant they will not forget and can not despise that galaxy of Englishmen, nor Scottish Burns, nor Sir Walter Scott, nor that American muniments of liberty and American law were born in Great Britain.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one moment, if you please. Let us boast about them, if you please, let us take a loving interest in what they have contributed to literature and law and commerce and the sciences, and in the battles for freedom which have taken place in the world, but let us not forget that in this great melting pot we have turned out a composite citizen who is the equal if not the superior of those from whose various loins he has been derived.

Mr. OWEN. I appeal to the Senator to allow the Senate to dispose of the question. We have only a short time left before 12 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was just about to sit down, but I do not quite appreciate the courtesy of the appeal.

Mr. OWEN. I think the Senate is entitled to some courtesy in the transaction of its business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the Senate is entitled to some and each Senator is entitled to some, and this particular Senator has consumed very little time lately, and this is a matter of about as much importance as almost anything else. It is of great importance to the cause of Americanism and a broad spirit of patriotism in which Americans shall not be divided in America by racial lines. Nothing worse could happen to the American Republic than to have political parties and factions founded upon the European racial derivation of the men who compose it.

Now I am through, Mr. President.

Since making the above remarks in the Senate I have undertaken to ascertain as nearly as possible what the percentage of English, Scotch, and Irish were in the Colonies at the time of the first census—1790—soon after the Revolution. The Welsh are, I think, included in the table with the English; the Scotch-Irish with the Scotch. I obtained the figures from page 116 of a publication of the Census Bureau entitled "A Century of Population Growth, 1790 to 1900." The totals were compiled in 1909 from the census of 1790, by the classification of the population enumerated in 1790 according to their names. Some Scotch and some Irish may have been mistaken for one another because of the "Mac," which is common to both the Highlanders of Scotland and to the Celtic Irish. As the report says, such classification is obviously in the nature of connection by blood, or what may be termed "nationality strain." The census of 1790 itself did not contain amongst the questions asked of those who were enumerated what was the place of their birth or of their parents' birth.

Taking what were then the two main sections most active in the Revolution, I quote: "Virginia, settled by the British in 1609, had at the first census but 6 per cent non-English population, and of these 5 per cent were what are known as 'Valley Dutch'—that is, Germans who had emigrated, through Maryland, from Pennsylvania." "New England was almost as English as old England, the lowest proportion, 93.1 per cent, being in Maine, and the highest, 96.2, in Rhode Island."

I find that the percentage of Irish population in each Colony was as follows: In Maine, 1.4 per cent; New Hampshire, 1 per cent; Vermont, seven-tenths of 1 per cent; Rhode Island and Connecticut, each seven-tenths of 1 per cent; Massachusetts, 1 per cent; New York, eight-tenths of 1 per cent; Pennsylvania, 2 per cent; Maryland, 2.4 per cent. Maryland was a Catholic Colony, and the comparatively large percentage of people of Irish racial stock is accounted for there because of that fact. Virginia, 2 per cent; North Carolina, 2.3 per cent; South Carolina, 2.6 per cent.

The German population, although it was less in most of the Colonies, especially in New England, than the Irish, was so large in a few of the Colonies that the average almost equaled that of the Irish. The percentage of Germans in Pennsylvania being 26.1 per cent; Maryland, 5.9 per cent; in Virginia, 4.9 per cent; in North Carolina, 2.8 per cent. In the Colonies named nearly all the Germans in America lived.

The percentages of the total population which the English constituted were in Maine, 93.1 per cent; New Hampshire, 94.1 per cent; Vermont, 95.4 per cent; Massachusetts, 95 per cent; Rhode Island, 96 per cent; Connecticut, 96.2 per cent; and in New York, even, which had only recently ceased to be a Dutch colony—although there had been a heavy inflow of population to parts of the colony from New England even while it was a Dutch colony—the percentage of English stock in 1790 by the table is 78.2 per cent. In Maryland it was 84 per cent; in Virginia, 85 per cent; North Carolina, 83.1 per cent; and in South Carolina, 82.4 per cent. The smallest percentage of English population in any colony was in Pennsylvania, where they constituted only 59 per cent; still, even there, considerably over half.

The percentages of Scotch were in Maine, 4.3 per cent; in New Hampshire, 4.7 per cent; in Vermont, 3 per cent; in Massachusetts, 3.6 per cent; Rhode Island, 3.1 per cent; Connecticut, 2.8 per cent; New York, 3.2 per cent; Pennsylvania, 11.7 per cent;

Maryland, 6.5 per cent; Virginia, 7.1 per cent; North Carolina, 11.2 per cent; and South Carolina, 11.7 per cent.

It seems, therefore, if all of the Scotch enumerated in the census of 1790 were counted as Scotch-Irish, and the Scotch-Irish were all counted as Irish, and the Irish and Scotch added together, that the total number of all—Irish-Scotch and Scotch-Irish—would be less than 10 per cent of the total population. The Irish themselves, as may be readily seen by the figures, did not average 2 per cent of the entire population. Of course, the Irishman fought in the American armies during the Revolution; he fought well, as he always fights; but with less than 2 per cent of the entire population he could not have constituted over 50 per cent of the armed forces of the united Colonies. It is equally incredible that the English and Welsh derived Americans constituting 83½ per cent of the total population could have furnished so few as one-fourth of the Revolutionary armies. Of course, very many of the Scotch, in fact, most of them, were Lowland Scotch, the most thoroughly Teutonic population in all Great Britain, because the Danes kept coming to southern Scotland and northern England long after they had quit their invasions elsewhere.

With the permission of the Senate I have added these figures and this analysis of them to the remarks which I made in the Senate in confirmation of what I said about the small percentage of Colonial population that the Irish constituted, because taken by surprise at the time I did not have the figures before me and was not able to get them until after I had concluded my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS subsequently said: Mr. President, I made some remarks in debate this morning concerning the percentage of racial stocks in the United States at the time of the Revolution. I did not have the figures before me then. I rise now for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by placing at the end of them certain figures derived from tables given on page 116 of a census special report, entitled "A century of population growth in the United States from 1790 to 1900," which figures, I think, will support one of the statements that I made this morning, together with an analysis of the figures and a statement of their bearing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] being granted; but I take advantage of this opportunity to say that the tables which he offers to read into the Record are entirely untrustworthy. The official who prepared them states, and states in the article which precedes the tables, that in 1790 and in previous years no census was taken of the inhabitants of this country; but that recently some employees in the Census Department undertook to create a census for 1790, and adopted a method of classification according to names. The name of the head of a family was interpreted by the employee as belonging to one nationality or another.

Of course, according to that method of classification some names prominent in recent Irish politics would undoubtedly be put under the list of English. For instance, Mr. Pearse, who was the provisional president of the Irish republic, would undoubtedly be put down in that list as English. Mr. Sheehy Skeffington, who was an editor in Dublin, and who was shot down without a trial (the military officer who was responsible for his death escaping responsibility upon the plea that he was insane at the time of the killing of Mr. Skeffington and two other editors), and Mr. Clarke, who held a conspicuous position in the recent insurrection in Ireland, would be put down as English. Sir Roger Casement, of course, would be put down as English. Mr. Redmond, the leader of the Irish Parliamentary Party, would be put down as English. So also would Mr. Parnell, who for so many years was the leader of Irish thought. Lord Kitchener would be put down as English.

With these observations, I doubt whether much attention should be paid to this experimental creation of a census a hundred years after the time indicated.

Even according to the figures given—it is stated that there were upward of 60,000 Irish in the colonies, and upon the theory that nearly every Irishman took part in the struggle and that no Irishmen were found among the loyalists or the Tories—even the introduction of these tables will not be found inconsistent with some observations that I had the honor of making this morning.

To illustrate the utter unreliability of the classification employed, it should be remembered that many Irish immigrants bore English names imposed upon them by British statutes which required the inhabitants of certain sections of Ireland to take "an English surname of one town, as Sutton, Chester, Cooke, Kinsale; or color, as White, Black, Brown; or art or science, as Smith or Carpenter; or office, as Cooke or Butler."

It should also be remembered that Gen. Washington at no time during the War for Independence had an army under his command exceeding 15,000. When he was at Valley Forge his army was reduced to 3,000. The Senator from Mississippi intimated that perhaps I was in error when I said that the compiler of those statistics fixed the number of Irish inhabitants in 1790 at 60,000. If he will look two pages beyond the page which he desires to put in the Record, he will see the statement to which I have referred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not intimate that. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. O'GORMAN. But the statement is found even in that paper.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one word more, and I am through. I merely wish to state what the tables are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to know what is before the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as I understand, this special report was drawn up in 1850. It is an analysis of the census of 1790 made by employees of the Census Bureau. Of course it is worth just what it is worth. I ask to publish the figures, together with an analysis of them and the statement of the nature of the report at the end of my remarks this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. STONE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a very few minutes. Preliminary to what I wish to say, however, I desire to move that the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], the amendment thereto offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and the substitute for both of those resolutions which has been offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. President, the original resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. I am a member of that committee, and I know that it was the sentiment of the members of that committee that the subject matter of the resolution was of such very grave importance and of so delicate a character, involving, as we believed, matters of such grave international importance that it ought not to be reported out, and we voted accordingly. Later a motion was made to discharge that committee from the further consideration of the resolution, and in the course of the discussion of that motion it developed that the resolution itself was offensive in character, and it was withdrawn by the proponent of the resolution.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, may I simply state that the resolution was not withdrawn, because I felt that it was in ill taste or untrue. I withdrew it because I felt that perhaps I could not get it through the Senate; in fact, I saw that I could not get it through the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not particularly concerned about that at this moment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, I am.

Mr. POMERENE. Suffice it to say, that two other resolutions bearing upon the same subject matter were presented to the Senate. Those resolutions are now under discussion, and the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] offers another resolution, broader in its scope. All of these resolutions affect, and affect seriously, the foreign relations of the great American Republic.

My sympathies in this matter go out not only to Sir Roger Casement, but they go out to the hundreds of thousands of Irishmen who are under the British flag in the trenches. Aye, more, my sympathies go out to every Frenchman, to every German, to every Russian, to every Austrian, to every Italian—aye, to every soldier who is in the trenches, whatever his nationality, creed, or color.

I wish that it were within my power to draw a veil over that European contest and to blot it out from the memory of the human race.

I can not do that; but let me suggest to Senators that there are brought up here for consideration and disposition by the United States Senate this morning three resolutions, grave in character, involving the foreign relations of this Government; and since when has the Foreign Relations Committee determined that it is not going to further consider matters of this character, but is going to let them be proposed and disposed of on the floor of the United States Senate, without any consideration or any recommendation by any member of the committee, at least not by the members of that committee in formal session?

Mr. President, does any member of the Foreign Relations Committee or any Member of the United States Senate know what the attitude of the State Department of this Government is with respect to this subject? I care not, for the sake of the argument, whether you are for or against this resolution, or any of them. I care not whether you are willing to abide by the judgment of the State Department or not. That is neither here nor there; but it does seem to me that the United States Senate owes it to the State Department, which is charged with responsibility for our foreign affairs, to at least get the opinion of the State Department with respect to these resolutions before taking final action. Have Senators studied each of these several resolutions so as to be able to satisfy themselves that they are going to assume the risk of so involving this Government in its relations with foreign nations that we are going to ignore the judgment of the committee which was specially organized for the purpose of giving careful consideration to these matters?

I have been a Member of this Senate now for five years and a little more, and this is the first instance in my short experience in which it has been attempted to take up a matter of this character—which may or may not be grave—and to dispose of it without reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so that we may have a hearing, if that be thought advisable, and may have the judgment, at least, of that committee.

For myself, I have conferred incidentally with one or two Senators on this side of the Chamber and with one or two Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I may have views—they may be mature, or they may not be—as to what disposition we ought to make of these resolutions; but I do know that in matters of this character, as well as in other matters, I have very often changed my preconceived notions; and I may do that now after we have considered this subject and discussed it around the committee table.

But I beg of Senators not to permit themselves to be carried away by any emotion, by any special sympathy that they may have for one man or for another; but let us deliberate upon this matter as becomes Senators, and let these resolutions take their usual course through the committee. Then, after they are voted out, or after the committee has had time to consider them, let the Senate determine what ought to be done.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I understand the question now before the Senate to be the resolution proposed by the Senator from New Jersey—

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the question is—

Mr. STONE. Well, let me state it. Perhaps I am not stating it exactly correct; but the situation, let me say, of the matter before the Senate is this: The Senator from New Jersey calls up the resolution he offered on a former day. To that is presented a resolution proposed on the same general subject by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] as a substitute; and the immediate question would be upon the substitute. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] now proposes, by way of amendment to the substitute, the resolution which he has sent to the desk. It seems to me that, in view of this latter resolution offered by the Senator from South Dakota, which very much broadens both the other resolutions pending—and in view of that situation I rose to address the Chair simultaneously with the Senator from Ohio with a view to making the motion which he made—I think in the circumstances now that the whole question had best be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The committee meets to-morrow morning. I do not know what the committee will do; but, so far as I am individually concerned, I shall favor reporting one resolution or the other of these resolutions, or a resolution by way of a substitute, on behalf of the committee.

As the matter has been discussed here so much and has been brought up in the manner in which it has, I am of the opinion that it should be disposed of by the Senate. Really if the matter was resting here upon the two resolutions, the one offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and the other offered by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], I could see no reason why, since one resolution on the subject has already been referred to the Foreign Relations Committee, the matter might not as well be acted upon; but the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], by his resolution, has broadened this inquiry or this consideration, and I think, with the Senator from Ohio, that the whole matter had better go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so that that committee may consider it to-morrow morning and take some action upon it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I say that that course is entirely agreeable to me. I consent that the resolutions go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Great Britain seems to dictate terms to the Senate. She dictated terms in connection with the Panama Canal; she rifles our mails and violates all the principles of international law, she blacklists our merchants and manufacturers, and I think we are now helplessly waiting for the next thing to come.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I decline to make any reply to that observation; it is hardly worthy of one. I hope the motion to refer may be submitted to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to refer all the resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, heartily as I am in favor of the sentiment contained in either one of the two resolutions, the one introduced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and the other introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], I recognize the strength of the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], supplemented by the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. STONE]. If we had to choose between the resolution proposed by the Senator from New Jersey and the resolution proposed by the Senator from California our task would be an easy one; but the situation becomes more or less complicated by the introduction of the third resolution offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]; and in view of those circumstances I think the wiser course is to have all of these resolutions go before the Committee on Foreign Relations to-morrow morning. As one of that committee, I am quite confident in stating that there will be no delay in a formal report being presented by the committee with respect to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to refer the resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDRESS BY CONTINENTAL CONGRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF IRELAND.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate a remarkable document, which has never heretofore been published and to ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD. It is a copy of an address to the people of Ireland by the Continental Congress of America, making an appeal to the Irish Parliament in Dublin, dated Philadelphia, July 28, 1775, and signed by the immortal John Hancock.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well; I shall not object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter presented by the Senator from New Jersey will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13391.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section.

Mr. OWEN. The amendments of the Senate committee have all been read and agreed to, with the exception of one additional amendment which I desire to present to the Senate. The amendment is on page 20, and I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to it. I move to insert, in line 8, after the word "branch," the words "in either case referred to in this section," so as to preclude the possibility of misunderstanding that the limitations of the section apply to both cities and counties in the case of branch banks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the original bill, on page 19, line 3, after the words "that no such branch," insert "in either case referred to in this section."

Mr. OWEN. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he received a brief note from me inclosing a memorandum regarding the pending bill?

Mr. OWEN. I will reply to the Senator that I did, and that every item referred to in the memorandum has been included in the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the question I was going to propound to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; and I so advised the Senator yesterday in writing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much gratified to get that information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, when the Senator from Oklahoma has exhausted his amendments and yields the floor I wish to make some remarks on this bill.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator now.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I noted the other day when this bill was under consideration that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] criticized the haste with which it was being considered and suggested that the Senate should have further information on the subject. This whole legislation, while it is based on sound principles, is in some degree experimental, because it is necessary to adjust it and adapt it to the special and peculiar conditions which exist in this country. We could not take the system of any other country, however well it was working there, and apply it directly to our particular conditions. Therefore when this legislation was originally adopted there was no one, no banker and no legislator, wise enough to know exactly whether it was going to be right or wrong in every particular; and no one contended that it would not be necessary from time to time to make such changes as the experience obtained under the operation of the law determined as desirable.

We have a Federal Reserve Board, which has been serving now for very nearly two years. Five of its members are removed from any political considerations. They may be called experts on this subject at this time, I think, without any stretch of facts. I objected at the time the original bill was passed—and the objection has been proven to have been entirely valid—to members of the administration being a part of this board. I think it has hindered the operations of the law. I think it has prevented State banks from coming into the system, and I regret that the action of the Senate was not followed at that time. But there are five members of the board who have been giving their time to this subject intelligently, and I think they have come to certain conclusions relating to it which should be followed.

There is not any Member of the Senate and there is not any man who has not been connected with the operation of this law who can pass on many of the details which are proposed in these amendments and do so intelligently, because it has required a year or two years' experience to bring to the attention of the board those facts which have justified them in suggesting the changes on which we are about to act.

I say this, Mr. President, because we are not indulging in haste in adopting these amendments. We are following the best and, in fact, the only experts on this subject that we have in this country. It must be remembered that these members of the board not only have their own experience to fall back on but they have also the judgment of the advisory board, which is made up of some of the best bankers of the country; and, more than that, they have the advice, solicited or otherwise, of all bankers. So that in this case we are getting expert opinion—an opinion which, I think, unless there is some palpable reason to the contrary, should be followed in such amendments as are proposed here in this bill.

With the exception of those amendments which are proposed on pages 18 and 19 of the bill which is before me, and which relate to branch banks, I think there is every reason for permitting the establishment of branch banks by national banks or by member banks in those States where the State laws permit similar action to be taken by State banks or trust companies. We have got to broaden the field of national banks or else there will be a lessening of the number of member banks instead of an increase of the number. One of the fields in which they can not successfully compete with State banks is in those States where the State banks have the right to establish branches in the municipality where the parent bank is authorized to do business; and this is what I want to bring to the attention of those Members of the Senate who are honoring me by listening.

We have built up in this country an independent banking system, and that is one of the reasons which has given us such good results in a banking way in the past. We have not countenanced branch banks. This proposition, or at least the second paragraph of it, proposes to permit the establishment of branch banks not only in the municipality where the parent bank is chartered to do business but within a radius of 25 miles of that center. In other words, if it is logical to establish branch banks outside of the municipality where the parent bank is doing business for a distance of 25 miles, it is logical to carry the branch 50 miles or 100 miles, and we would have a general system of branch banking in this country.

Let me take the locality where I live. There are a million and a half people within 25 miles of the center of the city of Boston; perhaps very nearly 2,000,000 people. There are four counties within that radius. The large Boston banks are those which, if this proposal were to become a law, could establish branches in no less than 20 different cities where banks are now being operated. It would provide a competition to those local banks under which, in my judgment, they could not survive. It would be a serious mistake for us to permit the establishment of branch banks beyond the bounds of the municipality where the parent bank is chartered to do business.

I do not know of any State which now gives the right to State banks or trust companies to do business outside of the municipality where the parent bank is located. Therefore there is no reason for the second paragraph of this amendment other than to gradually drift into a branch banking system. It is of so much importance that I wish every Senator could give the matter consideration.

I am in agreement with the original provisions of this bill. I am in agreement with the provision which enables member banks to establish branches in the municipalities where they are operating, in States where the State laws make similar provision. But when we go beyond that there is no logical stopping place except branch banks all over the United States.

This is not asked for by anyone. I do not know a banker or anyone else conversant with banking matters who has asked Congress to pass that kind of legislation. I do know that there have been protests against it from all sections of the country; and if the banking fraternity and business men generally knew the step that we were taking in that respect there would be a protest so loud that the proposal would not be given any consideration whatever.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am going to move to strike out that portion of the bill—the bill which I have before me is, I think, the last print—commencing on line 21, page 18, down to and including line 10, on page 19, and the amendments which have been adopted. The Senator from Minnesota calls my attention to the last print of the bill, in which the amendment would be, on page 20, all from line 1 to line 19, inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the original bill it is proposed to strike out all included between line 21, on page 18, and line 10, on page 19.

Mr. WEEKS. In the last print of the bill, which has been handed me, I think—

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have the Senator use the last print of the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. It is on page 20.

Mr. OWEN. What is the motion?

Mr. WEEKS. The motion is to strike out all from the first word in line 1 to the word "bank," in line 19.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary can not use anything but the original bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Then, Mr. President, my motion stands as originally stated.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same provision, however, that appears on page 20.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Would not the effect of the last part of this amendment—the part that the Senator moves to strike out—be to drive the small State banks out of business in the various counties, especially in the agricultural districts?

Mr. WEEKS. Why, Mr. President, undoubtedly it would drive small banks out of business. Take the territory to which I have referred: There are probably 100 to 200 independent banks of comparatively small capital operating in those municipalities. If I wanted to serve one of the great banks of Boston to the detriment of an independent banking system, I would be in favor of this amendment, because they, with their large capital, can very easily go into the surrounding towns like Cambridge and Somerville and Newton and Brookline and establish branches, and undoubtedly compete successfully with the small independent banks that are located there, many of which are State banks.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. REED. As I understand the bill in its present form—that is, as amended by the committee—it is provided, on page 20, that no branch "shall be established outside of its State or of its Federal reserve district, or in any State whose statutes do not specifically authorize branches for banks having State charters." Now, I thought that safeguarded all those States against the very evil the Senator suggests, except the States that have voluntarily permitted State banks to maintain branches.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Missouri is correct.

Mr. WEEKS. No; the Senator is wrong about that. If he will turn back to page 19 of the print which he has in his hand, he will find there a provision for branch banks within the municipality where the parent bank is doing business.

Mr. REED. What section is it?

Mr. WEEKS. That is in section 25a. Then, if the Senator will turn to the next page, he will find that if the provision on that page becomes a law a parent bank may establish a branch within 25 miles of the location of the parent bank.

Mr. OWEN. Only in those States which permit the State banks to do that.

Mr. WEEKS. That is quite true.

Mr. OWEN. It is to put national banks upon a parity with State banks in the States which permit State banks to have branches. That is all.

Mr. WEEKS. But the Senator from Oklahoma can not cite a State where a State bank is permitted to do business outside of the municipality where it is chartered to do business. That is what I object to. I say that we ought to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to establish branches in the municipality where they are operated in those States where the State laws give a similar power to State banks and trust companies; but we ought not to go an inch beyond that, and that is what this provision would allow us to do.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator did not, perhaps, hear the amendment which I proposed and which the Senate accepted—on line 8, after the word "branch," to insert "in either case referred to in this section." It confines it to the States where the State banks have the right to establish branches. If there be no State that does permit branches, then this would not have application; but if the State should pass in the future an act giving this right to the State banks, then the right would automatically extend to the national banks, which I think is only fair.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, there is not anything in that whole part of the provision on page 20 from line 1 to line 19 which is vital or which has any force not carried by the part of section 25a at the bottom of the previous page except the power to do business outside of the municipality where the parent bank is chartered.

Mr. OWEN. I am willing to leave it to the Senate. We have only five minutes of the morning hour remaining.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes, Mr. President; but this is a vital and important principle that is involved here, and I do not care whether I have five minutes or five hours; the Senate ought to understand it, and they ought to pass deliberately on the question of whether we are going to take a step in the establishment of branch banks which has been opposed by our bankers and those skilled in that subject from the very beginning of our national-banking system.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts for once is in error in regard to the method of carrying out his own idea. The part of section 25a which will remain if the Senator's motion prevails will read as follows:

That any member bank located in a city or incorporated town or village of more than 100,000 inhabitants and possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more may, under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, establish branches, not to exceed 10 in number, within the corporate limits of the city, town, or village in which it is located.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. REED. One moment.

Mr. WEEKS. Just a moment, because I think that will answer what the Senator is going to say. I propose to offer an amendment to that proviso that this power shall be exercised only in those States where a similar privilege is granted to State banks and trust companies chartered under the laws of said States.

Mr. REED. If the Senator intends to offer that amendment—

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. REED (continuing). And if he had offered it as a part of the amendment to strike out, his provision would be very clearly stated. But if we were simply to strike out the language covered by the Senator's motion, and not do any more, then we would have branch banks established in every State in the Union. Now, I suggest to the Senator that he change the form of his motion—if he will permit me to make a suggestion—and that in his motion to strike out he include "and substitute therefor the following language," and then insert the language he has just read.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think the Senator from Missouri is in error. The part that he proposes to amend is the part not stricken out.

Mr. REED. Exactly; but the Senator's motion as it is now made is not to strike out and insert the part that he has offered, but simply to strike out. Therefore I suggest to him to change his motion so that it will be to strike out the language on page 20 and to insert in lieu thereof the language he has just read, in which event we would then authorize the establishment of branch banks only within the cities in those States where, under the State laws, State banks have a similar privilege.

Mr. WEEKS. I will state that if the original motion which I made prevails then I will offer the amendment which I have just read to section 25a.

Mr. REED. Why not make it one motion and vote on all?

Mr. OWEN. Question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to strike out. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 16460.

Mr. REED. Let it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to let the unfinished business be laid aside for half an hour.

Mr. OWEN. That will be abundant time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Army appropriation bill will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GRONNA. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that we proceed with the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask that the amendment that I have just sent to the desk be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That course will be taken. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Massachusetts that the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. There was no opposition to it.

Mr. OWEN. There was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota rose before the Chair made any announcement, and the Chair had to recognize the Senator from North Dakota, and did not decide it.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, at the instance of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. The amendment proposes to strike out, in the item for the Signal Service of the Army, on page 8, line 5, "$3,775,000" and to insert "$14,827,156."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is proper to ask that this amendment be passed over until the Senator from North Carolina can reach the Chamber. He has been sent for, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be temporarily passed over. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 9, where the committee proposes to strike out the House text from lines 11 to 16, inclusive, as follows:

Purchase of land in the State of California for aviation-school purposes: For the acquisition, by purchase or by condemnation, of a site or sites in the State of California for an aviation school and training grounds of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, not to exceed $300,000.

And to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept for the United States from any citizen of the United States a donation of a tract or tracts of land suitable and desirable, in his judgment, for the purposes of an aviation field and remount station, the terms of the donation also to authorize the use of the property donated for any other service of the United States which may hereafter appear desirable.

Mr. WORKS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert in lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the committee on page 9, beginning at page 17, the following words:

Purchase of land for aviation-school purposes: For the acquisition by purchase or condemnation of a site at Coronado Heights, San Diego County, Cal., as recommended by a commission appointed to select such site, and approved by the Secretary of War, and described as "site No. 2, located at Coronado Heights," in the report of said commission in House Document No. 687, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $300,000.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, during the last Congress, in conformity with the wishes of the Secretary of War, I introduced a bill in the Senate providing for the purchase of a site for an aviation school near San Diego, and appropriating $200,000 for that purpose. Later on I offered an amendment to the Army appropriation bill to the same effect. That matter was referred to the Secretary of War after the bill was introduced, and he wrote the following letter to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 18, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

Sir: The department is in receipt of S. 7046, a bill providing for the purchase of lands for an aviation school near San Diego, Cal.

The necessity of a permanent establishment for the aviation section of the Signal Corps is self-evident. The country in the vicinity of San Diego Bay, San Diego, Cal., owing to atmospheric conditions, varied nature of the terrain, and the presence of a large body of water, is better adapted to the establishment of an aviation school than any other part of the United States.

The school is at present located on North Island, where it is a tenant at will through the courtesy of the Coronado Beach Co., and where, owing to the impracticability of obtaining a lease, it has been undesirable to erect any but the most temporary structures.

The department approves this measure and recommends its enactment into law.

Very respectfully,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

Later on, as I have stated, the same proposition was offered as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill. It passed the Senate and went into conference. The conference committee amended the act in such a way as to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate the whole matter and make its report to Congress. That commission has performed its duty and has made its report. It will be found in House Document No. 687, of the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session. The Chief of Staff transmits this report to Congress, and in his letter says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 12, 1916.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Sir: I have the honor to inclose herewith the report, with accompanying appendices, of a commission composed of officers of the Army, which was appointed on March 31, 1915, under a proviso contained in the act of Congress approved March 4, 1915, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916," which proviso reads, in part, as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of not more than three Army officers, whose duty it shall be to report upon the advisability of the acquirement by the United States Government of land near the Bay of San Diego, San Diego County, Cal., and elsewhere on the Pacific, Gulf, and Atlantic coasts, for an aviation school and training grounds of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, and said commission shall ascertain and report what would be the probable cost of acquiring such land; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray any expenses incurred by the said commission in the performance of the duties herein imposed upon it."

In accordance with a recommendation of the commission, the department has approved the acquisition of a site at Coronado Heights, Cal., for use as an aviation school and training grounds for the Signal Corps, and an estimate has been prepared for submission to Congress, providing for an appropriation of $300,000, for the purpose.

Very respectfully,

H. L. SCOTT,
Major General, Chief of Staff,
Acting Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 29, 1915.

From: Lieut. Col. Samuel Reber, Signal Corps.

To: The Adjutant General of the Army.

Subject: Report of commission appointed by letter of The Adjutant General of the Army, dated March 31, 1915.

1. The following report is respectfully submitted.

2. The act approved March 4, 1915 (an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916), reads, in part, as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of not more than three Army officers, whose duty it shall be to report upon the advisability of the acquirement by the United States Government of land near the Bay of San Diego, San Diego County, Cal., and elsewhere on the Pacific, Gulf, and Atlantic coasts, for an aviation school and training grounds of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, and said commission shall ascertain and report what would be the probable cost of acquiring such land; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray any expenses incurred by the said commission in the performance of the duties herein imposed upon it."

3. In pursuance of the foregoing a commission was appointed by the following letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 31, 1915.

From: The Adjutant General of the Army.

To: Lieut. Col. Samuel Reber, Signal Corps, through the Chief Signal Officer, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Commission to locate aviation school and training ground for Signal Corps.

1. Under a provision in an act of Congress approved March 4, 1915, the Secretary of War appoints a commission to consist of Lieut. Col. Samuel Reber, Signal Corps, and Capt. Richard C. Marshall, Jr., Quartermaster Corps, to report upon the advisability of the acquirement by the United States Government of land near the Bay of San Diego, San Diego County, Cal., and elsewhere on the Pacific, Gulf, and Atlantic coasts, for an aviation school and training grounds of the Signal Corps of the United States Army. The commission will ascertain and report what would be the probable cost of acquiring such land.

2. As the special appropriation of $1,000 to defray the expenses of the commission will not become available until July 1, 1915, the commission will, by correspondence and otherwise, make such preliminary studies and preparation for its subsequent work as may be feasible and practicable before that date.

By order of the Secretary of War:

P. C. MARCH, Adjutant General.

4. The commission met from time to time and made visits of inspection of sites in the vicinity of the following places: San Diego and San Francisco, Cal.; Portland, Oreg.; Seattle, Spokane, and Tacoma, Wash.; Morehead City, N. C.; Charleston, S. C.; Savannah, Ga.; and Pensacola and Tampa, Fla.

5. Previous to the initiation of any of the above-mentioned journeys public notice of the creation and object of the commission was given to the press of the country. The secretaries of the chambers of commerce at the above-mentioned places were advised of the date of the arrival of the commission and its readiness to inspect sites in the vicinity of the places named. These officials were asked to give public notice of the approaching visit of the commission and to notify all persons interested to be present at the public hearing held and to present such sites as they might desire. On the arrival of the commission at the various places a public hearing was held and the various suggested sites inspected. At most of the cities visited the various chambers of commerce, through their committees, had the matter thoroughly systematized and greatly aided the commission in its investigations. A large amount of correspondence passed between the commission and those interested, all of which is indexed and filed in the office of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

6. The site for the aviation school of the Signal Corps should possess certain geographical, climatological, and topographical characteristics. The site should be located on an ocean or bay and in close vicinity to existing railway lines, with easy access to them. The climatological characteristics should be such as to give the greatest number of working days possible throughout the year, with suitable air, moisture, and temperature conditions, while the topography of the terrain in the vicinity should be such as to contain many accidental features with good landing places. The flying field itself should be a fairly level tract of land, free from obstructions, and the landing beach should be easily accessible, both from the land and water sides, without a great expanse of tide flats, with fairly deep water close to the shore line.

7. The terrain in the vicinity of San Diego Bay, Cal., fulfills the foregoing conditions better than any other section of the United States. A study of the climatological data of the locations visited by the commission, which was compiled by the Chief of the Weather Bureau at the request of the commission (data hereto appended marked A, A 1, A 2, A 3, A 4, and A 5), clearly indicates that the littoral of San Diego Bay contains the best sites for the establishment of an aviation section, as far as weather and air conditions are concerned. The rail and water connections at San Diego are ample for the purposes of transportation and communication. The country in the vicinity of San Diego, as indicated by the accompanying map (hereto appended, marked B), shows terrain of every description, from level land to mountains, and possesses characteristics that can be found in no other part of the country—the ocean on one side and the quiet waters of the Bay of San Diego on the other side, with a long peninsula connecting North Island and Coronado to the mainland.

8. The five available sites on the Bay of San Diego are indicated by numbers on Appendix B.

No. 1 is North Island, where the Signal Corps Aviation School is temporarily located, and which has been occupied, through the courtesy of the Spreckels Cos., since the middle of 1913 without expense to the Government. The Spreckels Cos., in a letter dated December 1, 1915, copy of which is hereto appended, marked C, has requested the Signal Corps to vacate this tract of land as soon as practicable after March 31, 1916. North Island is the best possible site for the location of the aviation school.

There were five different sites submitted to the commission for consideration. They have numbered them in this report from 1 to 5. In respect of No. 2, which they selected as the one best suited for the purpose, they say:

Site No. 2 is located at Coronado Heights and contains approximately 616 acres (plan No. 5 in letter of the Spreckels Cos. to the Chief Signal Officer, dated Mar. 22, 1915, hereto appended, marked D). This site is admirably adapted for the location of the school.

The other sites are commented upon, as follows:

Site No. 3, in Chula Vista, contains 294 acres. It is traversed by the right of way of two railroad companies and is crossed by telegraph and telephone pole lines. The shore line is marshy and the water shallow.

Site No. 4, in National City, contains 408 acres, the larger portion of which is low, submerged land that will require the filling in of approximately 30 per cent of the area from a depth of 18 inches to 2 feet to bring it above high-water mark.

Site No. 5, known as Dutch Flats, contains approximately 232 acres, a portion of which is below extreme high-water mark and another portion swampy. In order to render the area available approximately 50 per cent of the total area would have to be filled in.

Sites Nos. 1 and 2 are the only ones that could be occupied immediately upon obtaining possession.

9. When the Spreckels Cos., which control sites Nos. 1 and 2, was requested to quote prices on these sites the vice president and managing director verbally advised the commission that site No. 1 is not on the market, and the prices in his letter of March 22, 1915 (Appendix D), were those at which the companies hold the land.

When his attention was called to the fact that the selling prices quoted were far in excess of the assessed value of the land and that, in the opinion of the real estate men in San Diego who are qualified to pass on land values, the prices were too high, he referred the commission to the president of the companies. The president of the companies advised the commission verbally that he would not consider an offer for the sale of site No. 1, as it was not on the market, and that the figures quoted in Appendix D are the minimum that the companies would consider for site No. 2.

The San Diego Land Corporation, in their letter of August 4, 1915 (hereto appended, marked E), offered sites Nos. 3 and 4 for $85,631 and $124,000, respectively.

The San Diego Securities Co. offered site No. 5 in their letter of September 2, 1915 (hereto appended, marked F), for the sum of $250,000.

10. It having come to the attention of the commission that there is a doubt as to the validity of the title to land on the littoral of San Diego Bay, a request was made on the Judge Advocate General of the Army that the question of these titles be investigated. A preliminary report, a copy of which is hereto appended, marked G, was received on the 29th of this month. The final report dealing more extensively with the question of title can not be submitted prior to March 15, 1916. The nonarrival of the preliminary report before the date mentioned has caused the delay in the rendition of the report of the commission.

In this preliminary report the opinion is expressed that the United States has, for defense purposes at least, a title, or color of title, to land on the littoral of San Diego Bay.

At the close of their report they make this recommendation:

11. It is recommended that in case it is finally ascertained that the United States has title to North Island the Signal Corps Aviation School be located thereon.

I think, Mr. President, that there is no probability of ever establishing any title to North Island in the National Government.

In case the United States does not possess title, it is deemed inexpedient to recommend the purchase of a suitable area on North Island, owing to the excessive cost. In case the United States does not hold title, it is recommended that site No. 2 be acquired by purchase, if necessary, through condemnation proceedings. A study of the assessed value of site No. 2 and the views of those in San Diego who are qualified to pass on the question of land values lead the commission to believe that $300,000 is a fair and equitable value for site No. 2.

SAMUEL REBER,
Lieutenant Colonel, Signal Corps.
R. C. MARSHALL, JR.,
Captain, Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. President, I know something about the different tracts of land that were offered to this commission. When I was in San Diego last year I went over the various tracts myself for the purpose of satisfying my own mind as far as I could as to the best place to locate the school and the respective values of the different tracts. I am probably a good deal more familiar with the situation there than any member of the commission, having been a resident of San Diego for 11 years and being perfectly familiar with the situation and all the surroundings. This property that is offered is one of the best, if not the best, except that of North Island.

One of these tracts is on the southern side of the Coronado Hotel, which I have no doubt most of the Senators have visited, and the other is on the south side. The lands on North Island are the most valuable in that section, and it would cost the Government an enormous amount of money to acquire title to a sufficient quantity of land there to serve the purpose of the Government in this respect.

The land that is recommended by the commission is probably a mile south of the Coronado Hotel. It borders on both the Pacific Ocean and the Bay of San Diego, lying directly between the two. It is peculiarly adapted to the purposes that are provided for in this amendment, and from my knowledge of the situation, I am satisfied that the amount that is asked for the land is a reasonable compensation for land of that kind.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator whether his proposition is to insert what he has offered instead of what the committee has recommended?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; that is my amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that we could insert what the committee suggests between lines 17 and 23 without interfering with the proposition as submitted by his amendment, because his proposal could be added to what the committee proposes. The committee proposes to open a way whereby they might accept all land for this purpose, whereas the Senator's proposal is to provide for the purchase or condemnation of a site. So the amendment offered by the committee could be adopted and the Senator's amendment could be added if the Senate saw fit to do so after that action was taken.

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection at all to so modifying my amendment as to provide that if the land is not donated under the provisions as inserted by the committee, then this land shall be purchased.

I do not quite understand why it was that this clause was stricken out after all that had taken place, the commission having been appointed and having made its report, in the first instance the Secretary of War recommending the purchase of this land and in the second instance the Chief of Staff recommending the purchase under the report of the commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will—

Mr. WORKS. Pardon me just a moment. Certainly we need training grounds and we need them in that locality. There is not, as the Secretary of War says, a better place in the whole United States for the work that is to be done by a school of this kind. Nearly every day in the year can be devoted to the work, and it would be a good deal better for the Government to pay $300,000 for a location like this than to take a donation of land in other localities, where probably less than half the time could be devoted to the work of using these flying ships. Now I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me that under the appropriation the committee had in mind the donation might be made of the site proposed in the House provision. They are entirely distinct.

Mr. WORKS. I understand that.

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee provision is a distinctive piece of legislation and has reference to sites elsewhere than in California.

Mr. WORKS. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Could there be any conflict in the Senator's mind between a provision allowing the Government to accept the donation of a site elsewhere and a provision such as he proposes that we shall acquire one in California?

Mr. WORKS. No; I should have no objection to that at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me the very best action to take would be to adopt the proposal by the committee, striking out and substituting, and then if the Senate desires to add the further provision by the Senator from California it can do so.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion made by the Senator, I will modify my proposed amendment by not seeking to strike out what is contained in the committee amendment, simply adding to it the amendment providing for the purchase of this particular piece of land. Would that meet the suggestion of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so. Let it be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the proposed amendment of the committee, on page 9, line 23, after the word "desirable," the following proviso:

Provided, That in the event no suitable tract or tracts of land are donated for the purpose, then the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase or condemnation a site at Coronado Heights, San Diego County, Cal., as recommended by a commission appointed to select such site, and approved by the Secretary of War, and described as "Site No. 2, located at Coronado Heights," in the report of said commission in House Document No. 687, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, at a price not to exceed $300,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask if this is what is termed North Island?

Mr. WORKS. No; it is not. The commission report that the cost of the land on North Island would be excessive, and therefore they have reported against the purchase of that particular tract, which I think is wise on their part. The other tract, which is on the other side of the Coronado Hotel, with which the Senator is familiar, is south, probably a mile away, and it would serve the purpose just as well and be much less expensive.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say that I was very much interested in the project when I was there, and I was very much edified with the aerial business I saw while there. I was impressed with the fact that it was wise to select that as an adequate site, but if the Senator says there is another site near by that is less expensive, of course, that should be given the preference.

Mr. WORKS. It should be borne in mind that we have already located at that point on North Island, where the Government is merely a tenant at will, an aviation school that is in actual operation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As the Senator has modified the amendment so as to be an addition to the Senate committee proposition, so far as I am concerned I am willing to accept it.

Mr. WORKS. Very well, then I will submit the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to disagree to the Senate committee amendment, on page 90, beginning in line 20, and ending at line 5, on page 91, wherein the Senate committee amendment strikes out the House provision. It refers to the so-called time-clock or Taylor system. I am unalterably opposed to the so-called Taylor system. It seems to me to be utterly inhuman and contrary to the true American spirit. I can tolerate a time watch on a race horse or some mechanical contrivance—

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts rises to a question of order, which he will state.

Mr. LODGE. I understood that we were taking up passed-over amendments of the committee. We were on page 9, and now we are on page 90.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought we had finished the amendment on page 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Secretary has not reported the next amendment that was passed over.

Mr. LODGE. I only hope that we will proceed in some order, that is all. I have an amendment that comes early in the bill that I have been waiting for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained, and the Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

Mr. LODGE. I did not want to interfere with the Senator from New Jersey in his amendment, except to proceed in order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I had no desire to break in. I thought I was in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 12, where the proviso beginning in line 10, pay of enlisted men, was reserved.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I ask that that particular amendment be passed over for a few minutes, and that we take up the amendment on page 13, because if the amendment on page 13 that I want to offer is adopted I would not be interested to offer the amendment on page 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? Without objection, that order will be pursued. The amendment passed over on page 13 will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 7, the amendment for pay of enlisted men of all grades was reserved. The committee proposes to strike out "$7,750,000" and to insert "$23,000,000."

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I reserved this whole subject because of an amendment that I want to propose providing for the maintenance of the dependents of the men who have answered the call of the President and who are now on the border.

Mr. President, I am going to offer in a few minutes an amendment which, I think, is not open to a point of order on this subject. The Vice President decided on the question, of order—I read from page 12991 of the RECORD proceedings of July 18:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Notwithstanding the rule of the Senate to the effect that general legislation may not be attached to an appropriation bill, still when the House of Representatives opens the door and proceeds to enter upon a field of general legislation which has to do with a subject of this character the Chair is going to rule, but of course, the Senate can reverse the ruling of the Chair, that the House having opened the door the Senate of the United States can walk in through the door and pursue the field.

That was a very reasonable ruling. So in this case the House has opened the door. It made a provision here on page 19 that all enlisted men and officers of the National Guard who have been enlisted and who responded to the call of the President for service, and so forth. I want to deal in my proposed amendment with men of the National Guard who responded to the call of the President in connection with this question of pay. The amendment I propose to offer will read as follows:

On page 13, at the end of line 12, insert:

"And provided further, That all enlisted men of the National Guard who have heretofore or shall hereafter respond to the call of the President for service"—

Following exactly the wording that the House has already put in the bill—

"shall, in case of those who have dependents that the enlisted man shall be shown to have supported before so responding, be entitled to extra pay in the nature of an allowance, to be paid out of said sum in such amount and in such manner as the Secretary of War shall direct for the support of such dependents for the time of such service, but in no case shall the total of the pay of such enlisted man and the amount of such extra-pay allowance for his dependents exceed the total of the pay and similar allowance now paid to or for privates by the Canadian Government and as set forth in the report of the United States consul general at Ottawa, Canada, to the Department of State, dated July 3, 1916." (RECORD of July 3, 1916, p. 11971.)

Mr. President, that report shows that the Canadian soldiers are paid as follows:

PAY OF CANADIAN SOLDIERS AND ALLOWANCE TO THEIR DEPENDENTS.

JULY 3, 1916.

Message from United States consul general at Ottawa, Canada, to the State Department:

"Canadian Government pays privates $1.10 per diem and clothing, equipment, maintenance. In addition, separation allowances $20 per month to dependents, meaning wives, children, or widows, if girls under 16, boys under 14, and widowed mothers, if son unmarried and sole support. Higher allowances to dependents of sergeants and officers."

Of course, Mr. President, the Secretary of War rules on this subject, and the whole matter could be disposed of equitably under his rules and under his supervision.

This is a very important question. There is not a country in the world that does not provide for the dependents of the men who are summoned to the colors.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question? Is there a country in the world that provides for the dependents of only a part of the men? Does it not provide for the dependents of all the soldiers?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is proposing to provide for only a part of them.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. No; I have another amendment to take care of them all. I want to press this one first and then the other will come up. I think both forces should be treated alike.

But the Senator from Massachusetts is technically correct, and I welcome his interruption, because it shows what we ought to do for both forces. But as a matter of fact, Mr. President, it will not demoralize the regular troops to any great extent, even if we should fail to provide for the dependents of the regular soldiers, for this reason: It is an unwritten rule of the Regular Army that they will not enlist a man with dependents. I see what the Senator is going to say. On the second enlistment they sometimes enlist men with dependents, if they are particularly desirable men, and of course some of the noncommissioned officers, and so forth, but I think with the Senator from Massachusetts that there ought to be provision for both classes as long as you let them enlist at all.

With reference to the National Guard, if the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Oregon or anybody else objects to paying these dependents, he should reflect that it is only a temporary proposition. The Secretary of War has complete power under the act of June 3 last to pass on rules for the National Guard.

Mr. WARREN. Has he not already ruled upon this question?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. No, sir.

Mr. WARREN. That a National Guardsman with a dependent family should not be accepted?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Quite the contrary.

Mr. WARREN. I saw it in the newspaper within a week, and it had all the features of being direct from the department.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator from Wyoming may be correct, so far as the time from the present on, but so far as having men in the National Guard with dependents is concerned, they were enlisted with the full knowledge of the Federal authority and have been for years. The Senator from Wyoming knows that as well as anybody.

Mr. WARREN. That is true as to earlier years, but now the orders have gone out to commanding officers to send home those men who have families dependent upon them and to enlist no more such.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I want to come to that a little later. They were enlisted with the full knowledge of the Federal authorities. They were mustered into the service, they were passed through every examination that the War Department suggested, and, more than that, they were sent to the Rio Grande, and their fares were paid all the way down there.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will pardon me for saying so, I do not think the statement that very few soldiers who have enlisted in the Regular Army have dependents is any answer at all. There are soldiers in the Regular Army with dependents, though they may not be married. It is not the practice to enlist married men, but some of them marry after they enter the service and others who are married reenlist. Those men are fighting for their country just as much as are the National Guard, and I think we ought to make provision for the dependents of all our soldiers. I can not understand why the particular champions of the National Guard think it necessary, in order to promote the interests of the National Guard, to injure the Regular Army. Is it not possible to do everything for both? The members of both arms of the service are American soldiers, and their dependents have just as much claim on us, the one as the other, and the granting of this privilege only to the National Guard and refusing it to the Regular Army seems like an attempt to destroy the Regular Army. I do not see why it is necessary, in order to benefit the National Guard, to destroy the Regular Army.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I want to ask the Senator a question. The Senator has interposed a speech here, so I merely wish to ask him a question.

Mr. LODGE. I shall not interpose any more speeches, but shall take the matter up in my own time.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Good. I am very glad to have the Senator advance all the fallacies that I can possibly answer before I take my seat.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator finds any fallacies, he is at liberty to answer them.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I hope the Senator will not leave the Chamber because I attempt to expose them.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that this is a discrimination in favor of the National Guard. Can the Senator point to a single instance where the Secretary of War or The Adjutant General has authorized the regular soldier to be sent home because he has dependents? The Senator knows, as well as he knows that he sits there, that there has been gross discrimination against the National Guard.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator knows nothing of the kind. The Senator from Maryland may make his own statement of his own knowledge, or lack of knowledge, but he must not put statements into my mouth.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am giving the Senator the facts, and knowing and realizing is a question of open-mindedness.

Mr. President, we have two forces on the border. One is a small force, the Regular Army; the other is a large force, the National Guard. With reference to that small force—the Regular Army—there has been no attack made upon its discipline from behind; nobody has come in and given any soldier the right to be excused from his duties, the right to impair the discipline of the command to which he belongs by putting up a plea that he has a dependent at home. Nobody has attacked the discipline of the Regular Army in that way; but the gentlemen who sympathize with the attack upon the militia have somehow or other managed it that these dependents can not be compensated. The man who may be unruly, the man with a little yellow streak in him, can go to his commanding officer and say, "I have a dependent at home; I am tired of this discipline and work down here, and I want to be excused."

Mr. President, that kind of an attack upon the discipline of the militia has been facilitated, but it has not been made upon the discipline of the Regular Army. If the dependents of the Regular Army are a negligible number—and that is the very truth of the matter—if the Senator wants to insist on equality, why does he not insist on equality in both ways? Why not excuse your private or noncommissioned officer in the Regular Army if he can show that he has a dependent at home?

The truth is the excusing men with dependents often misses the most worthy soldier, because he prefers to suffer rather than forsake his comrades and command facing against a foreign country.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly what the department does under its present rules. If a noncommissioned officer or an enlisted man has those dependent upon him who are suffering, and application is made through proper channels, he is excused from service. That is the rule. That is not only the rule now but it has been the rule for years.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The simple fact is that the Regular Army will not take men if they have dependents; but I am willing to take up the idea of the Senator from Massachusetts, and provide that, if there are a few men in the Regular Army who have, by the misfortunes of nature inherited obligations to support somebody, those men should have help. That can be very readily done here in this bill. That can be done just the same for the Regular Army, under the item of pay for the Regular Army, as it can be done under item of pay for the National Guard. I do not know but that it might be open to a point of order. That, of course, however, would have to come from the Senator's side.

This other question, though, is not open to the point of order, because the House has opened the door wide to legislate about all the men who have responded to the call of the President. The House has dealt with this question of how these men are to be treated in this exchange and when they have responded to that call.

Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts said a little while ago that all the countries at war provide for all of their troops. That may be so, but would it not be a great deal better for us to provide for 74 per cent of our troops than to neglect the whole of them?

Information has been printed in the Record in the shape of a report from the Information Bureau of the Library of Congress, showing that every country in the world makes a similar provision to this. The only country of which I know that does not make such provision is Mexico; and, of course, the government of Mexico is de facto and in other respects in a distressed condition. I have here a dispatch which appeared in the Baltimore Evening Sun of July 20, written by William G. Shepherd, from San Antonio, Tex., and it is headed, "What about my family? is chief worry of Guardsmen on border." The writer says:

Not one soldier that I rubbed elbows with in all the armies of Europe in the last two years ever worried as some of these American soldiers along the edge of Mexico.

These Americans I refer to are worrying about their families back home. They do not know whether their wives and children have enough to eat. Such a deplorable situation could not possibly exist in any European army—for European Governments care for the families of their soldiers.

Here is the important part of it—

Now, here is another pertinent statement. I think it is exactly accurate; the fact is I know it is accurate and the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Massachusetts know it is accurate.

The Mexican Government doesn't and we don't.

The United States and Mexico are in accord on one subject, and that is in making no provision for the families of the soldiers who are in the field. Mr. President, that is a phase of accord that I do not want to see go on as between these two Governments. I think we ought to follow the example of all the rest of the world on this subject. I put into this resolution a reference to the pay of Canadian soldiers, because the pay of Canadian soldiers is the pay and maintenance allowance of our next neighbor and also the standards of living in Canada are pretty much the same as are the standards of living in the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I am in sympathy with what the Senator from Maryland has proposed, but I am opposed to putting in a provision here allowing a foreign Government to legislate for the United States. I think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland should be amended. I think we ought to be more specific as to what the law of this country should be and not refer in it to a foreign country.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will send the Senator from North Dakota a copy of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Maryland whether or not he has yet offered his amendment?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have not yet offered it, but I am talking about my proposed amendment. I will send it to the Senator, and he can see the part that refers to the pay of enlisted men as provided for privates by the Canadian Government.

Mr. President, I was speaking just now about the attitude of this country and of other countries on this subject, and I should like to go a little further with this article. I should like to show what Gen. Funston is saying about this thing; but I believe that there are not enough Members of the Senate here really to dispose of this important proposition, and so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Harding	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hardwick	Norris	Smith, Md.
Brandegge	Husting	Oliver	Smith, S. C.
Broussard	James	Overman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Sterling
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Thomas
Clapp	Kenyon	Pittman	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Polindexter	Townsend
Culbertson	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
Colt	Lane	Ransdell	Vardaman
Dillingham	Lee, Md.	Reed	Wadsworth
du Pont	Lippitt	Robinson	Walsh
Fall	Lodge	Shafroth	Warren
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Weeks
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Williams
Gronna	Myers	Shields

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are absent on the business of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], and state that he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I was discussing the opinion of an Army officer as expressed in this interview on the subject of excusing from duty men in the National Guard who have dependents at home. Of course compensation for their dependents would do away with the necessity of excusing them from duty. This article of Mr. Shepherd's makes a quotation from an alleged interview with Gen. Funston, which I will read:

"Can a man be a good soldier and do good work if he's wondering whether his family at home has enough to eat?" I asked Gen. Funston after leaving the jitney and making my way to his hot office.

The General, whose perspiring head was leaving patches of dampness on the leather back of the huge chair in which he sat, leaned forward, saying earnestly:

"Of course not. I permitted 14 men to return home yesterday because their dependents were suffering, and I have so many requests for relief on like grounds that it will prove necessary to release several thousand within the next few weeks."

These men are given 3½ cents mileage homeward. Money which has been spent in bringing them to the border, feeding them, and outfitting them, and then, after two weeks, sending them back home, isn't wasted. It is our payment for the lesson that in our new Army plan we must provide well for the care of soldiers' families if we are going to insist on taking men away from their families into the Army. "What about my family?" is the biggest question in all militia camps along the border.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the fact that there is not any war at the present time, would not the Senator agree to the suggestion that it might be a good idea to return to their homes all the soldiers on the Mexican frontier who have dependents?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I think not. That is what I am arguing against at present, and I think if the Senator looks with the same earnestness as I do upon the general question of preparedness he would be willing to make any provision of money or otherwise in order that the 100,000 National Guardsmen shall get the benefit of the actual military and disciplinary experience that is open to them on the Rio Grande. Their discipline ought not to be attacked here from behind by relieving any man who alleges he has dependents at home.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there may be something in that, although I apprehend they could get some training at home, as they have always had it, more or less; but why on earth we are holding so large an Army on the frontier when we have not any war with Mexico or with any other country, and we are now taking so much interest in those who have dependents at home, surpasses my comprehension. I would send them home or refuse to enlist married men in the National Guard, precisely as we do in the Regular Army.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not want to discuss with the Senator a question that affects the politics of a presidential campaign.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no such purpose.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator is not going to agree with me as to the goodness and wisdom of President Wilson's policy, but I want the Senator to agree with me as to this: Here are 100,000 militiamen on the Rio Grande, and we all know that the Swiss system or any other system of citizen soldiery commences with a preliminary period of discipline.

Now, setting aside the Presidential campaign—I hope the Senator will let that get out of his mind for a minute—and just taking up the opportunity of getting a citizen army that is thus presented to us, we have these men in camp now, and ought not that discipline to go on earnestly and honestly for the benefit of the preparedness of the United States? I am sure the Senator agrees with me about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator is unduly exercised over my desire to interject politics into this matter.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Not at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. I care nothing about the political situation at all, and I have always carefully refrained from criticizing the Democratic President, as the Senator knows. I have not been in the habit of doing that, and I am not going to engage in that now; but I still feel that sending to the front men who leave families and who leave gainful occupations, and holding them in a hostile country, so far as climate is concerned, when there is not any war or any immediate prospect of war, is rather an absurd thing to do.

The Senator constantly quotes the Swiss system, and I notice in the Senator's amendment that he refers to what Canada has done.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator ought not to object to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think we ought to be governed to any very great extent by what other countries are doing in these matters, especially a little Republic like Switzerland, or a dependency of Great Britain like Canada. Let us legislate for ourselves.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the great genius of ancient Rome along military lines and general lines of law was based on the fact that that great Government had the good sense to pick out the good things in the laws of all the nations she came in contact with, and I am amazed that the Senator from New Hampshire, himself a Canadian by birth, if I am correctly informed, should say that we ought not copy a good thing from the laws of Canada.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not object to copying it, but I do object to putting it in our statutes in the way the Senator proposes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I refer to it respectfully.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but it is in the Senator's amendment, and the proposition is to put it in the law, which certainly ought not to be done.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly; but it is a respectful reference, and a limit, of course, is provided. It is no insult to the American eagle to refer to the amount that Canada pays to her soldiers. As to the Senator's remark with reference to Switzerland, I desire to say that Switzerland is a Republic; she is an armed Republic; and she perfected the development of her militia on such a basis that the Swiss Republic is safe.

The great thing for us to do is to protect our republican form of Government. The most precious thing we have is our republican form of government, and I do not want any centralizationist who has an imperial yearning in his soul to come here and modify our National Guard system or abolish it—and that is about what was aimed at by some proposed amendments to the military law—in the interest of great military centralization in the hands of the Executive of the United States. Let us preserve our republican system; let us preserve our local self-government; because this great republican system is the best thing we have among all our precious things.

Mr. President, that is why I am struggling here in the Senate to-day for this opportunity for discipline for the National Guard. I think the dependents of our soldiers ought to be looked out for; but the main thing, looking through the course of years, is that our system of Organized Militia should be preserved.

I am perfectly willing to agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the Regular Army should be provided for in like manner, and I have an amendment drawn up designed to give the same kind of support to the dependents of members of the Regular Army; but I can not offer that under the item relating to pay for the militia, as it would be obviously out of order. However, I am going to offer in a few moments the other amendment which I have been discussing under the item providing pay for the militia, and I shall offer it on the theory that the House has opened wide the door by dealing with the question of the members of the guard who have responded to the call of the President and giving them a compensation for so responding. The House has very properly put this question under the pay item, because it is all a question of pay.

Now, Mr. President, before offering the amendment, I call attention to another very pertinent thing; and I hope I will have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire, because I believe he is in favor of some preparedness. We have two forces, the United States Army of about 90,000 men, and the National Guard, which on the call of the President more than doubled, so far as personnel is concerned, our Army on the border. I voted here in the Senate, probably with the Senator from New Hampshire and probably with the Senator from Massachusetts, for 250,000 Regular soldiers.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator's remarks are very interesting; but I apprehend they would be more enlightening if the amendment could be read to the Senate.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I read it once, probably before the Senator came in.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will offer his amendment and permit it to be read, we would have a better understanding of his remarks.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am going to read it into the RECORD, whether it is ruled out of order or not.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, let it be read.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will read it for the benefit of the Senator. The amendment is: On page 13, at the end of line 12, to insert the following:

And provided further, That all enlisted men of the National Guard who have heretofore or shall hereafter respond to the call of the President for service shall, in case of those who have dependents that the enlisted men shall be shown to have supported before so responding, be entitled to extra pay in the nature of an allowance, to be paid out of said sum—

That is to say the appropriation that goes before—

In such amount and in such manner as the Secretary of War shall direct for the support of such dependents for the time of such service, but in no case shall the total of the pay of such enlisted man and the amount of such extra pay allowance for his dependents exceed the total of the pay and similar allowance—

I have erased from the amendment at that point the words "amounting to $54 a month"—

now paid to or for privates by the Canadian Government and as set forth in the report of the United States consul general at Ottawa, Canada, to the Department of State, dated July 3, 1916. (Record of July 3, 1916, p. 11971.)

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, just an inquiry at that point. Would the Senator have this amendment providing for the dependents of soldiers in the National Guard—and I am heartily in sympathy with the idea of providing for their dependents—apply to those members of the National Guard who have never left home? Information was given the other day to the effect that there was not a South Atlantic State whose National Guard had left the borders of the State outside of the National Guard of Virginia. Would it not be well to insert a proviso restricting the provisions of this paragraph to those members of the National Guard who are actually doing service on the Mexican border?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. No, Mr. President, for the reason that if the National Guardsman has left his home and is not taking part in his usual industry and is not getting his usual pay or income he is just as much without means to support his dependents if he is in a camp in Ohio, say, as he would be in a camp on the Rio Grande. The whole thing is a question of responding to the call of the President. There are 19 regiments that have not been called out. Those 19 are at home, and, of course, they would not be included under this amendment, and the men in those regiments, as the Senator will readily understand, are pursuing their usual daily industry and are in a position to take care of their families as ordinarily.

Mr. President, I was going to go on and say that it is a question of importance to the discipline of the National Guard. Those who have been soldiers, for instance, like the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], will recognize how important it is that this great force of men, 100,000 or more, now on the Rio Grande should have this opportunity of 90 days' discipline. The companies of the National Guard are being combined with the companies of the Regular Army and drilled as units; they are being combined for patrol and other purposes, and the co-operation between these men and their officers and the officers and men of the Regular Army at the front is sincere, honest, and efficient, and is having a wonderful effect upon the development of the discipline of this large force of American soldiers.

Mr. President, that ought to go on. It ought not to be interrupted by excusing any man from the service, one here, one there, one there, until it runs up into the thousands, disrupting this process of discipline and development of this great body of citizen soldiers. The dependents should be cared for and the soldiers relieved of all anxiety on the subject. As I said a little while ago, I voted for an Army of 250,000 regular soldiers if you could get them, but you can not get them. I have the returns right here that I got from the department the other day, dated July 14. It seems that in 121 days 16,000 men have been enlisted out of the 20,000 that were authorized by Congress 115 days ago.

Why, Mr. President, the Regular Army is going forward to-day at the rate of only 1,000 men a month, and that is all. The net increase of the Regular Army, as the Senator from Oregon doubtless knows, is only 1,000 men a month. That is the net result of the enlistments over and above the losses. I have that from The Adjutant General himself, and it is a matter of public knowledge.

Thus you are getting your Regular Army built up—this force for the protection of the United States that you are all talking about—at the rate of only 12,000 men a year. Twelve thousand men a year is all that it is going ahead. These may be hard times to get enlistments, from the standpoint of the industrial activity of the country, but from the standpoint of the warlike excitement that we have just gone through, these are easy times for enlistments. So I think on the whole they are probably average times for enlistments in the Regular Army; and you are only going ahead 1,000 men a month, and it costs you nearly $20 for every one you get. Nineteen dollars and some cents is the cost of enlisting these men in the Regular Army, for advertisements and all these other items of expenditure. The average price of getting the men to sign the enlistment docket is between $19 and $20, and you are getting 1,000 men a month ahead by that process.

Are you for preparedness, or are you against it? That is the question. We have this great army of citizen soldiers down there on the Rio Grande. Why not take care of their dependents? As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] just now said, it has already been arranged that we are not going to enlist any more men in the National Guard with dependents, so you are going to have no future trouble about that. The evil effect of letting these men with dependents come home now is the disruption of the discipline of the National Guard. Gen. Funston has described it as to the numbers involved, and from other sources of information I am informed that it is a very serious handicap in some of the commands.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how many are there with dependents?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Nobody knows. The Senator has asked a very pertinent question; but this article which I quote from says that Gen. Funston said that he would have to release several thousand in the next few weeks. Now, it is estimated that anywhere from 10 to 25 per cent of the National Guard are involved in this disruption of discipline, because that is really what it amounts to in the long run; and it may be serious or it may not be serious. I have hoped all along, Mr. President, that the patriotism of our men in the National Guard would leap over this barrier, this tendered temptation to go home. The six-year enlistment clause was put up to every man that went into the National Guard, doubling their terms of service; and yet, Mr. President, they leaped over that barrier, resolute upon their patriotic duty. The new law was no help to the guard at all from the standpoint of this mobilization. Their development to the date of the call was under the old Dick law. Yet this body of men have done this through the discipline that came from their armory training and outfitting them with arms and clothing and sending them to camps occasionally in the summer and occasionally to rifle ranges. It was rather occasional. One of the best regiments in Maryland, the First Maryland Regiment, had not seen its colonel for three years until this mobilization took place under the President's call. Why? Because Congress had not provided for the disciplining of the National Guard, and the money was so scant that they had to send out regiments to the shooting ranges in battalions; and the commander of that regiment, an excellent officer, had not seen his regiment as a whole for three years until he met them, under the call of the President, at Laurel; and that was the kind of provision that Congress had been making for this important subject!

Mr. President, we have got them all together now. The dispatches of yesterday say they are having extra time on the shooting ranges. As I said just now, they are being disciplined with the Regular troops.

I think the Thirteenth and Thirtieth Regiments of United States Infantry are at Eagle Pass. Those regiments have probably not more than 40 men in a company. The National Guard of Maryland average about, say, 90 men in a company; and by making a combination of these two forces—Company A with a Company A and a Company B with a Company B, and so on—you get something like a full war-strength company, and for the first time possibly some of your Regular officers are handling full-strength war companies.

Let us not stop this process. Let us go on in the interest of the preparedness of the United States, and let us do the fair thing by the National Guard. Let us do the fair thing by the men who were willing to leave their daily vocations and their daily income and answer to the call of the President. We will not discuss whether the call was wise or not. We will not enter into that question with our friends on the other side. We will simply ask them to recognize the fact that the Guard is on the frontier and this is the opportunity to give them a genuine military experience.

Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, at the end of line 12, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That all enlisted men of the National Guard who have heretofore or shall hereafter respond to the call of the President for service shall, in case of those who have dependents that the enlisted man shall be shown to have supported before so responding, be entitled to extra pay in the nature of an allowance to be paid out of said sum, in such amount and in such manner as the Secretary of War shall direct, for the support of such dependents for the time of such service; but in no case shall the total of the pay of such enlisted man and the amount of such extra-pay allowance for his dependents exceed the total of the pay and similar allowance now paid to or for privates by the Canadian Government, as set forth in the report of the United States consul general at Ottawa, Canada, to the Department of State dated July 3, 1916.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I will withdraw the latter part of that amendment, reading "but in no case shall," and so forth, and leave the payments entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment, for the reason that it is new and substantive legislation and no estimates have been made for it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the point of order. I merely did not want to have a false impression left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. All right; I will wait until the ruling is made. I can speak just as well then.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I call the attention of the Chair to the ruling of the Vice President.

Mr. LODGE. If there is going to be discussion of the point of order, I do not yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

The Chair has had his attention called to the case to which the Senator from Maryland has already referred. The Chair thinks that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland is plainly obnoxious to Rule XVI and that the case presented in his remarks did not comprehend the overruling of a point of order against an amendment where that amendment provided something not germane to the House provision. The provision which the House inserted in the bill relates solely to members of the National Guard who, at the time they respond to the call of the President, are Government employees, and it provides that they shall be restored to the positions occupied by them at the time of the call. The proviso offered by the Senator from Maryland relates to extra pay for members of the National Guard, and, in the opinion of the Chair, is clearly general legislation and obnoxious to Rule XVI.

Therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to speak for only a moment.

I wish to say, in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, that I think from what he said my position or what I intended to say may have been misunderstood. I am not against providing for the dependent families of members of the National Guard called into the service. On the contrary, I am in favor of it; but I do not think it is wise or just to give that assistance to one part of your soldiers and not give it to all. It does not matter whether there are many soldiers in the Regular Army who have dependents or whether they are, as the Senator from Maryland says, negligible. If there is one man with dependents who is at the front in the Regular Army serving his country in time of war or disturbance, he ought to have the same provision for his dependents as the National Guard while they receive it; and if the amendment had not been ruled out of order I should have offered an amendment to it that whenever such payments were made for the benefit of the dependents of members of the National Guard similar payments should be made to take care of the dependents of the regular soldiers in service at that time, so that the provision for the dependents of the regular soldiers would cease and determine when those for the National Guard ended.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I think that wherever an allowance is made to the families of dependent soldiers it ought to be paid to the families and not to the soldiers.

Mr. LODGE. I quite agree with the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Secretary of War could do that, of course. He would attend to that.

Mr. LODGE. Not only in England and Canada, where I know it is done, but I think among all the belligerents engaged in the present war, provision is made, by direct payment to dependent families, for their support during the absence of the husband or father or brother who had hitherto supported them; and I think that ought to be done by us when the National Guard is called out into service. We are told that we have not a war in Mexico or on the border, but we apparently have fighting, and we have called out the National Guard—for what military purpose it is not easy to see. I am not going into that side of the question at all; but I do want to make it perfectly plain that I favor the care of the dependents of our soldiers. I can not draw this line, as some Senators seem to desire to draw it, between the man who fights in the Regular Army and the man who fights in the National Guard. It seems to be thought necessary by the friends of the National Guard here to oppose everything for the Regular Army.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. One moment. I do not say the Senator from Maryland is doing that, because he said he meant to offer an amendment in that direction, which he said was out of order before he announced that he was going to offer it. But when the Army bill was up everything was done for the National Guard that could be done in that bill. Everything they had asked was done; and yet the committee have devoted their entire strength, and successfully, to preventing the United States from having volunteers. I do not mean the National Guard did this, but the little group of adjutants general down here did. I am happy to say that nobody of the National Guard from my State urged it. They were too broad-minded, too truly patriotic to do so.

Now, I am ready to do everything possible for the National Guard, but I want also to care for the Regular Army. I wish to protect the United States; and I can not, for one, draw these discriminations. I wish to provide in every way for the National Guardsmen now on the frontier, and where there are dependents I want to have them taken care of, and I want the dependents of the regular soldiers taken care of at the same time. If we are a just Nation, as we are a generous Nation, it will be done.

Mr. REED and Mr. LEE of Maryland addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I want it understood that I had claimed recognition from the Chair with a view of appealing from the decision.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will waive that right, of course, until the Senator from Missouri has spoken.

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Chair recognized several other Senators, but I am sure he did not intend to cut me out of the right of appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that the Senator wished to take an appeal. The Chair will preserve the right of the Senator to take an appeal.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Will the Senator from Missouri go ahead, then?

Mr. REED. No; I will wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has sustained the point of order made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. From that decision the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] appeals. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no disposition to debate the appeal; but in justice to myself I want to say to the Senator from Maryland, and to anybody and everybody who may be interested in my position with reference to the matter that has been under discussion, that I am in favor as much as anybody of taking care of the dependents of those who have been called into the service of the Government in a military capacity. I did venture to suggest that I thought we might with propriety send the men who had dependents to their homes, in view of the fact that there were no hostilities of which I had any knowledge on the Mexican frontier or elsewhere. The Senator from Maryland took occasion to suggest in a very pointed way that I was not in favor of preparedness. Why, Mr. President, the votes I have cast will speak for themselves. I have been in favor of a policy of very liberal appropriations for the Army and Navy. I have sometimes thought I went beyond prudence; but no one can charge me fairly with having failed in my duty in that regard. I expect to continue in the same frame of mind, and to support the committees of this body, the men who are charged with these great appropriations, in following their recommendations to a large extent, and favoring liberal appropriations both for the Regular Army and for the National Guard.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, may I be heard on the appeal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, in your absence this question has been discussed twice in the Senate, and on each occasion the Chair has held that where the House enters upon a subject matter the Senate could pursue the same subject matter and legislate, and that it was not obnoxious to the rule requiring estimates or prohibiting general legislation, for the simple reason that the Senate could not be precluded from legislating on the same subject on which the House had legislated, generally speaking.

Mr. President, I want to get into the RECORD the fact that we have had two cases here affecting two classes of Government employees, and that in both of those two cases the House has legislated, but that here, in a case where the House has legislated in reference to members of the National Guard, the point of order is sustained. In two cases where the House legislated, one with reference to dentists and one with reference to employees in navy yards, as to the hours of leave, the Vice President held, and the Senate sustained him, that the Senate could go on and proceed to legislate, because the House had already entered that field.

Now, Mr. President, when we come to another class of citizens who are Government employees, and the most patriotic class of citizens in this country, let us say, the men who have answered to the appeal presented to them in the call of the President—and when they answered it looked very much like war—we find the doors closed for the relief of defendants by this ruling, even though the House has legislated in this bill and in this item as to another item affecting members of the militia answering the call.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do.

Mr. WORKS. As I remember the ruling of the Chair in the case to which the Senator refers, it was held that the subject matter of the legislation was a reorganization of the Navy, and that therefore anything that affected that reorganization was germane and not separate and distinct legislation. I doubt whether the Senator can stretch that ruling to cover this case.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. But it applied to the naval Dental Corps, and in this case it applies to the National Guardsmen who have responded to the call of the President. That is the language of the House. The House legislated with reference to National Guardsmen responding to the call of the President.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; but, Mr. President, the subject matter of this legislation is appropriations. It is an appropriation bill pure and simple.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Why, the whole thing was on an appropriation bill, Mr. President. Both of those items were on appropriation bills, and it was general legislation that the House had attached to an appropriation bill.

Mr. WORKS. It was an appropriation bill, but the particular portion of it involved was practically a reorganization of the Navy; and it was upon that theory, as I remember, that the Chair ruled.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will refresh the recollection of the Senator by reading a little from the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], at page 12991:

According to the ruling of the Chair on that particular day, I believe the Senator from Nevada is right. I believe we have as much right to accept the amendment offered by him as we had to accept the amendment that was under discussion the other day. I wish to read the ruling of the Chair on that occasion:

"The VICE PRESIDENT. Notwithstanding the rule of the Senate to the effect that general legislation may not be attached to an appropriation bill, still when the House of Representatives opens the door and proceeds to enter upon a field of general legislation which has to do with a subject of this character the Chair is going to rule, but, of course, the Senate can reverse the ruling of the Chair that the House having opened the door the Senate of the United States can walk in through the door and pursue the field."

In this particular case in which I have appealed from the decision of the Chair we are pursuing the particular field of members of the National Guard who have responded to the call of the President as to whom the House has legislated.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. GRONNA. This amendment, then, is simply pursuing that particular field.

Mr. SMOOT. The field that is to be pursued under this amendment is to increase the leave of absence for certain employees of the Government, and the House did not legislate upon that subject directly or indirectly.

Mr. GRONNA. It affects every employee in the Navy Department. Mr. SMOOT. The House has not inserted in the bill one word about increased leave of absence, and that is the subject before the Senate at this time. What the Chair has to rule upon is whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada is general legislation, and if it is changing existing law it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. President, we have general legislation here affecting the status of members of the National Guard who responded to the call of the President—general legislation of a very broad sort. The House has opened the door, and the ruling that I have appealed from closes the door to the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 174, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, after line 21, insert the following:

"That each and every employee of the navy yards, gun factories, naval stations, and arsenals of the United States Government is hereby granted 30 days leave of absence each year, without forfeiture of pay during such leave: Provided, That it shall be lawful to allow pro rata leave only to those serving 12 consecutive months or more; And provided further, That in all cases the heads of divisions shall have discretion as to the time when the leave can best be allowed."

Now, this was the statement of the Senator who offered the amendment:

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the other day the question before the Senate when this ruling was made by the Vice President which has just been read was on an amendment first introduced in this body in behalf of the members of the Dental Corps. It changed the law with regard to the Dental Corps.

Mr. President, I call your attention to the fact that this House provision changes the law in this appropriation with reference to members of the National Guard responding to the call of the President—a very much larger field of application.

It absolutely changed the law affecting dentists. There was a provision in the bill for doctors as it came from the House, there was a provision in the bill for a Hospital Corps as it came from the House, but not for dentists, and the Senator therefore introduced this amendment.

I will read only a line or two, but it will give the Chair the object of the amendment.

Then he goes on to quote from the amendment as to the naval Dental Corps. Then the Senator from Nevada proceeded:

Now, it goes on for two pages enacting entirely a new law with regard to these dentists that was never taken up in the House at all.

Now, then, the very skillful Senator from Utah, this wonderful parliamentarian, was the other day maintaining a stand, I believe, if my memory serves me right, just the opposite from what he is now taking. He was contending, as I recollect it, that because the House had permitted general legislation with regard to medical officers, it opened the door for a consideration of the whole subject by this body.

So let me repeat, it has been decided twice by your predecessor in the chair, and in the last few days, that when the House opens the door by legislating on an appropriation bill with reference to a given class, the Senate can proceed. For that reason I make this appeal, and I hope that the Senate will proceed consistently with reference to the most patriotic class that has come before it lately for its legislative consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I did not think that the ruling of the Vice President was correct the other day in the terms in which he stated it. The language which the Senator from Maryland has just read from the RECORD, used by the Vice President at that time, seems to me to be altogether too comprehensive for any practical application to be made of it. To attempt to decide whether a specific amendment is general legislation or not, using such general terms as the Vice President used when he stated that when the House opens the door the Senate might walk through it and pursue a field, can not, I think, be any accurate guide in drawing the line of distinction between what may be considered general legislation and what may not, or how far the Senate can deal with the matter which the House placed in the bill. It seems to me that the true inquiry should be, What is the field that the House has entered upon? What is the specific proposition that the House has placed in the bill which is general legislation?

The provision here, to be specific, is that the officers and enlisted men of the National Guard, Government employees, who respond to the call of the President for service, shall at the expiration of the military service to which they are called be restored to the positions occupied by them at the time of the call. That is general legislation. The House having entered upon it, I think the Senate without violating its rule as to placing upon general appropriation bills matters of general legislation could make such changes as it chose in relation to the proposition of restoring members of the guard to their positions in the Government employ. To say that when the House attempts to do that the Senate can place upon a bill, relating to the same subject matter and the same specific proposition, a new provision of law providing how the Secretary of War shall compensate the dependents of the National Guardsmen who have gone to the field is to place upon the bill a piece of legislation relating to an entirely different subject and by no construction or stretch of language or imagination can it be considered to be dealing with the same subject which the House dealt with, except to say that they both concern the National Guard, and, of course, that would include any legislative proposition no matter how remote or different from that entered upon by the House.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I wish to call his attention to the fact that it deals with the enlisted men who answer to the call of the President and nobody else, and the same class exactly that the House dealt with. Incidentally there is an effect upon the dependents, but the pay is to the enlisted man who responded to the call of the President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. For the purpose of my argument it is perfectly immaterial. The House provision attempts to deal with the offices which the enlisted men—the Government employees—have left. The legislation proposed by the Senate committee amendment proposes to deal with the compensation of the enlisted men, increasing their salaries, which is a subject entirely remote from that dealt with by the House.

So I think the ruling of the Chair is perfectly correct.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to make this suggestion? As to an amendment embodying the same principle covered by his amendment—indeed, an amendment which, I think, was an exact copy of the bill passed by the House—notice has been given that it will be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Notice of a motion to suspend the rules was also given. That motion can be taken up to-day, a day's notice having been given. I simply make the suggestion in the interest of saving time. The Senator knows I am in favor of the principle contained in his proposition. I am also in favor of going further and providing for additional pay for these men. I make that suggestion in order that we may possibly save a long debate on this field. I say to the Senator frankly that I am in favor of his amendment, but I can not convince myself that it is not obnoxious to the rule, although I should like very much to do so if I could. But we can get at this question, and get at it directly, under the notice given by the Senator from Wisconsin. I gave a similar notice with reference to a kindred measure last night. The chairman of the committee very kindly consented to an adjournment instead of a recess in order that the notice might become effective to-day.

Now, to save the time and get this matter to a vote, would it not be well to just waive any further insistence upon the point of order and to take the matter up in the manner I have suggested?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, but there are two grave reasons why it should not be done. The ruling has been clearly made here that where a subject matter is open the Senate can pursue it. I stick absolutely in this amendment to the subject matter of the members of the National Guard who responded to the call of the President. There is no change from that subject in a word of that amendment.

Mr. President, I should like to yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, but he takes the matter up in an entirely different way. He handles it aside from any action by the House as a new bill and a new subject, and he enters upon the domain of this relief handicapped by having to have two-thirds of the Senate to set aside the rule. So his proposition as it stands is practically hopeless, I fear.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. With great pleasure.

Mr. WORKS. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will yield the floor to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am not very favorably disposed toward general legislation on an appropriation bill. I think the rule of the Senate in that respect should be rather strictly construed. I took a very slight part in the discussion that took place after an appeal had been taken from the Chair in the case referred to by the Senator from Maryland. I believe in that case that the ruling of the Chair was correct. I think so yet. But for myself, I based it upon the theory that the legislation in that case as it had come to us from the House was intended to reorganize entirely the Army. The Senate determined that in order to complete that reorganization it was necessary to add another bureau, and that seemed to me to be strictly within the rule of the Senate. It was general legislation of the very same kind and connected with legislation that had already taken place in the House, simply adding to it. But I do not think that can be appealed to as justifying the position taken by the Senator from Maryland now. I think the ruling of the Chair is perfectly right myself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not discuss the late ruling of the Vice President made on that occasion, which I confess was something of a shock to me. I rise simply for the purpose of making an illustration as to where a ruling of that kind may lead us. Rule XVI which deals with general legislation deals with another matter, and that is that no salary can be increased or appropriation increased for any purpose unless it is estimated for.

Now, let us suppose in the District appropriation bill, which probably contains salaries for 500 people, more or less, the House increased a salary that had not been estimated for. Does anyone suppose that the House having opened that door the Committee on Appropriations could have taken 100, or 200, or 300, or 500 other salaries that had not been estimated for and increased them on the hypothesis that the House had increased one salary and thus opened the door for the Senate to pursue it?

I simply cite that as an illustration of the danger of the proposition involved in the idea that when the House opens the door we can pursue it to the end.

I rarely ever dissent from the opinions of the Vice President, because I think that he is very accurate, as a rule. When I read that opinion I thought it was a dangerous proposition; and certainly, Mr. President, it would become extremely dangerous if the Senate, pursuing the matter after the House had opened the door, should undertake to place upon the bill provisions that were not germane to the matter that the House had inserted. It seems to me that this is a case where that suggestion applies with a great deal of force.

I feel that the decision of the Chair was absolutely correct, and will take pleasure in voting to sustain the Chair in the decision that the Chair announced.

Mr. WARREN. There is not any doubt in my mind about the correctness of the ruling of the Chair. Without reference to what may have occurred the other day on other matters, the rules governing appropriation bills are very plain, and they have been generally followed for a great many years.

The proposition of the Senator from Maryland is obnoxious to almost every feature of the rules regarding appropriation bills. It of course proposes legislation; it has not been estimated for; it has not been reported here from a standing committee. Besides this, it increases an appropriation. It has not been put in here as an amendment one day before being printed and sent to a committee, as the rule provides.

So, starting from the very first, it is against the rules. The facts are that it increases an appropriation without an estimate. It increases it without law. It entirely changes law.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Will the Senator permit an interruption? There is no increase whatever in this appropriation by this amendment. It does not increase a single dollar.

Mr. WARREN. That is entirely evading the question. If the Senator reflects a moment, he will know that, because the whole provision under discussion is specifically the pay of soldiers. Now, whether they are National Guards or whether they are regular soldiers, the money goes into one fund, and soldiers must be paid their regular stipend under the law, regardless of whether their accounts are short or long. If the money provided for that purpose is expended for another purpose, the salary or regular pay of troops must be paid just the same. So, really, it is a direct addition to an item of appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it. The decision of the Chair stands as the decision of the Senate. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 12, line 10, after the numerals "$23,000,000," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter one of the enlisted men detached from the Army at large for duty at each of the recruit depots under the provisions of the act of June 12, 1906, shall, while so detached, have the rank, pay, and allowances of a regimental sergeant major.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 16, beginning at line 14. It was passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and proposes to insert the following:

Hereafter headquarters clerks shall be known as Army field clerks and shall receive pay at the rates herein provided, and after 12 years of service, at least three years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall be subject to the rules and Articles of War.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, since asking the amendment to go over I have discussed the amendment with a number of officers of the department. The amendment on page 16 I have no objection to, but I wish to refer to the amendment beginning on page 17, reading as follows:

Hereafter headquarters clerks shall be known as Army field clerks and shall receive pay at the rates herein provided, and after 12 years of service, at least three years of which shall have been on detached duty away from permanent station, or on duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, or both, shall receive the same allowances, except retirement, as heretofore allowed by law to pay clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and shall be subject to the rules and Articles of War.

I have received hundreds of protests from clerks in the Quartermaster Corps against this proposed amendment, and perhaps it will be as well for me to read one of those protests in the shape of a letter, as all the others are along the same line. The letter is as follows:

As a citizen of the State of New York and as a servant of the United States continuously since August, 1889, I beg you to consider the following individual petition:

1. Senate amendment to Army appropriation act for fiscal year 1917, on page 17, lines 1 to 9, provides for the creation of a corps of field clerks from clerks in the Quartermaster Corps who shall have had a total service of 12 years, 3 of which shall have been away from permanent stations within the continental limits of the United States.

This corps of 200 field clerks will be entitled to commutation of quarters, to heat and light, to free medical service for themselves and families, and to purchase of subsistence and other supplies from the Quartermaster Corps of the Army, all of which is worth approximately $600 a year. In addition, these clerks are now planning to have subsequent Congresses give them full pay of pay clerks and retirement privilege.

2. Without reference to efficiency it is proposed to reward a class of clerks for no other reason than that they have served three years away from permanent stations in the United States. This sole requirement for appointment as field clerk will bar a considerable number of deserving clerks of the Quartermaster Corps from the benefits conferred by the act.

3. There are many clerks in the large offices of the Quartermaster Corps occupying responsible positions of chief clerk, principal clerk, or clerks in charge of important work who never have been considered available for detached or foreign service because the officers under whom they served did not want to be deprived of the services of these clerks. Now, when they feel that they had a right to hope for an even chance with the other clerks of the corps on account of long and appreciated service they find that this very service has debarred them from advancement.

4. Being one of the clerks thus debarred from getting any part in the liberality of Congress I most respectfully request that the amendment be phrased to recognize ability and efficiency and to give these qualities an even chance with time service.

As I stated, Mr. President, this is only a sample of the many protests that I have received. It seems to me the amendment as drawn would do a great injustice to hundreds of clerks in the Quartermaster Corps.

I am told that the clerks who are considered most capable, the best qualified for the positions that they hold, are the ones employed in permanent stations, and they are held there at the request of the heads of divisions. Those clerks are not called out in the field and they have not been, as seen in the case of the gentleman writing the letter I have just read. He has been in the service since August, 1889, and under this amendment it would be impossible for him to receive any benefits.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator state what his salary is?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not looked it up, and I really do not know what his salary is; but I think if there are benefits to be granted clerks in the Quartermaster Corps by commutation of quarters, for light, heat, and so forth, the clerk writing me, if his statement is correct, is entitled to the benefits, and if he is denied them and they are allowed to others, he is discriminated against.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as to that, the statement is not correct. The War Department computes it at $338.

Mr. SMOOT. They compute the amount for computation of quarters and heat and light at $300?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and whatever the advantages are.

Mr. SMOOT. There are other advantages enumerated in the letter. I will ask the Senator whether they all enjoy the advantages to-day as named in the letter and are having free medical service for themselves and family.

Mr. WARREN. So far as medical service is concerned, the employees at distant points who desire the privilege have it, so far as I know.

Mr. SMOOT. Whether they are working at a permanent station or not?

Mr. WARREN. They do not have commutation of quarters. So far as buying of the quartermaster is concerned, I do not know that has ever been denied to anybody, either an enlisted man or officer or employee.

Mr. SMOOT. I judge from this that it has been or else he would not make the statement that he does. The clerk says—

Mr. WARREN. Three hundred and thirty-eight dollars is the amount which was sent from the War Department to the committee as being the benefit amount to each man.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that include the purchase of subsistence and other supplies from the quartermaster?

Mr. WARREN. It does not include it because there is nothing in that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the statement made in the letter is not correct?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think it is. He does not say as to the specific amount. How are you going to tell what the amount is or what any man might buy of the quartermaster?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course he could estimate that amount, as far as that is concerned.

It seems to me, if there is the discrimination as is outlined in the letter, it is unjust to the great majority of clerks in the Quartermaster's Department. If there is no injustice, I, of course, have nothing further to say; but if there is an injustice the provision ought to go out of the bill.

I will withhold the point of order against the amendment until I hear what the Senator from Wyoming has to say in relation to the benefits of it or why it should be adopted.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is always a vexatious matter to undertake to adjust the pay or allowances of the clerks of the Government, as it sometimes is with the clerks of private parties. The Senator I presume knows, as we all do, that there has been agitation and attempted legislation for years about an old-age retirement pension for civil employees of the Government, and the Senator knows that those clerks have never been able to agree because each class is very liable to figure its own position without figuring the others. Hence no legislation at all, when it might have been had years ago had a broader and more unselfish spirit prevailed.

Here in this matter of clerks under consideration there is a wide and distinct difference between a clerk in the Quartermaster's Department who has his home either in Washington or New York or wherever he is permanently located and where he can live with his family as differentiated from the man who has to go here and there and yonder, everywhere, where he can not take his family, where he must support his family at home in one place and support himself at the same time in another place.

Take it on the Mexican border, for instance; there have been over 90 different quartermaster's clerks serving on the border before the National Guard was detailed for service there, and now that number is perhaps doubled. They have the expense down there of furnishing themselves quarters, light, heat, and food and all the necessities and then to take care of their families at home exactly the same as if each clerk were living with his family.

There has been for a long time a desire on the part of the department to have something done to cover the extra expense of these employees. They happen to be in two lines, those who are clerks to the General Staff, and field clerks, and those in the Quartermaster's Department, who have to go out from their homes and are subject to similar conditions. One of these classes is provided for in the regular annual Army appropriation bill, and has been for years, and a list given of the grade of the clerks and the salaries paid.

That is provided for again in this bill, but the quartermaster's clerks and The Adjutant General's in all the other departments are provided for as to salaries and the grades and numbers are given in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The quartermaster's clerks go out and do exactly the same way as the headquarters clerks. They live away from home the same, and certainly ought to have the same privileges. I think the Senator will admit that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows, of course, that there are clerks in some of the departments who are called in the field and they are generally allowed a per diem for the actual days they are in the field service.

Mr. WARREN. That is for a very short time usually.

Mr. SMOOT. But this it seems to me is broader than that. If they have served 12 years and 3 years of that have been spent in a foreign country they shall receive the same allowances heretofore allowed by law for pay clerks of the Quartermaster's Department with the exception of retirement.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice that it is exactly the same as to this number of quartermaster's clerks—200—as to all headquarters clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. What I want to say to the Senator is that if these 200 clerks have served three years in a foreign country, with a total service of 12 years, and now are working in any permanent station, then they are granted the allowances provided for in the amendment. The other clerks, who have always been compelled to work at a permanent station—not because they wanted to do so, but because they were so qualified for the work that the heads of the departments required them to serve—and who have served 27 years at a permanent station, are not entitled to this allowance. That seems to me to be unjust.

Mr. WARREN. The clerks who are serving at those places have had the increase of their salaries from time to time without this—away from extra expense. They are a class that are not on the move all the time. Taken altogether, it is considered by the department—and we felt that it was just—that the extra compensation and allowances, by and large, year after year, during a whole service for these transitory clerks, if I may term them such, did not more than make their places equal to those who have permanent quarters.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the trouble in it is, as I understand, that it gives to a clerk who is stationed to-day at a permanent station an allowance if he has served 12 years, and 3 years of the 12 years have been served outside of the country, whereas there may be clerks working in the same office who have worked twice as many years as has this clerk, and one of them would draw an allowance and the other would not. It seems to me the amendment ought to be so worded that that discrepancy should be avoided. I can not help believing that it is a discrepancy and that it is unjust to the clerk who has served during a longer number of years.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the letters which have come to the Senator from Utah are very similar to those which have come to the committee and which have come to me. The clerks who have a local station, an abiding place, who live with their families, desire to receive everything which other clerks who are differently situated receive; and I suppose it is natural for them to want everything there is in sight. It is that competition—I might say that jealousy—that requires that each man shall claim the most that any other man receives, regardless of contingent circumstances.

The men who are on the go, the men who have to go to different points of the United States, have not the same opportunity to rise in the way of promotion, because their time is broken and their efforts scattered, while the men who are in service here in Washington or over at Philadelphia or New York are under the eyes of the chiefs of divisions; their work is examined in comparison one with another, and the deserving ones get promotion and receive a higher rate of salary than the man can possibly claim who goes from post to post and from field to field. Does the Senator from Utah think that the man living here in Washington or living in New York with his family, with no extra expense for his own living, should have the same pay as the man who, against his will, is required to go down on the Mexican border and in the towns there to take whatever may come, and who may have to pay two or three prices, perhaps, and, at the same time, to support his family at home? Does the Senator think that would be just?

Mr. SMOOT. If this amendment applied only to the Mexican border and was entirely an emergency matter, it would be a different question; but this is to continue forever hereafter unless it be changed by a subsequent law.

Mr. WARREN. It applies only to the number that are doing this extra work.

Mr. SMOOT. It will apply to the clerks who are in the Philippine Islands; it will apply to the clerks who are in the Hawaiian Islands; it will apply to the clerks who go from the State of New York to any other State. It seems to me that it would be an injustice to have this change apply hereafter, as a clerk who is living in New York must pay his rent; he must pay for the food he eats; and he must pay all expenses attached to his living. I will admit that, perhaps, there is a little more expense in traveling than there would be if living at home; but that is not all there is in this amendment.

For instance, a clerk called upon me the other day who had served in the Philippines for four years and he had also served somewhere in Europe—I have forgotten now where—for a number of years. He is now located at a permanent station. Under this amendment he says he will be allowed the same as is now allowed to the pay clerks in the Quartermaster Corps. He further says that working beside him in the same office is a clerk who has served as a clerk in the quartermaster's office twice as long as he, but that clerk will not receive the benefits under this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. That is not a fair statement.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the statement that he made to me.

Mr. WARREN. Doubtless that is so; but the reason it is not fair is that this provides for only 200 clerks out of the number the Senator has stated and only provides for those that are on the move. For instance, I mentioned 90 clerks on the border. The addition of this guard has called for sixty-odd men more. There are one hundred and fifty-odd men there. There is continually a call for more; but there is about an even 200 in the various places. For instance, if there is a camp anywhere, or if anything is going on at any point, no matter where, in this country or in any other country where clerks are required, they draw from this number who get this extra compensation. It only provides for that number—200.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps it would be just as well to allow this matter to go to conference and thrash it out there; but I am quite sure that there will be a discussion of the question between the conferees. The Senator from Wyoming knows that I do not want to do an injustice to any clerk in the Government service, and he also knows that I do not want any discrimination between the same class of clerks.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason I have in bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate is that it does look to me as though there is a discrimination here between the clerks of the Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah is proceeding in the right way about it. I have not the slightest interest, and the members of the committee have not the slightest interest, except that which the Senator has, to do justice with and between the clerks.

As the Senator says, the matter can go to conference. We do not know exactly what the House wanted, and for this reason: The House Military Committee undertook to handle this question, but the proposed legislation was ruled out on a point of order in the House. The rules there are somewhat different from what they are here. So the only thing the House could do was to put in the old number of clerks for the department and the field clerks together, which the department does not want. It wants them separated, and it wants a good many more in number and some of them to have larger salaries. We have got it in such shape, if the Senator please, that it may go to conference—the whole subject—and if it shall appear that the provision would work any injustice it can be remedied in conference. If the Senator himself would suggest something different I should be very glad to see it considered in the conference, for there is no favoritism in this case; certainly, none is intended.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be that none was intended, Mr. President, but I am sure on the wording of the amendment that there is favoritism.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be glad if the Senator's wisdom will suggest a remedy. It is a matter that we have studied over for many and many a month. If there is anything wrong, we want to know it, but we can not take alone merely ex parte testimony from interested clerks a long way from here, who state their opinions, erroneous as they must be oftentimes. We do not want to accept that alone. We are willing to consider all of that, but we want to consider the entire matter, and we should be very glad if the Senator from Utah, when the subject goes to conference, would suggest any way to better it.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the committee gave this section of the bill very careful consideration. The chairman then appointed the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Tennessee as a subcommittee to look into the matter, which they did very thoroughly, and they reported back this section as it now reads. After some discussion it was adopted.

I think there is one point that the committee had in view which the Senator from Utah does not take into consideration, and which will doubtless be brought out in the conference, for we all know that the Senator from Utah does not want to do anyone an injustice. The thought of the committee in considering this matter was, after the passage of this bill, to make these 200 field men who have served that length of time, field clerks. They will then spend all of their time in the field and not be called back to their homes, as the Senator suggests.

If that is the construction which the conference committee will place upon the provision, it will certainly do no injustice to the clerks in the office, but will be doing an act of justice to the clerks who will be required to be in the field all the time. The plan is that there shall be 200 field clerks in the field constantly, and that those 200 field clerks shall receive this allowance. The provision is fair to the field clerks and does not do an injustice to the department clerks. I hope the Senate members of the conference committee will be able to retain the provision in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only question in my mind about that is that the quartermaster may call, and no doubt will call, these 200 clerks into the field, and they thereafter will be classified as field clerks, as the Senator has said; but, if my information is correct, the clerks who will be called for this service are not the clerks who are best qualified as clerks in the Quartermaster Corps. Most of the clerks best qualified for the work are the clerks who have never had a chance to go into the field, who have never been called into the field, because the heads of divisions have wanted them to stay in the positions which they have occupied at the permanent station. That is my information. Whether it is true or not, I do not know; but that is one of the complaints made by the clerks who are not going to receive any benefit under this amendment. There must be at least a thousand of them, are there not, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. There are some seven hundred and odd, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, there are a thousand altogether?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think there are so many.

Mr. SMOOT. There are not far from that number.

Mr. WARREN. There are about 700 altogether.

Mr. SMOOT. And the 200 here would make 900 clerks.

Mr. WARREN. No; I repeat there are about 700 altogether.

Mr. BRADY. My information leads me to believe that the best clerks are sent into the field. I may be mistaken about that; but I think when the department sends men out on special service they try to get men who are entirely competent. I think the Senate, on investigation, will ascertain that these clerks do not want to be sent to the field; that they would prefer to stay in the office and take the office allowance rather than to leave their homes and go to the field.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think it is a fact that the Quartermaster General tries to send into the field the single men, men whose physical condition will allow them to stand the travel and hardship incident to going wherever they are sent. I think that is the truth of the matter; but so far as the qualifications of the clerks are concerned, I think the information I have is correct, that the very best clerks in the Quartermaster Corps are kept in the permanent stations because of the fact that the heads of divisions must have competent clerks to do the work that is required in the office.

Mr. WARREN. And they are of the class now receiving the highest pay.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator has very kindly consented to withdraw the amendment and to leave the matter to the conferees. I desire, however, to ask that the amount in line 13, on page 16, be changed from "$19,650" to "$53,742," and that the amount in line 11, on page 17, be reduced from "$151,000" to "$67,600," making quite a reduction in the two items.

I move, first, in line 13, on page 16, to strike out "$19,650" and to insert "$53,742."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, in line 11, on page 17, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$151,000" and inserting "$67,600."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 17, beginning in line 1 and ending in line 11, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 20, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$20,280,000" and inserting "$16,000,000."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that that be acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 66, in the item relative to "ordnance stores, ammunition," in line 13, after the word "manufacture," to insert "and purchase."

The next amendment passed over was, on page 90, after line 19, to strike out:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] are interested in that amendment. I see the Senator from New Jersey is present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is interested in that amendment. I do not like to suggest the absence of a quorum, but I think the Senator ought to be here when the amendment is being considered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think he will be here in a moment.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment of the Senate committee striking out the provision in the House bill on page 90, beginning in line 20 and ending in line 5, on page 91, will not be agreed to. The amendment of the Senate committee striking out the language of the House would make possible the installation of the so-called time-watch system in factories operated by the Government. Of course we can not prevent the installation and operation of such systems in private institutions, in mills and plants operated by private parties, but to me the whole thought is so barbarous that in my opinion our Government should have no connection with it, but should spurn it and drive it out of every plant under its control. I refer to the system known as the Taylor system.

Mr. Taylor, I believe, at one time was a laborer. He found it wise, for purposes of his own or for the profit of his employer, to inaugurate the so-called Taylor system, which is a time-watch system. We can all tolerate—I can, I know—a time watch being held over a race horse to find out what he may accomplish in a given time; but to have an officer of the Government hold such a watch over a workman in the employ of the Government, a workman who is doing his honest best for his employer, I feel is most humiliating and belittling and contrary to the spirit of American institutions.

I do not believe that the God of humanity breathed the breath of life into man that he should live to work, but that he should work in order to live, and there is a very wide difference between the two.

There was a time in my life when I believed there was no limit to human force. I was thrown upon my own resources very early in life. I was blessed with good health and a fair physique, and I thought there was no limit to human strength. I used to find myself fatigued almost to the limit, but I had the idea—God knows where I got it—that when I was tired I must still persist in toil and get a little more tired. I felt that that was a proper method of disciplining the human frame and disciplining my muscles. I have since learned that I did all that sort of thing at the expense of my general physical health. I believe I was foolish in indulging that thought. I believe there is such a thing to-day as human life wearing out. I used to think it was like a sort of storage battery, that it kept supplying itself; but I have come to realize that that is not the case. I feel that it is an absolute belittlement upon the part of the United States Government to employ a system under which one man shall stand over another man with a time watch in his hand, measure his every movement, and ascertain just how long he may take to put his shovel in a pile of sand and how long it may take him to flit it around in some other direction.

This system, which has been in vogue in some establishments for some time, has come to be denominated "the speeding-up system." That speeding up is desired in order to make dollars, mayhap for an employer, and in some cases the employer may be the United States Government. As I have said, we can not prevent the use of such a system in private institutions, but to speed up a man almost to the verge of collapse I feel is a crime against God and humanity.

An instance came to me within the past few weeks, Mr. President, of a man who has been employed by the Government for the past 20 years as a mail-bag repairer or maker. He was an efficient man and well satisfied with his employment. Finally he was placed under a time watch and was driven on to see how much he could accomplish. The result was that he suffered a mental collapse and was taken to the asylum. I can imagine just such a condition as that. I believe they have worked this system down to a science—

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the last statement of the Senator. Can he give the name of the employee?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not give his name, but that fact came to my notice in the past two or three weeks.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator give the source of his information? I think if anybody is being worked to that extent in any of the Government plants the facts ought to be known.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not give it now offhand, but I think I can supply that information to the Senator. The employee, as I have said, was driven to the verge of mental collapse and was taken to an asylum.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator say whether that employee was working at Washington or somewhere else?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. He was working for the Government in the manufacture and repair of mail bags.

Mr. THOMAS. In the city of Washington?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not say with certainty as to that; but I understand that mail bags are manufactured and repaired for the Government nowhere else than in the city of Washington. It was such an alarming proposition to me, so cruel and so brutal, that I felt I must mention it.

The idea of Mr. Taylor, embraced in what is called the Taylor system, has been worked down to a science. There are concerns in the United States which will for money install in any factory or organization the Taylor system. It has been so perfected, I believe, that they compute a human being, a man, as being one-tenth of a horsepower. I think they have succeeded in reducing it to that exactness; and with this process of eternal drill and drive, timing every movement and every action, they force to the last degree the muscles and sinews of men until they become completely worn out.

I believe it is well to accumulate money; but, great God! there is something more than money in human life, in flesh and in blood; and while individuals concerned may utilize such a system, I pray that it may never be employed by the Government of the United States. I can not believe that the Senate will indorse this hateful and inhuman method. When intricate and complex machinery of steel and iron gives out you send it to the scrap heap and melt it up in the melting pot and make a new machine, but when the human organism, when flesh and blood wear out and are brought to the verge of distraction by the steady grind in our furnaces and our mills—when the breadwinner gives out what, I ask, is to become of his family—his wife and his dependent children?

I read with very great interest some little while ago an address delivered, I think, by the cultured Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge]. I was wonderfully impressed with it; I felt that there was much force and argument in it; but I feel there is nothing in favor of this system except to grind out from the human frame additional dollars. That you may accomplish something more in the way of the production of wealth I will not deny; but you do it at the sacrifice of humanity; you do it at the sacrifice of human strength; and I pray to Heaven that the Senate will disagree to the amendment proposed by the committee, as I have indicated. And I move that the Senate committee amendment, beginning on line 20, on page 90, and ending on line 5, page 91, be disagreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, if the picture which has been held up before us by the Senator from New Jersey were true—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think the Senator can not question that it is true.

Mr. WEEKS. If the Senator will do me the honor to listen to me I think I can demonstrate to him that it is not true. If it were true, I assume that there would not be a vote in the Senate in favor of continuing a system such as the Senator has described.

I live within a few miles of the Watertown Arsenal, where the Taylor system was first installed in a Government plant. That system, by the way, is only one of many efficiency systems to-day installed in various plants throughout the country. The Senator has described, first, the holding in the hand of a stop watch to see how much work a man can be forced to do by timing his every move. I will admit that if it were such a system as that, or anything comparable to it, it would be inadvisable from every standpoint; but the stop watch is only an incident in trying to develop a system of doing work which will give greater efficiency and pay the employee more money. It in no way harms him, but decreases the cost of production. That is what I believe is the result of all these systems, and it can be so demonstrated.

The truth of the matter is, Mr. President, that the stop watch is only used to time what a man is doing in a particular movement to try to determine how long it should take an average man to do that particular piece of work. Any of us who will go into a shop or a manufactory and watch workmen will see how easy it is to get greater efficiency from a man in many cases. For example, if a man were going to put a piece of metal in a machine in front of him, and he turned around to the left and picked up that metal and then turned completely around to put it in the machine, it would take more time than if the metal were placed by his side and he could do it in one motion. The watch is used to determine how long a time it takes to put that piece of metal into the machine in the most direct way.

I went through the Ford shops in Detroit not very long ago. They are a marvel of industrial efficiency, I should say. There was one thing particularly which I noticed; that is, that most of the men, or very many of the men, stood at a machine and simply started and stopped it. They did not have to change their positions in any way. The operation was so developed that a man did one thing, and generally he did not have to move more than a foot or two in order to do that thing, especially when they came to assemble the parts of the cars; the material never stopped from the time it was placed on a traveling sidewalk, as you might call it, until somebody jumped into the seat of the car and off it went under its own power. Everything was so systematized that there was not a lost motion, and I should say there is not a lost motion in that manufacturing establishment. This arrangement makes a tremendous saving in the cost of manufacture; that is exactly what the people at the Watertown Arsenal, and I think now at one or two other arsenals, have undertaken to do in behalf of the Government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. JONES. I just wanted to ask the Senator whether they have ever had the stop-watch or the so-called Taylor system in use in the Ford establishment?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know. I have not any information about that.

Mr. JONES. The chances are that they got this efficiency without the use of that system.

Mr. WEEKS. Whether they use that system or not, there are several similar systems. "Taylor" is but a name. He was an efficiency engineer who died a few years ago. He was the one to develop the first general system of efficiency. You might call him a pioneer in it; but as systems are applied now to the many manufacturing establishments of the United States, that is simply a name which applies to some particular system.

In all cases, however, an attempt is made to get at the time in which an ordinary man should be able to perform a piece of work, and then the average man is asked to perform that work in that time. If he does it in less time, he is given a bonus. In many cases that bonus has amounted to a very considerable amount. In the case of the Watertown Arsenal, Gen. Crozier's report last year shows that practically one-third of the men in the arsenal were receiving bonuses. For instance, the molders received bonuses amounting to 27.62 per cent. Now, the wage in the arsenals, as it is in the navy yards, is based on the average wage in the community about the arsenal or navy yard. So that these men are not getting less pay than are other men in the same employments, but they are getting the same base pay.

Now, mark the benefit which this bonus system brought to the workmen in the Watertown Arsenal. Molders received 27 per cent more; machinists, 24.13 per cent more—164 machinists, or more than one-fourth of all the men employed there; machinists' helpers, 22 per cent; blacksmiths, 19 per cent; blacksmiths' helpers, 21 per cent; molders' helpers, 33 per cent; and so on down through the list. Every single employee, with the exception of one plumber's helper, who was working under the bonus system, received an excess which averaged about 25 per cent more than the average pay of men in his employment in that neighborhood.

Now, you may ask, Why is there opposition to this? The opposition comes very largely through the activity of certain labor leaders.

I think, if I were an artisan, I would belong to the union. I have not any doubt that the union has been of benefit in promoting the interests of laboring men, but I do not think the union labor leaders are always wise, any more than other men are always wise.

They originally opposed the introduction of machinery, or many labor men did, on the theory that it would limit their employment. They opposed the adoption of the piece system in manufacturing, although now I think they agree that it is fair and wise. They oppose this bonus step very largely, in my judgment, because it promotes individualism at the expense of collectivism. It gives a man the benefit of his skill and industry, which no one can deny he should be given.

All men are not born equal. All artisans and all employees of that character are not born equal. One man may have 50 per cent more capacity than another in the same employment. Under those circumstances, why should we say to the better man, "You shall not earn more money, but you must earn exactly what the man who is not your equal earns"?

In our Government employment we encourage men in other ways and in other places by giving them some kind of a premium. For example, we give a prize for excellence in gunnery; we give a prize for target practice and for efficiency in steaming. We give a prize in the shape of some kind of additional compensation in the Post Office Department if a man develops some time-saving apparatus. This is comparable to that general system which we are discussing to give efficiency some reward.

I remember, when I was mayor of the city of which I am a resident, that an attempt was made to determine a scientific scheme for cleaning the streets. Men had been employed in groups in doing this work. It seemed to me that if a man were given charge of a section and made responsible for the care of that section, it would benefit the city and would not add anything to the burden of the men. So we took several men and had them do a section, practically timed them, to determine how much street space an average man could keep clean. After doing that we did not take space cleaned by the best man; we took space cleaned by the average man as a basis. Then we divided the city into sections, and each man kept his section in order. Some men would do it in seven hours. It took some men seven and a half hours to do the same amount of work, and other men eight hours; but there was no injustice or unfairness, any more than there is in this system employed at our arsenals. There is no complaint made that there is injustice or unfairness. The only complaint made is that we are introducing a system which will reduce the cost of production by using the best methods.

Now, what kind of a position are we going to be in when this European war is over, Mr. President, if we are to say to our people, "You shall not adopt efficient methods"? We know that Germany, for example, has developed itself and its people enormously, because they have done just that thing. At the end of the war we are going to see millions of thoroughly trained men return to industrial pursuits, in addition to the competition which we are meeting to-day; and I believe that if the very leaders in labor circles who are in favor of this general legislation known as the Tavenner bill would take into consideration the broad problem of competition with European workmen they themselves would be in favor of the adoption of this system as it has been carried out at Watertown.

When the system was new in Watertown, living near the arsenal, and the arsenal being located in my congressional district, I frequently used to hear from the men in complaint of this or that other item in its operation. Many of those complaints were corrected. I still live in the same place near where the arsenal is located, and yet I do not think I have had a complaint from the men employed there for three years, and there never was any complaint that there was any unfairness shown to the men, but there was a fear that they were going to be worked beyond a normal capacity. I think that feeling has entirely disappeared.

I have letters here, which I will read or put in the Record, from employees of the arsenal, in which they say that they are entirely satisfied with what is being done, and they believe that the great majority of the men there, if they were left to themselves, would express satisfaction and gratification. The manufacturing interests of the whole country, the engineering interests of the country, the trade organizations of the country, are unanimously opposed to the injection into legislation of this so-called Tavenner bill. The only opposition comes from the source which I have suggested.

As I have said, the pay of the men thus employed has been increased from 25 to 30 per cent. It is not possible that all men can work on the bonus system, because all kinds of work can not be so subdivided that it can be done. Only about one-half of the men at the Watertown Arsenal work on the bonus plan.

Last year there was a petition from the Frankford Arsenal, located near Philadelphia, signed by some 400 workmen who were employed under this system, urging that legislation should not be passed to destroy it. I have just been speaking about European competition. I happened to see in this morning's paper a statement by Mr. Secretary Redfield, in which he talks about a reduction in the cost of living. He says:

It should be understood that the price of each particular article, whether food or other material, is governed by its own peculiar conditions. While the summit has been reached on all the articles, I think, the drop in prices will be more rapid with some than with others.

There is a general tendency, I find, among the manufacturers of the country to install methods of greater efficiency, which, of course, tends to produce more. With greater production, therefore, it must follow naturally that there will be a reduction in cost.

In other words, the Secretary of Commerce, who himself was a member of a congressional commission to investigate this condition at the Watertown Arsenal, and who reported that it was inadvisable to discontinue the system then in vogue, says that the manufacturers of this country have installed such methods of efficiency in their plants that they can reduce the cost of living, thereby benefiting all the citizens of the United States. I remember that in a political campaign a year or two ago he came into New England and criticized manufacturers for asking for protection, saying that if they would adopt the efficiency methods which prevail in Europe, in his opinion, there would be no justification for asking for protection. Of course, I do not subscribe to his protection theory; but now he tells us that there have been such efficiency methods introduced that it will result in a lessening of the cost and bring an increase of production at the same plant.

I have suggested, Mr. President, that there is universal approval of this efficiency system in all other walks of life than those represented by a few labor leaders. That includes engineers, manufacturers, and business men of all kinds. Let me read three or four of these opinions, just as an example view which these people take of efficiency methods. I will not bore the Senate by reading many, but I have several hundred letters here relating to this subject, all of the same general tenor.

Here is one from Mr. Elmer A. Sperry, a member of Secretary Daniels's Naval Consulting Board. He says:

I have received yours of the 19th with inclosures calling my attention to the Tavenner and Van Dyke bills. To my mind these measures if carried into effect would work great harm and injustice. I have not only been an employer of skilled labor for 35 years, but I have always been a great admirer of skilled mechanics and good workmen, and have spent much of my life in close contact with them. My aim has always been to recognize and reward meritorious service in every line. Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to see my men advance and receive more remuneration in recognition of extra effort and devotion to their tasks. In my judgment all attempts, such as are represented in these bills, to smother and do away with proper reward for increased skill and efficiency are not only against all reason but pernicious in the extreme. I know by personal experience that proper incentive for achievement is a wonderful stimulus to performance, and I believe this to be true in the case of every man, regardless of his calling.

This is one from another of Secretary Daniels's Naval Consulting Board, Frank J. Sprague, one of the leading electrical engineers of the United States. He says:

I can conceive of no more objectionable or injurious legislation than that proposed by Tavenner bill, H. R. 8665, and Van Dyke bill, H. R. 8677, opposing scientific management and efficient operation in shop management.

These bills represent the most vicious type of class legislation. They are founded on an utterly false assumption as to the relative celerity of the American workman and the foreign one, and the inevitable result would be to augment the already excessive cost of Government-made products.

At this time, when the greatest war in history has been unduly prolonged, with all the resultant sacrifice of life and property by the early demonstrated inefficiency in production on the part of the allies, these bills represent the most serious blow against national efficiency and preparedness against national disaster.

Here is an interesting letter from the Clothcraft Shops, Cleveland, Ohio. It takes up various phases of this question as applied to the health and the happiness of the laboring man, and, incidentally, to the possibility of accident. It has been claimed that men were speeded up and machines were speeded up until the liability to accident was very much greater than under the methods which ordinarily prevail. I think I can show that that is not true; at least, I have the testimony of many employers here to the effect that just the contrary is true. As to the health of the employees, there are numerous letters in this collection which say that on the average the health of the employees operating under this system has been demonstrated to be better than under the system which prevails elsewhere. Therefore, instead of being a detriment to the happiness of employees and a detriment to their health or a possible breeder of accidents, that charge would seem to fall to the ground. This man says, speaking of the happiness of the worker:

The happiness of the worker: The happiness and contentment of the worker has been materially improved. The knowledge of not only unimpeded opportunity but also of definite standards and other conditions under which they work, and the sure and high rewards which they receive, together with the entire change of attitude from old order of things, has made for us a body of workers that are not only above the average in spirit but whose apparent happiness has been remarked about by everyone. Time and again it has been stated by investigators and visitors that the group of workers in this plant are the happiest and most contented group of people they have ever seen anywhere. This change of attitude has been due entirely to the principle of cooperation based upon the mutuality of interests. Unhappiness is only experienced at such times when the workers think that there might be a change of conditions under which they work.

Then he speaks of the matter of health:

The health of the worker is not only apparent but has improved under the new order of things to such a degree as to be almost remarkable. The healthy appearance has not only caused remark by everyone who has seen our workers, but carefully kept medical records of follow-up show that the average state of health is far above that of the average in the community. This is definitely shown by the record of absentees for the first six months of 1915; the total number of absentees per day from all causes whatsoever average only 1.4 per cent of the pay roll.

Accidents, while never of serious nature, formerly were quite numerous. They have been reduced to practically nil, chiefly by the improved methods of instruction.

The wages of the workers have not only gone up to a far greater extent than in otherwise managed organizations and in the trade in general, but have increased enormously under the present type of management, and directly due to a fair basis and fair standards of requirement, standards being made possible by means of stop watch and other modes of scientific research.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senate to two or three letters from those whose particular business it is to teach scientific methods. This is a letter from the director of the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance in Dartmouth College, H. S. Person, in which he says:

I have never been in charge of an industrial plant, nor have I practiced management engineering; therefore what I have to say is not based upon that sort of experience. I have, however, in order to acquaint myself with scientific management for the purpose of instruction, visited many plants, talked with workmen, and made observations, particularly with respect to the effect of scientific management upon the workman. My conclusions are as follows with respect to the Taylor system of management, in which is used the stop watch for time study and in which is applied some form of premium or bonus wage payment:

(a) The happiness of the worker is greater than under conventional management.

(b) The health of the worker seems to average better than under conventional management.

(c) The statistical record of accidents shows that they are less under the Taylor system of management.

(d) Wages are greater for a given expenditure of time and energy.

(e) Hours of labor vary in different plants, according to the industry, but for any given industry seem to be less than for the average of that industry.

(f) The output is greater per hour of application of labor.

(g) The unit cost of the product is less than under conventional management.

(h) The quality of product is better than under conventional forms of management, for the reason that its method of inspection eliminates defective work.

I have a similar letter from the man occupying the same relative position at the University of Michigan and a similar letter from the Efficiency Society of New York.

Here is a very interesting letter from an electrical engineer with whom I am well acquainted, a neighbor of mine in Boston, relating to this subject. I want to read part of it, because it has some ideas which I have not noted in other similar letters.

So far as my experience goes in really scientific management, it is nothing more nor less than higher education of the workman, and makes him just as much more valuable to himself as scientifically directed exercise makes a man stronger physically, and to a greater degree than by any other modern invention the workman necessarily receives the greater part of the saving effected.

In relation to the stop watch and the general study for greater efficiency, it seems to me it would be easy to convince any intelligent and honest labor leader that the results of these studies are in every respect exactly the same as the employment of new labor-saving machinery.

It is just as sensible for the workmen to oppose scientific management and the stop watch for increasing production as it would be to oppose the use of any labor-saving machinery.

The one preponderating industrial advantage of the United States over the rest of the world and our ability to pay the highest wages is our greater use of labor-saving machinery and methods.

It must be self-evident to everybody if nothing is made there is nothing to divide, and it is generally true that the greater the amount of production the easier it should be for the workmen to get a reasonable share.

The effect of any restriction of the manner and methods of doing work in case of a great emergency—any limit of the speed of production—might be the determining factor of the contest.

The intense application and study of machinery and methods in my own experience have been known to increase mechanical productions a thousand per cent in a few weeks, and in every case this increased efficiency has gone hand in hand with an increase of the wages of the workmen on the job.

I hope that purely on the basis of the workmen's benefit that no legislation will be passed limiting in any way the employment of efficiency methods in Government work.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I ask who is the author of this letter?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; the person who signed it is Norman Marshall.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Is he a machinist?

Mr. WEEKS. He is a practical machinist himself. He was employed as such as a younger man, as I recall. He is an electrical engineer now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. He is not now engaged in the business? He is the boss of the shop, and not an employee?

Mr. WEEKS. He has run a shop. I think he is a consulting engineer now.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; he is not a practical working mechanic to-day?

Mr. WEEKS. Not to-day; no.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I thought that was the case.

Mr. WEEKS. But I will read some letters from practical working mechanics. I do not wish to take up much time, and I am afraid I am boring the Senate, but I want to demonstrate that there is not a syllable of opposition to this efficiency measure, except from the leaders in the labor field to whom I have referred.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. May I not answer that there is no opposition to my proposition except from a few wealthy employers?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am going to read some letters from employees in the Watertown Arsenal, and employees in other plants where this system is in operation, in which they say that it gives entire approval.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator also, at the same time, read from the House report showing that Gen. Crozier practically extorted some of those letters?

Mr. WEEKS. I will not read that. I will let the Senator from Missouri read it, if he cares to, in his time.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to submit it.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not believe Gen. Crozier ever extorted anything from anybody, but the House report may have so stated.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts is boring the Senate. I think he is giving his view of a very important subject, and it is much more fundamental than has hitherto been suggested. I want the Senator from Massachusetts to give the Senate some information along this line before he reads the letter that he has in view.

The Taylor system of efficiency, or any other system of efficiency of that character, embraces a great many other things than a stop watch or a bonus?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. A stop watch is only an incident to the system.

Mr. CUMMINS. Now, I want the Senator from Massachusetts to tell the Senate just what the stop watch is used for and just how the employees secure the bonus or reward which is proposed to be prohibited by the House bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senate bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the laboring men of this country are opposed to systems of efficiency, but a great many of them are opposed to the stop watch used for the purposes for which it is used.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me ask the Senator right there what does he understand the stop watch is used for?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am asking the Senator from Massachusetts, and I would be very glad to have his view of it before I express my own. He is on the floor and I would like to have him expound the subject first.

Mr. WEEKS. I will do that, Mr. President, with great pleasure. Let us suppose that a man is making some kind of a machine tool and is employed in the Watertown Arsenal for that purpose. The raw material might be over in that corner of the room. One of the first studies made would be whether if that man walked to the corner of the room and brought his material to his machine and put it in the machine the loss of time in bringing the material there was sufficient to warrant the employment of a helper, a lower-priced man. Then there would be the manner of carrying the product after it went through his machine to the next machine in which it was treated, and then to the next machine, the locations of each of those machines so that there should be no turning back and no change in the general course of the material on the way to completion. All of those things are carefully studied out before the watch is used at all.

It takes much longer to stoop and pick up material and put it in a machine than it would if the material were placed on a level so that the employee would not have to stoop at all. All those things are matters that are included in the preliminary studies.

As an illustration, in a report made on this subject relating to women sewing, if there were a dozen sewing it might produce a saving if one expert woman threaded the needles, and, again, to determine how long the thread should be. Of course it goes without saying if at every stitch a woman takes she draws her arm to its full length, she would not take as many stitches as she would if the thread were 15 inches long or 18 inches long. There is some length which can be given that thread to get the greatest and most efficient result.

All those things are simply studies that are undertaken before the watch is used. Then, having worked out all these primary processes, Blank is selected to go ahead and do the process under the system which has been developed which would prevent any waste in time in the methods of handling material, and so forth. How long it takes Blank to do it is ascertained, and then another man is brought in, and there is where the stop watch is used. First A, then B, then C, then D, then E, will do that very same thing in exactly the same way.

Now, if they are average men, and it takes, we will say, 200 minutes for them to complete the process, it is assumed that 200 minutes is the fair time for the average man to do that piece of work. There the watch stops.

Let us suppose that F comes in and does the same piece of work in 170 minutes. Then F gets the benefit of the difference.

The only objection that I can see to the method used at Watertown is that the workmen did not get all the benefit over and above what the average man can produce. For instance, as I recall it, we will say that 20 minutes of the time under 200 minutes is taken by the Government, and if he produced a result in 160 minutes then he got the bonus that went with the 20 minutes between 160 and 180 minutes. In many cases the reduction in time was very materially greater than that. In some cases the men added 50 per cent to their average wage under this bonus system.

But the stop watch is not used after they determine what an average man can do.

While I do not know, and I do not want to state it as a final proposition, I doubt if the stop watch has been used in the Watertown Arsenal for two years, or that there has been any occasion for it. It may have been used in some new process that was being undertaken. Practically speaking, it is not used, and I have related the only purpose it is used for.

It has been heralded abroad that the stop watch was used to find out what could be done with the man who may have the greatest speed, and then somebody stood over others with a watch to see if they could make that speed, and that that is the common practice. There is nothing of that kind done. It is simply used to determine the average time it takes an average man to perform a given piece of work.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Ford operation the Senator instanced I saw carried out at the San Francisco Fair. That was an advertisement of the company to show that they could assemble machinery, I think, every 10 minutes. I saw them start with the wheels on a double platform, and one would drop out and another man would go on. It was an advertisement for the Ford Manufacturing Co., but that human flesh was strained to a degree in order to accomplish it no one could have stood by for a single moment without admitting it to be the fact.

Mr. WEEKS. I walked along with those men during the assembling of that car or the assembling of a dozen cars. I was tremendously interested in the manner of the assembling of those cars. It seemed to me to be about the finest piece of efficiency I had ever seen, and to say that any man was hurried is absolutely untrue.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not say they were hurried, but I think the Senator or myself with our rotund capacity would have been very much hurried.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator is discussing the method of assembling the Ford car. I ask him if he means to say to us that the Taylor system is in vogue in the Ford factories?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know that it is the Taylor system, or the Brown system, or the White system, or the Black system; but it is a system that takes account of the waste of a single movement.

Mr. REED. Does it appear that that is the method we are now discussing, or is it merely a method that has been devised in Mr. Ford's shops for the assembling of his cars?

Mr. WEEKS. I am sure I do not know what the name of the system is, but it is a system, an orderly way of procedure.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator is merely discussing the question of organized efficiency and not professing to tell us that the system in the Ford factory is the system it is proposed to prohibit or encourage, as the case may be, by this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I am discussing efficiency. Mr. Taylor is dead. He went to his reward years ago. I do not know that his system is being used or where it is being used. I do not know anything about it. I am talking about efficiency.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether the construction of the proviso which is under consideration is that it applies only to the Taylor system. My reading of it is that it prohibits the use of any system and all systems.

Mr. REED. My understanding is that the House amendment is intended to have a practical application to the conditions existing in at least one of the arsenals where a system that is either the Taylor system or a modification of the Taylor system has been installed by which some alleged expert determines how long it ought to take a man to do a particular piece of work, and thereupon he is set at that work and when the time has elapsed within which under the order of this expert the work shall be concluded, the watch that is keeping the time of the workman is stopped, so that he gets no credit for any time beyond that period. I understand that to be the stop-watch method, and that that method is in vogue in one of the arsenals, and to stop that the House put in the provision which the Senate committee proposes to strike out.

Mr. THOMAS. That is my understanding.

Mr. WEEKS. I have just stated, I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri heard me, that I doubt very much except possibly in some new study whether the stop watch has been used at the Watertown Arsenal for two years. I have not heard of its being done, though it is possible it has been done.

Mr. REED. Let me add, if the Senator will pardon me, if the stop watch is not being used in any of these arsenals, and if the bill as it came from the House provides that the stop watch shall not be used, it will change nothing if we leave it in the bill as the House wrote it; it will change no condition. There is manifestly an object in striking out the House provision, and there is likewise an object in the Senator's speech.

Mr. WEEKS. Undoubtedly; and if the Senator will be good enough to listen I will tell him what the reason is. New processes are undertaken all the time in arsenals, some new piece of machinery or some new tool is to be manufactured in a different form than the article that was previously manufactured. It is necessary to determine the time that it should require to manufacture it. So in that case a stop watch might be used.

Then again, this system has not been installed in the Rock Island Arsenal or in the Watervliet Arsenal, and only to a minor extent in other arsenals. If it works well at Watertown, of course, it is desirable that it should be installed elsewhere.

Mr. REED. The Senator has just said that they did not have it at Watertown.

Mr. WEEKS. I said to the Senator that they had had it at the Watertown Arsenal, and they had determined the time it will require to do these processes, and having done so it was not necessary to use the stop watch in those processes which had been examined and the time determined.

Now, I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rose to remark to the Senator from Massachusetts, as far as the particular proviso is concerned in its relation to the stop watch it would have very little effect anyhow, because it simply suspends the pay of the officer holding the stop watch while he is holding it, and that would be a very immaterial matter. But I think the spirit of the proviso goes much further and is directed against the system. I want to consider it from that point of view rather than from the technical interpretation of the proviso itself.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it should be so considered. I think the stop watch has been worked overtime in the criticism of this system.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Massachusetts has about the same understanding I have of the office of a stop watch under this system. The evil, of course, if there is an evil, is not in the preliminary efficiency arrangement so that there will be the least possible movement or least possible unnecessary movement. The labor leaders with whom I am acquainted at least have no objection to efficiency in its most pronounced form. They have no objection to so adjusting all the parts of a factory that there will be the least possible loss of energy.

However, I want the Senator's opinion on this point, because I am really looking for light. The difficulty is in the erection of a standard for wages. It is in the attempt to arrive at an average man's work. I do not think that can be done. I think the whole purpose and effect will certainly be to hold every man to a higher standard than the average man is capable of reaching.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. What does the Senator think of this as an answer to that proposition? Substantially every man who works under the bonus system at the Watertown Arsenal makes a bonus over and above what is considered an average man's work. The average increase is about 25 per cent; in some cases as much as 50 per cent. If the average man is overworked, how is it possible that all these people can earn more money?

Mr. CUMMINS. That might very easily be explained by the efficiency readjustment, scientifically arranging the work for the men.

Mr. WEEKS. That efficiency readjustment is made as far as possible before the time is set.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely, and therefore the stop watch is absolutely unnecessary to accomplish those reforms. It can be used and is used for no other purpose than to erect a high standard, which, I am told—I have no practical experience—no man can reach.

Mr. WEEKS. There is not a man in the Watertown Arsenal, except one or two plumbers' helpers, who does not get it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is greatly to the credit of the superintendent. He must be a very humane man. That is not true, I am sure, generally where the system is in vogue.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me suggest this to the Senator from Iowa. Suppose he wants to determine how long it would take a man to mow an acre of ground, how will he arrive at the time an average man would take to mow an acre of grass unless he uses a watch?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no such thing as an average time it would take for a man to mow an acre of grass. If you would have two men and they would each mow an acre of grass, the same kind of grass and the same kind of ground, you could of course divide the aggregate time by two and get an average. If you employ 100 men or 500 men in order to get anything like an average time—

Mr. WEEKS. That is not an absolutely accurate statement. Half a dozen men would come pretty near it in the average time.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like, if the Senator will permit me, to ask the Senator from Idaho to what report he referred?

Mr. BORAH. I referred to the hearings before the Committee on Labor.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that the Committee on Labor of the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. No; the Committee on Labor of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. In what year?

Mr. BORAH. In the year 1916—under date of March 30 to April 1, 1916.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am going to read some letters that I have received from employees, which other Senators may have received, and entirely without solicitation on my part. I do not know the writers of such letters in any case, with one exception; but I wish to read what they say about this efficiency system. The first letter I shall read is as follows:

90 PROSPECT STREET,
Somerville, Mass., April 28, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take this opportunity to write you, hoping that in so doing I may be able to give you some information that will be of help to you when the honorable body of which you are a member is called to pass judgment upon it.

I refer to the bill about to be introduced in Congress by Congressman TAVENNER, of Illinois, seeking to abolish the system as applied at the Watertown Arsenal. To interfere in any way with the present existing conditions would be a serious blow, both to the management who, by the present system, is enabled to keep and refer to records, a privilege enjoyed by outside competing firms, and a great financial loss to the employees who benefit by it.

During the past year, out of 178 employees, 134 working on a premium basis received 27 per cent over and above their daily rate without any apparent effort other than would be necessary to perform a day's work without the system. While there may be some of the men who, through obligations placed upon them, by what some call "organized effort," do not want to go on record for or against, they sincerely hope that they will be allowed to enjoy the benefits made possible by the premium system.

Trusting that this matter will be considered from every angle, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

JAMES MCFARLAND.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Who is the writer of that letter?

Mr. WEEKS. He is an employee, I understand, at the Watertown Arsenal. I do not know him; I never saw him. Here is another letter, which is as follows:

16 LADD STREET,
Watertown, Mass., April 21, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In February of 1915 I took the liberty of addressing some communications to the Members of Congress upon the question of the abolition of the so called Taylor or premium system, then and at present in force at the United States Arsenal at Watertown, Mass., where I am now and for 20 years past have been employed as a machinist. The opponents of the present premium system were not successful in that attempt to abolish it, and we have continued to enjoy its benefits from that time to the present.

Another attempt, however, is now being made to deprive us of the benefit of this premium system, and it is for the purpose of enlisting your voice and vote in favor of the system and for the benefit of those of us, by far the majority of the employees of the Arsenal, who have prospered under the beneficent provisions of the premium system that I now address you.

Permit me, therefore, to briefly set forth some of the facts concerning the situation as I know it to exist at the Watertown Arsenal. There is at present employed about 178 machinists; of this number 134 are working under and are in favor of retaining the present premium system.

The balance of the employees are largely in favor of retaining the present systems, but for personal reasons do not wish to take an active part in an effort to retain it or to be openly identified as its supporters. A very small part of the present working force desire the abolition of the present system.

I am not going to state the reasons why this small minority runs counter to the wishes of the great majority of the employees. Their reasons for so doing might be ascertained.

In common with the others who are in favor of the present system, I have been able to earn an average of 27 per cent over ordinary wages, and that, too, without feeling that I have at all overworked myself. I desire, as do the other employees who desire that the present system be retained, to spend my time while in the shop in an earnest effort to render a good day's service for a good day's wage and to reap the benefit that comes to me as a result of the system now in vogue by continued, conscientious effort. I do not feel at all as if I were a slave driven to my utmost endeavor by a hard-hearted taskmaster; rather do I enjoy my work, conscious that by its fair performance and possibly a little added effort I may win the prize which will more than compensate me for any extra care or diligence that I may exercise. I have been reaping these benefits since the installation of this premium system, and I desire for the benefit of myself and my family to continue to reap them in the future; and I feel, as does a great majority of my coworkers, that the right to earn these premiums should not be taken from us arbitrarily upon the invitation of a few men who are either ignorant or of entirely misinformed regarding this matter which so vitally concerns the interest of the workers at this Arsenal. There is, save for the discontent of these few men, a feeling of harmony existing at the Watertown Arsenal between those in authority and the workers which is unsurpassed, I believe, in any other governmental or private institution in the country. These relations will be shattered if the present system is abolished, and they ought not, I respectfully submit, to be disturbed.

Under the present system the records of the men are open to the inspection of those who have the right to see them, and each individual is assured that his earning capacity is limited only by the length of the working-day and his own faithfulness and diligence.

You will not find among those who desire the abolition of the present system any of the employees who have, by faithful work, earned and merited substantial premiums, but you will find among the agitators for the destruction of the present situation those who have not earned premiums and who are contented seemingly to do as little for their day's wages as they possibly can do and retain their positions. In these days "efficiency," which, after all, means common sense and skill applied to the task in hand and lack of waste in its performance, is a slogan of all industrial concerns. Private enterprises employ efficiency experts to advise employers, not so much on the question of speeding up the workers as of conserving the workers' energies and directing them intelligently to the end that greater production may be had. If the wishes of the opponents of the present premium system are heeded and the system itself abolished, the Government will find itself, in competition with private enterprises, unable to compete with them in the open market, because of the better conditions which obtain in private shops and the lack of incentive in governmental shops to the worker to give the best that there is in him, skillfully, energetically, and cheerfully.

We produce at the Watertown Arsenal under the conditions which now obtain in a manner and to an extent second to none under normal conditions. I predict that if the present system is abolished the best men, the ambitious men, will leave the governmental employ and will seek other fields where their skill and fidelity will be recognized and more worthily compensated. At the Watertown Arsenal we have no real grievances.

If the workers individually or collectively feel that they have a grievance they are encouraged by those in authority to make that grievance known. If it is a just one, it is remedied; if it is unjust, the injustice of it is pointed out and the men are ordinarily satisfied.

This spirit of helpful cooperation will be destroyed, in my judgment, by the abolition of the present system.

I have never known conditions, during my 20 years of service in the Watertown Arsenal, to be as satisfactory as a whole to the workers as they have been during the past four years, during which time we have worked under the premium system.

For these reasons I appeal to you to work to sustain and keep in force the present premium system of wages in the shops of the Government. The basis of the pending bill to abolish this system can not be an intimate knowledge of what it accomplished, and I respectfully submit that its passage would destroy the great benefits which we now enjoy, would take away from us the worthy ambition which we now possess, and would be a grave wrong, since it would, by reducing our income, seriously affect our future welfare, our happiness, and that of those dependent upon us.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN DRISCOLL.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask to whom the letter which the Senator from Massachusetts has just read is addressed?

Mr. WEEKS. That letter is addressed to me, and the previous letter also was addressed to me. I do not know the writer of the previous letter at all. I have here some additional letters—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I took occasion a little time ago to print in the Record numerous letters from individuals, most of them employees, on this subject, and I have since then received other letters which I have not presented. Personally I have felt that the effort to abolish this system was a mistaken movement, along the line of making the least efficient man the standard for all the others; and I do not think that is good policy. I think the men who are opposing this are making a great mistake so far as the interests of the workmen are concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask a question just on that point?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The letter which has just been read indicates a very emphatic approval of the bonus system; that is, these employees, I take it, are working by the piece?

Mr. WEEKS. Not by the piece at all, but by the bonus system, which is an entirely different process.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not quite understand that, because if they are given a bonus it must be because they have turned out during the day more than the standard required.

Mr. WEEKS. The difference is that the piece system pays a man so much for doing a certain piece of work, for instance, making a tool or something of that sort, while the bonus system pays him a premium for completing a process within a particular time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely, but when he finishes his day's work, according to the standard, he has accomplished so much; it does not make any difference whether you call it by the piece or not, and if he has done 27 per cent more than the standard requires, he gets 27 per cent more pay than has been fixed for the product of a day's work.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator must see that the stop watch is not at all essential and necessary to the operation of a system like that.

Mr. WEEKS. I am not making any advocacy of the stop watch or any other particular part of this system, but I think the stop watch is one of the incidents which it is desirable to use in arranging the system.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that system has been in force for 50 years to my knowledge—

Mr. WEEKS. The piece system?

Mr. CUMMINS. Without ever calling it an efficiency system; that is, paying a man according to the work he does during the day, instead of paying him a certain wage for the entire day. That is as old as the hills.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I will not take any further time to distinguish between the piece system and the bonus system, although there is quite a marked difference in the results obtained. I understand that organized labor does not object to the piece system as operated under the method which the Senator suggests he has known about.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want the Senator to misunderstand me. I recognize the difference between the piece system and the bonus system, although they are founded upon the same principle. For instance, my father was a carpenter, and when I was a young man I was a carpenter, too, but any man who hired the two of us would pay him more than he would pay me. Why? Because he could do more work in a day than I could do. That is the bonus system.

Mr. WEEKS. Did the Senator object to that?

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not.

Mr. WEEKS. Then the Senator ought not to object to this system. I do not know whether he does object or not, but he ought not to do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. That does not follow, because I hope we make progress as the years go on; but I am simply using that to illustrate the fact that there is no difference in principle in paying one man more than another, if he is more competent than another, and paying a man by the piece.

Mr. WEEKS. I have here, Mr. President, some other letters from employees. I will read half a dozen of them. These letters were not written to me; they were written to different people, one of them being the secretary of the Scientific Management Society, Mr. W. H. Gruel. The following letter was written to Mr. Ray B. Fraser. It is signed by S. F. Gilla, who, in expressing his views about scientific management, says:

With my experience in scientific management have found a betterment of conditions in S. C. Env. Co. very efficient in labor and produce. With my part of work at time study on task and bonus have found it very interesting and educating.

The old method of payment means just one pay envelope on pay day, while the bonus plan makes a willing worker and puts an extra red envelope into his hands with lots to gain and nothing to lose.

Here is a letter from Pearl Hoey, employed at Hamden, Conn., by the Acme Wire Co. The writer says:

I have been employed by the Acme Wire Co. for the past two years and where the bonus system is used, and I must say I like it very much, as it makes the work very interesting, resulting in increased production for the company and a higher rate for the employee.

It has not in any way interfered with my health, as the time limit is based on a fair average of the operator's skill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The writer of that letter is employed in a private plant?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; in a private plant. Here is a letter signed by H. C. Hawes, who seems to be an employee of the Sewell-Clapp Envelope Co. In the letter he says:

There is no place in scientific management for the lazy man or any one looking for a soft job, but there are good positions made every day for the honest worker, whether he be a laborer or mechanic, and under the task and bonus-payment plan the extra recompense for his extra efforts. I would not have you think from this remark that you are driven or overworked, but, as in our factory, the improved conditions, due entirely to improvements made in the tools and equipment, make an increased production with less effort or work to the employee, whomever he may be; and not that alone, but it opens the way to better positions for men of every phase of employment who can handle themselves in positions of trust and authority.

I can speak without a possible chance of contradiction, of my own position, after showing the engineers that I could work under and with their plans, my position as a foreman under long hours was improved, and I was placed in one of the most responsible positions in our plant and my hours changed from nine and one-half hours to eight hours a day, and giving me the opportunity to increase my earning capacity and my future fixed if I continue to be honest and on the job.

Here is a letter from a man who styles himself a "gang boss." He is from New Haven, Conn., and writes as follows:

As gang boss for the past five years, I have had a very good opportunity to study the conditions of which an operator has to work under, both before and after this system had been installed in this factory, and I am glad to say that I have found every one of my operators to be better satisfied since working under this system. There has also been less strain on the operators and gang boss due to the fact that before this system was installed the gang boss would never know whether his operators were producing enough work to satisfy his employers, and the result would be that he would be pushing them for more work continuously, and as the gang boss has no way of telling just what an operator should produce, all he could do would be to use good judgment. But not so with the stop-watch and bonus system; it is different. The operator knows just what he has to do, and the gang boss also; there is no pushing for work, the operator has plenty of time to do his work in and plenty of fatigue allowance.

My operators also make more money and do not have to work so hard, and the result is that they are healthier, better dressed, and more prosperous, and thereby also become better citizens.

That letter is signed by John George Kries.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what occasion there was for all these letters being poured in on him?

Mr. WEEKS. They have been collected by various people who are interested in preventing the Senate taking the foolish action which they fear it will take.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. In other words, they have been instigated by people who are interested in perpetuating the Taylor system?

Mr. WEEKS. They are sent here by people who are interested in building up efficiency management in this country.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And in perpetuating the Taylor system?

Mr. WEEKS. I am not talking about the Taylor system. Some of them do not mention it.

Here is a letter from a man in Whitneyville, Conn. His name is Torvald Hoyer, and he works for the Acme Co. I will not read his entire letter, but just certain paragraphs of it, as follows:

I started to work for a concern that was putting in a bonus system (Taylor system) in 1912. When I started to work the shop was still on daywork basis, and all the jobs were daywork. I was at that time earning $8 a week, but a few weeks later I was transferred to some part of the shop where they all worked on piecework. After a little experience I could here earn from $11 to $13, but when the whistle blew at night I would be all tired out because I started in full speed in the morning and kept it going as long as possible in order to get as big an amount done as possible, but I would always be too tired to go anywhere at night.

After a while the company was ready to put the whole factory on bonus basis, and I started to work after the new system, together with the whole room. At first we did not like it at all, but after a week had passed we all found out that we were not only making the same money and doing the same quantity of work but we never got tired out as we used to, because there was a certain time set to do the operation in, which made us start in with a speed that would enable us to finish the job in time, and by keeping it going with that speed all day we would most of the time produce more than we did after the piecework system without being tired out, and after the bonus system we would always be sure to get at least our day-rate pay, even if we had bad luck with the work or didn't feel good, as we were always paid our day rate even if we didn't make the job in bonus time (the time the operator is allowed for a certain operation). The bonus time was set by a time-study clerk who timed two or three medium operators with a stop watch. He did not only time the whole operation, but he also timed every necessary movement the operator did to do the operation, and by doing so he would get the exact time it would take any medium operator to do the job. On top of that was allowed a certain per cent for lost time, etc., so by any means this was the only fair way to set the time. It was fair to the operator because she or he could be sure that it was the right time for the operation, and it was fair to the company because they were sure to get the work done in the time it ought to be.

There is more of it, but I will not read more. I gave the name of the signer.

Here is a girl named Theresa Godino, who works for the Acme Wire Co., of Hamden, Conn. She says:

I have worked four years at machine work for the Acme Wire Co. The last three years under the Taylor bonus system I have made more money under better conditions than the first year I worked here.

I have worked on piecework in another factory, and I am better satisfied with the bonus system here.

Alma Wetherbee, of New Haven, Conn., says:

In regard to the use of the Taylor system, I want to say that I have worked under the said system for three and one-half years, and like it. As far as its being injurious to the health, I have not found it so; instead, find it gives one more ambition and makes the days shorter.

Hoping that the system will not be discontinued, I remain,
Yours, truly,

ALMA WETHERBEE.

Here is a girl named Nellie Miller, of South Brewer, Me. She writes this letter to Mr. Keppeler Hall. I do not know who he is.

In December of 1914 we began work under the "Taylor system." Of course, at first we did not favor the system, but I think we were justified, because at that time we were unable to understand its advantages. It was very difficult to figure the time correctly, and as we had been used to working piecework it was quite a matter to get the orders completed on time.

However, as time went on we began to appreciate the "Taylor system" inasmuch that we were able to turn out more work for the company and enjoy a better salary, thereby benefiting both the company and its employees.

Under this scientific management the service department was installed, which includes numerous benefits for us. The working hours have been shortened, the sanitary conditions are much improved, one of the main benefits being derived from a well-equipped hospital and trained nurse. A great deal of pleasure is gotten from the library and sport club, giving the advantages of good reading, wholesome exercise, and a social hour now and then.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read any more of those letters. I should like permission to put any of them that I think desirable in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDWICK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See appendix.)

Mr. WEEKS. I think I have enough communications of that kind, coming from various sources and all of similar tenor, to fill several CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS.

Mr. President, I have taken much more time than I intended in this discussion. I want to say that I have no interest in this matter except to further the Government's interests in the manufacturing enterprises which it undertakes. I think myself that it would be a piece of folly to prevent the Government's adopting the efficient methods which are being adopted by our own manufacturers and which have been so successfully used abroad. Here we are practically compelling the Government to do certain of its manufacturing itself. We have practically provided that it shall build its own ships, for example, at its own navy yards by providing ways and other equipment for that purpose; and if we adopt this proposition, preventing the Government using the methods which have proved efficient elsewhere, we are going to increase tremendously the cost of our Navy and the cost of everything we manufacture for our military establishment. We are not only going to add to the cost, but we are going to delay the obtaining of the material which the Government needs. It is a piece of folly from beginning to end, and I sincerely hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WEEKS subsequently said:

Mr. President, I ask permission to include in my remarks a table relating to the men employed under the bonus system in the Watertown Arsenal, and also the paragraph of the bill which was stricken out by the Senate committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

APPENDIX.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS. BIRD & SON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
East Walpole, Mass., December 15, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. WEEKS: I hope you will exert your influence against the proposed enactment of a provision requiring the insertion in all Government contracts for material and other work, of a clause stipulating that no work shall be performed under the Taylor and other systems involving time study and premium plans.

Industrial organizations in the past have been largely autocratic. Industrial unrest is a protest against this autocracy of government. Scientific management is the first step toward making more fair and just the relation between the elements that make up the industrial organization.

The world is everywhere working toward democracy. Industrial organizations, somewhat more slowly, are tending the same way. In the political world we suffer from inefficient democracy; but we can stand the strain, and experience will finally show us the way to efficient democracy. In industrial management we have got to jump the period of inefficiency which unformed democratic control would bring. And it is through the application of the principles of scientific management that we are going to leap this gap.

The time study and premium plan of wage payment is an important principle in scientific management, and is a step in the right direction toward giving individuals greater liberty and opportunity to earn what their service demands. From this the inevitable development is toward industrial democracy.

To pass any such provision as is proposed is totally opposed to the spirit of our Government, which should place itself not in opposition to the development of a better chance for the individual in industries and furthering the idea of industrial democracy, but should do everything possible to support it and stand on the side of progress and enlightenment.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES S. BIRD, JR.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH, MASS., December 24, 1915.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to enter our protest against, and express ourselves as flatly in opposition to, the bills which presumably will be introduced by the so-called friends of labor, and which will demand special provisions that all kinds of work, etc., placed by the Government, must be contracted for in establishments not conducted under scientific-shop management.

We represent about 325 satisfied employees who are trying to work cooperatively with us to better conditions through the application of scientific-management methods.

It is our belief that any action of the kind under consideration would be a distinct backward step.

Yours, truly,

THE STETSON SHOE CO.
A. C. HEALD, Treasurer.

HERMANN, AUKAM & Co.,
Lebanon, Pa., April 27, 1916.

Mr. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Committee on Military Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: England's recent bitter experience of industrial inefficiency and our own present needs inspire me to protest against the ill-considered efforts to hamper by means of congressional legislation the growth of American industrial leadership. I refer to the attempt to bar the use of stop watches, bonus and premium payment plans, and similar aids to the realization of scientific management from Government plants and Government work. Economic ignorance can be the only excuse for this ultimately futile attempt to turn backward the wheels of progress.

With our minds on the possibilities of our present delicate international situation, and with the knowledge that, scientifically organized and encouraged, American industry now has and will have the markets of the world at its feet, we would do well to reflect on the economic meaning of some of the following facts taken, for example, from the experience of Herrmann, Aukam & Co.'s Lebanon factory, manufacturing handkerchiefs: Production increased 150 per cent within two years, mainly through the application of bonus work and the establishment of standards by means of the stop watch; wages of employees increased in ratios varying from 25 to 150 per cent; continuous employment assured; individual capabilities watched and developed; working conditions bettered—surroundings made more sanitary and cheerful; just treatment of employees assured—possibility of discrimination and oppression eliminated; cost of product being learned and reduced; quality of product greatly bettered—better value delivered to the consumer; service to customers much improved.

The labor turnover among the employees affected by scientific management in our plant is much smaller than among those not affected, meaning that the employees themselves like it. There is a real demand in our plant for the extension of stop-watch methods.

Maximum production of high quality at low cost, going hand in hand with higher wages, good working conditions, and satisfied employees are the net results of scientific management. In their larger aspects these mean American industrial supremacy and freedom from the fear that an international crisis will find manufacturers unready and their workers unwilling, as was the case with England.

Very truly, yours,

D. J. WALSH, JR.

AMERICAN ELECTROCHEMICAL SOCIETY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 13, 1916.

THE TAVENNER AND VAN DYKE BILLS.

The American Electrochemical Society, through its committee on public relations, wishes to present its earnest protest against the Tavenner bill—H. R. 8665—and the Van Dyke bill—H. R. 8677.

Humanity's progress and welfare are dependent in a great degree on the effective and economical utilization of time and of materials; the reduction of waste in human efforts and in material resources is therefore of first importance.

The watch for the measurement of time is no less important than is the balance for the measurement of materials, and to deprive any branch of industry of either of these instruments would be to place that branch under such a handicap that its welfare must necessarily suffer.

We therefore most earnestly request your best efforts in opposition to such legislation.

FRANCIS A. J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman.

EDWARD G. ACHESON,
LAWRENCE ADDICKS,

CHARLES F. BURGESS,

HENRY S. CARHART,
CARL HERING,
F. A. LIBBURY,
WILLIAM H. WALKER,
W. R. WHITNEY,

Committee on Public Relations, American Electrochemical Society.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 5, 1916.

DEAR SENATOR: We are earnestly opposed to the riders attached to military and Post Office appropriation bills which forbid time study and bonus payments.

Everyone concedes that, in general, plants under scientific management (a) work shorter hours and (b) pay higher wages than others. The only real argument against time study and bonus payments apparently is the one that they injure the health of the workman. May we submit some very positive proof to the contrary?

Four and six years ago our employees submitted themselves to physical examination. We discharged no one because of poor health, but we did find a large number who were in very poor physical condition. Now, during these past four and six years we have been developing and extending scientific management. Of those in our employ who four and six years ago were in very poor health 52 were still in our employ in January, 1916, and at that time they were all re-examined. Our doctor, by our health records, is able to show and prove an actual improvement in the health of 51 out of the 52 above mentioned. This record seems astonishing, but it is true, and we have the evidence on file.

It is our sincere belief that scientific management is one of the greatest forces at work considering the real welfare of workers, and that the opposition to it is based on utter misunderstanding.

There has never been a time when efficiency was more needed in the country than now. Why pass antiefficiency legislation at this time? Surely, if bonus payments and time study really prove bad in the end, the Government can act later, as proposed, but why now?

We appeal to you on patriotic grounds and for the good of the workers of this country to oppose this legislation at this period.

Very truly, yours,

GERMAN-AMERICAN BETTON CO.,
HENRY T. NOYES, Treasurer.

KINAK MOTION PICTURE CO. (INC.),
New York, January 21, 1916.

A. W. KIMBER, Esq.,
Secretary Efficiency Society,
119 West Fortieth Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: We understand that there is an aggressive labor lobby at Washington which would discredit scientific management and modern factory methods.

We believe that we personally sympathize more keenly with the employee than with the employer, and therefore are disappointed to see anything done that would be to the disadvantage of the employee. It certainly is to a man's own best interest to be paid for what he does; the abuses in our industrial system go back primarily to the fact that a man is not paid for what he does. The keynote to the efficiency plan of management is that a man should be paid for what he does, and next, what he does shall be increased to a larger aggregate and therefore to a larger advantage to himself merely by cutting out the lost motion due to lack of coordination of the parts. Unless the American and the American workman can learn the advantage of team play, he will be lost in the competition with the more efficient forces of the world, for we can never make something out of nothing. When men are brought together in groups the only protection that the individual has against abuses of favoritism, "pulls," and unjust treatment of every kind, is in an individual record of what he himself does, and in the enhancement of the value of his personal contribution by cutting out the wastes and lost motion which avail nobody. Such advantage as there may be in the individual pay roll is fully covered by scientific management.

Very truly, yours,

J. SHIRLEY EATON.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., July 18, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: While I have no doubt that you can be depended on to use your influence in opposition to the Tavenner rider on the Army and Navy appropriation bill, I do want you to know that a great many of the Massachusetts manufacturers are watching this matter with keenest interest and are anxious that you should do everything you possibly can to prevent the passage of this un-American piece of legislation.

I am personally acquainted with a number of workmen at the Watertown Arsenal, and know that these workmen individually are very much in favor of the continuation of the scientific management at that plant, the reason being that they are getting considerably more money than they would under the other condition. The Government is also getting more for its money. In my opinion, this opposition to this method of wage payment is as futile as the breaking up of machinery in the early days of the introduction of machinery.

Yours, truly,

THE BLANCHARD MACHINE CO.,
WINSLOW BLANCHARD, President.

COMMITTEE OF TEN TO OPPOSE LEGISLATION
ANTAGONISTIC TO EFFICIENCY IN AMERICAN INDUSTRY,
New York, July 15, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In connection with the appropriation bills now under consideration, I would like to quote from a letter by Mr. John W. Higgins, president of the Worcester Pressed Steel Co., one of your constituents:

"My personal comment is this: This company has just completed contracts for over 1,000,000 4.5" British howitzer cases without one rejection, and more efficiently, expeditiously, and economically than any arsenal or any other plant in this country. The men earn double or treble their regular wages, through efficiency planning, stop-watch observation, and bonus payments. Twenty-four hours per day, two shifts, i. e. overtime payment, during strikes of five other local plants with 2,500 men out. When the agitators and hundreds of strikers gathered around our plant shouting '8 hours,' our men replied, '10 hours,' and wanted to drive the crowd away by force. We have used these efficiency methods for five years, to mutual satisfaction and freedom from all labor troubles. Our men would not give it up."

I will greatly appreciate if this matter can be called to the attention of the Senate in connection with the Tavenner rider to the naval and Army appropriation bills.

Yours, very truly,

W. HERMAN GREUL, Secretary.

NATIONAL METAL TRADES ASSOCIATION,
Boston, July 15, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Senator from Massachusetts,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In behalf of this employers' association, I would call to your attention two measures that are now before your honorable body.

The naval appropriation bill, H. R. 15947, as you know, contains that pernicious rider known as the Tavenner rider. The Army bill, H. R. 16460, does not now contain the objectionable amendment.

Regarding these measures which Tavenner and Van Dyke are trying so hard to put through in one form or another, I believe them to be a union-labor movement and thoroughly un-American.

I believe it is the purpose of these riders to prevent the use of the stop watch or other timing device in connection with Government work, and also to prevent the earning of any premium or bonus, in fact, nothing but the flat day wage. The effect of unionism in this direction you have already seen abroad.

Many have the idea that the stop watch is a speeding-up device pure and simple and its use is to drive the worker to the limit of endurance, but the fact remains that it has already increased production, lowered the cost, and increased the workers earnings. The increased wages are a component part of the plan that has made lower costs possible, and in this connection, I would refer you to our neighbor, the Watertown Arsenal, for the details of this statement.

This proposed prevention of the stop watch has a direct connection with the "preparedness" movement so popular and necessary at this time, since it is a fact that admirals and commanders of battleships have told us that the stop watch has been an absolutely essential factor in the improvement of the fighting efficiency of our fleet.

Further and in conclusion, it is a fact that the large sums of money now being made in the machine shops of the country is due to the operation of premium and bonus methods.

Will you do your best to prevent this unjust legislation?

Very truly, yours,

W. W. POOLE, Secretary.

BOSTON, July 11, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that more or less legislation has already passed the House containing riders or other clauses forbidding the use of time studies or motion studies in the effort to promote effective operation on the part of the workman, rendered possible by a thorough knowledge of the requirements of the "job." These efforts have had to do with so-called "scientific management," but have also had to do with any intelligent study of any human operation.

In our business we make use of this to arrive at the probable time necessary to accomplish duties, and by it are enabled to set tasks well within the capacity of the employee and enable him by well-designed bonus systems not only to make more money for himself but to get more out of apparatus than ignorant, careless, untrained operation could possibly secure.

For the labor unions to interfere with the proper operations of shipyards, machine shops, foundries, and all other well-organized and well-run establishments is to increase the cost of all materials to the Government, to still further strengthen the hands of the labor unions to struggle against it, and, in general, to set back the hands of the clock as regards the intelligent utilization of time and apparatus.

We trust that anything that you can do to investigate this situation and oppose it when the bills are before you will be done in the interest of the manufacturing community of Massachusetts.

Respectfully, yours,

S. D. WARREN & CO.

PACKARD MOTOR CAR CO.,
Detroit, Mich., June 23, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The passage of bill H. R. 8665 will seriously affect the efficiency of Government work. The use of time study in industrial operations is not a hardship upon the worker; it does uncover the slacker and loafer, the drones of our social fabric; and therefore there will be a howl from this class.

Why should the people be taxed to pay men to work at less than their normal efficiency?

Times and rates must be established; why not determine them scientifically, instead of by guess?

Look at the conditions in England—thousands of men sacrificed in the trenches because of the slacker at home, and half of the story has not been told. This is what we face.

There is no function of scientific management that will injure the worker in the slightest degree.

Yours, very truly,

F. F. BEALL, Vice President.

WILLETT, SEARS & CO.,
Boston, April 14, 1916.

HON. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I presume that it is entirely unnecessary to urge you to work against such legislation as is contained in the so-called Tavenner bill (H. R. 8665).

I have always been at a loss to understand why anybody in the community should be opposed to increased efficiency in our industries. It seems to me that to-day, more than ever in our history, efficiency is necessary if we are to accept the wonderful opportunities of industry and commerce which are before us. I think that it would be a serious mistake for Congress to ever pass any legislation which in terms or by implication would deter manufacturers from doing all things possible to increase the efficiency of their plants to the reward of their employees and the character of their product. The Tavenner bill is, I think, wrong in principle; and I can not resist so writing to you, although I assume, of course, that on this matter you and I agree.

Very truly, yours,

GEORGE F. WILLETT.

PITTSBURGH, PA., April 17, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Committee on Military Affairs,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are almost afraid of assailing your manhood by even suggesting that you may vote for the enactment of such a measure, so destructive of efficiency as typified by Tavenner bill, H. R. 8665.

No greater blow could be given to American industry as would result from the enactment of such legislation or restriction of appropriation for efficiency.

Would you in your private life think of such restriction?

Scientific management increases output, lowers cost, and increases the pay of labor and reduces his physical effort. It is effort properly directed.

We will be pleased to have you advise us that you will oppose such scandalous legislation.

Very truly,

UNITED ENGINEERING & FOUNDRY CO.,
ISAAC W. FRANK, President.EASTERN MANUFACTURING CO.,
Bangor, Me., April 20, 1916.Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that there has been presented in Congress a bill known as the Tavenner bill, which aims to make unlawful the use of a stop watch or other time-measuring device in making time studies of any job done by an employee of the United States Government; and prohibits the payment of any cash, premium, or bonus reward in addition to the regular wage.

We are also advised that an effort will be made to insert in the various appropriation bills clauses which would make these practices illegal. A rider to this effect was attached to the Army appropriation bill at the last session of Congress.

This legislation is, of course, aimed at scientific management and other efficiency systems. We realize that it is being urged by people who have the interests of labor at heart; but we know from our own experience and that of other concerns that, far from being inimical to labor, scientific management has achieved benefits in which employees have shared generously.

For the past two years we have been developing in our paper and pulp mills the Taylor system of scientific management. The results thus far obtained have been as follows:

1. Greater production.
2. A reduction in the hours of labor.
3. A large increase in the wages of employees.
4. A better mutual understanding and spirit of cooperation between management and the employees.

We feel that any legislation by Congress tending to curtail similar achievements in Government work is vicious in the extreme, and can only result through a gross misunderstanding of the principles of efficiency or a deliberate attempt on the part of some misguided individuals to hamper the industrial development of the Nation. At this particular time, so critical in many ways, all industry should be afforded every possible encouragement for individual and corporate efficiency as an essential part of national industrial self-defense.

We strongly urge upon you the vital importance of this subject, and trust that you will use your influence and your vote to defeat any measures of this nature that may come before you for consideration.

Yours, very truly,

G. R. OYER,
Vice President and General Manager.

BOSTON, April 20, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our attention has been called to the Tavenner bill, bearing the number H. R. 8665, and now in committee, which is intended to forbid time studies, premiums, or bonuses among employees of the Government, and so to prevent what is known as scientific management. We are convinced that scientific management, rightly used, is a very important aid to efficiency in industry. If therefore Government shops are forbidden its use, not only will the Government be operating at a lower level of efficiency than private establishments, but it will be establishing and maintaining false and retrogressive standards.

We have not known of any evils connected with scientific management in the Government employ that should render advisable any such limitation of the freedom and efficiency of its operating heads.

We hope that your consideration of this subject will lead you to conclusions similar to ours and will cause you to oppose this bill.

Yours, truly,

W. H. McELWAIN CO.,
J. F. McELWAIN, President.THE HOLTZER-CABOT ELECTRIC CO.,
Boston, April 8, 1916.Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Boston Chamber of Commerce is taking a decided stand in opposition to the Tavenner bill, which will soon come to your attention in Congress, and which, if passed, will make it unlawful for any person in charge of Government employees to make use of any stop watch or other time-measuring device in connection with the work of such employees or to award a bonus or premium in addition to their regular wages.

The effect of this bill, if it becomes a law, will be so far-reaching and will deal such a blow to the economical administration of Government activities and also private concerns that I feel that I must add the protest of the Holtzer-Cabot Electric Co. against the passage of the bill.

To my mind the Tavenner bill is only a forerunner of an attempt on the part of certain labor interests to eliminate all efficiency methods throughout the country. If the present bill passes, next year an attempt will be made to prevent the Government from purchasing from private concerns which employ efficiency methods, which is, in effect, a prohibition of these measures throughout the country.

It is claimed that these efficiency methods result in harm to the workmen through excessive speeding up of their work. This claim is not substantiated by actual results. To verify this statement you may ask almost any company which has installed one of the various efficiency methods how it has affected the workmen, and the reply will be that the men are turning out more work with less effort, and that they are earning more money for the same length of time of employment without in any way impairing their health.

If this is true, what is the object of the Tavenner bill? There can be only one explanation. The labor interests find that under the efficiency systems the workmen are able to earn more than union wages without undue exertion, and the workmen are therefore not interested in joining the unions. Naturally this reduces the power of the unions and embitters those men employed in plants which do not use the newer methods.

Do you think that the newer methods should be prohibited and business reduced again to the level of those companies who have not taken advantage of these methods? You will admit that such a step would be detrimental to American business and yet the Tavenner bill is leading in exactly that direction.

I do not believe that the thinking class of laborers desire the passage of this bill, and I most earnestly request that you will do your utmost to prevent its being passed.

Any action limiting the accuracy and economy of manufacture can not but impair the efficiency of work of the Government, and by reflection the efficiency of all manufacture. Such impairment of efficiency can not fall to be among the factors increasing the cost of production and living expense.

Very truly, yours,

C. W. HOLTZER.

BOSTON, March 1, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We note that a bill has been presented to the House in Congress by Representative TAVENNER, of Illinois, designed to prevent the use of the stop watch and the payment of premium, bonus, or cash reward to any Government employee, and that another bill, H. R. 8677, has been proposed and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, providing that the prohibition of stop watches and premiums in last year's Army bill be extended to all employees of the Post Office Department.

We have used stop watches for making numerous time studies in connection with our work for the past five years, and also set tasks and paid the corresponding bonus or premium to the workmen for doing the work in the time specified. In connection with this we have found that our men much prefer working under the task and bonus system than on day work. This shows that this system makes for the happiness of the worker. We have noticed no ill effects on the health of the worker, and in the majority of cases find it has been improved. Wages have been increased from 25 to 50 per cent, and the hours of labor reduced from 10 to 9 or even 8 hours, while the output has increased from 10 per cent to 50 per cent. In spite of the increase in wages and the reduction of hours, we find a much lower cost for our product, and no decrease in the quality.

In view of the above facts we are strongly opposed to any legislation being passed by Congress which will prohibit the use of stop watches and premiums on any Government work.

Very respectfully,

ABERTHAW CONSTRUCTION CO.,
By L. C. WASON, President.HOOD RUBBER CO.,
Watertown, Mass., February 16, 1916.Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been sent the Tavenner bill, introduced by Representative TAVENNER in the House of Representatives.

Such a bill is a direct injury to employer, to employee, and to the public.

Such a bill makes Government work more costly to the Government, and such a bill if applied to us would affect us so adversely as to make it impossible for us to compete.

A manager, a foreman, and a so-called wage earner are all employees. I am an employee as well as an employer.

Every employee is a manager—or should be. Every employee, including myself, must learn or be taught to do his work—his particular job—efficiently, and the more efficient he is the more he earns for himself and his employer.

It's the waste that makes inefficiency, the lack of planning, which is management per se.

Now, every employee—whether bookkeeper, foreman, or wage earner—must be taught his particular job, and if he has to learn it by himself he goes through the same periods of waste and inefficiency that his predecessors have, and there can be no progress under such a system. Wasted effort is harmful to the cost of the job and hurts the earning power of the employee and his employer, and the public pays a higher price.

Time studies show up the waste. They don't increase the work to be done; they either decrease the work or let the same energy be spent in productive work.

The ability of some employees on exactly the same kind of work, paid on a piecework basis, to make $14 a week while another makes $16 and another $17 does not necessarily mean that the $17-a-week man works harder, but it usually does mean that the $17-a-week man manages his work better, plans his work better, has his tools and work handler, and time studies help the $14 and the $16-a-week man to become a $17-a-week man, for it is all a question of teaching a man how to do his work easily and efficiently, and the labor cost per cent of the $17 is less for the employer.

This is plain talk, and when a battleship in a Government yard is only 8 per cent built and the same type of battleship is 30 per cent built in a private-owned yard in the same length of time it's no wonder that Government-built ships cost more (if the proper overhead cost is charged to the cost), and one can only imagine the waste and inefficiency of a Government-owned yard if the employee is not permitted to be taught, if the employee is not allowed to improve his skill, and if the employees are to be allowed to waste their time and strength and energy in producing waste.

A democracy can be efficient only if efficient business systems are installed by managers who manage to cut out the wastage and to teach their employees to cut out the wastage, and no obstacles should be placed in the path of employer managers or employee managers to prevent a man learning how to produce efficiently and to improve his skill and to save waste.

I therefore protest against such legislation because—

1. Legislation of this character is opposed to best interests of workman and employer.
2. Time studies form the best known method of reaching a fair decision as to what constitutes a day's work and thus furnish an equitable basis for a fair wage.
3. Premium, bonus, and piecework payments are the best known methods of securing to the workman a wage proportional to the amount and quality of the work performed.
4. Its passage will result in higher cost of Government work by eliminating modern methods of management.
5. This will probably precede the effort to attach riders to the appropriation bills prohibiting efficient methods on work performed under the appropriations in shops of contractors for Government work.
6. This company would be unable to bid on any Government supplies.

Yours, very truly,

FREDERIC C. HOOD,
General Manager.

RIVETT LATHR AND GRINDER CO.,
Boston, Mass., January 20, 1916.

The Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been informed that there is a possibility that an effort may be made to enact legislation which will prohibit the Government from placing orders with manufacturing establishments who make use of so-called "efficiency methods," such as the Taylor system and other similar systems; in other words, it is proposed to extend the provision of the "Deitrick amendment" into the shops of privately owned concerns as well as those which are owned by the Government.

I believe that all employers of labor must pay fair wages and must in every way give their employees fair treatment if they expect to establish a permanently successful business, but workmen must likewise expect to render a reasonable return in services to their employers. If a manufacturer is to run his business successfully and profitably, he must obtain the most efficient workmen that he can for the rate which he pays. It is against efforts of this kind that the exponents of the "Deitrick amendment" have directed their guns. To allow any such provision to be enacted into law, as I understand is now contemplated, would be a terrible blow to the industries of our country. During the present generally prosperous period now prevailing it behooves us to put the manufacturing business of the country on as economical and efficient basis as may be possible, so that our position may be strong enough to stand the strain of duller times.

I sincerely trust that you will vigorously oppose any proposed legislation of this character.

Yours, very truly,

ROBERT F. MORSE, Treasurer.

JANUARY 4, 1916.

HON. RICHARD OLNEY, 2d,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. OLNEY: Rumor has it that further legislation will be asked for to restrain, more completely than the Dietrick Army appropriation bill rider did, the advancement of scientific management, or any similar kind of efficiency in Government work. Now that you are on the Army Committee, I thought you would be glad to have the manufacturer's viewpoint on this; and I feel very sure, with a knowledge of the facts, that you will use your influence to restrict such further legislation.

I have been particularly interested in watching the development of scientific management in the past at the Watertown Arsenal, under the direction of Col. Wheeler, and had felt that there was the first object lesson in real efficiency in Government manufacture. I am interested in the so-called Taylor form of scientific management in general, and am practicing, or developing, this in this company and in three other unrelated industries of which I am treasurer.

I have felt that attempts, such as have been made through the influence of labor officials, to prevent this form of development in Government work, and their attempts to prevent it by increasing their attack on the use of the stop watch, and of time studies, have been attended with very dangerous and far-reaching results. Those who arbitrarily state that a stop watch should not be used in industries might just as well say that a microscope, graduated balances, or instruments of precision should not be used in analyzing any of the processes of industry.

A stop watch is used as a means of ascertaining the best way of doing work, not, as has been reported, simply for the purpose of driving an employee faster. Factory efficiency is not real efficiency unless it makes the performance of a given task easier for the worker by the elimination of delays, unnecessary movement, and makes possible a better analysis of machine operation.

Some criticism has also been made that the quality of the work suffers; that is, that quality is sacrificed for speed and quantity. My experience in the machine shops that I have observed, as well as in the plants in which I have developed the Taylor system, has proved to me conclusively that at least 60 per cent of the increased output of a plant, due to this system, is due to methods that do not directly affect the workmanship at all. I have yet to see this system developed in any manufacturing company without the result being a distinct improvement in the quality of the work, better working conditions and industrial relations, and lower unit costs.

That scientific management is consistent with the presence of labor unions and collective bargaining is instanced by the fact that the presidents in the four local labor unions connected with the printing industry are all men in our employ and men of exceedingly high standard. Furthermore, our collective agreements with such unions provide for the development of factory efficiency.

I see no reason why Government work should not be done on as efficient lines as private work, provided, of course, liberal wages are paid and no unreasonable exertion required. The present war has illustrated—and particularly in the industrial conditions shown up in England—that England is paying a terrible price for the inefficiency of their mills and factories, and for the complete failure, until just recently, of their ministers to understand industrial operations and industrial relations. The great cry for preparedness seems futile in this country if our Senators and Representatives legislate to make impossible any increased efficiency in Government manufacturing by the best recognized methods to-day, or, what is worse, actually, and without doubt unknowingly, undo the progress which has been made in a few places.

If my belief in the great advantages derived from scientific management can be justified by the facts, is not the attitude of Congress square against progress in efficiency, which our Government should attempt to further? I feel very strongly on this whole matter, as do many other manufacturers, and our concern is that Government action of this kind should be based on what seems to be a misconception of the facts.

Yours, very truly,

THE PLIMPTON PRESS,
HENRY P. KENDALL, Treasurer.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PREMIUM SYSTEM IN GOVERNMENT WORK AGAINST THE PROHIBITION OF ECONOMIC ADMINISTRATION IN GOVERNMENT WORKSHOPS.

DECEMBER 14, 1915.

To the executive committee and board of directors:

At the last session of Congress, when the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, was under discussion in the House, the following amendment, popularly known as the "Deitrick rider," was proposed:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this bill shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made, with a stop watch or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job or any such employee between the starting and completion thereof or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this bill be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operations of any Government plant; and no claim for service performed by any person while violating this proviso shall be allowed."

There was very little, if any, debate on this amendment, and it was adopted by a large majority. It was later rejected by the Senate, but finally restored in conference and is now part of the law. It is not, however, as effective as those interested in its passage intended it to be, since it applies only to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and is not applicable to expenditures from any other appropriations than those contained in the Army bill.

EFFECT OF THE DEITRICK AMENDMENT.

All Army officers are paid from the appropriations in this bill, and time studies in the arsenals and other Government establishments in charge of such officers have ceased for this fiscal year; likewise, all premium and bonus payments to workmen have ceased for the same period for all work performed under the same bill.

It appears, however, that while the amendment was probably especially directed against the Watertown Arsenal, in our neighborhood, where considerable progress was being made in industrial and economical development and where the workmen were receiving good premiums in addition to their regular day's wages, the work at this arsenal is practically all done under appropriations contained in the fortifications bill, and therefore the premium payments which were in effect there have been continued.

SUPPRESSION OF ECONOMIC ADMINISTRATION.

We have reason to believe, however, that at this session of Congress a more determined and skillfully directed effort will be made to completely suppress any form of economic administration of Government workshops under whatever appropriations the work may be performed and to prohibit all forms of bonus, premium, or piece-rate payments in those shops, thus reducing them to the dead level of the old day-wage systems, with no lawful means of satisfactorily establishing or maintaining any standard of production.

PROTEST BY THE CHAMBER.

Upon the recommendation of your committee last February, the chamber made an earnest protest, through New England Senators and Representatives, against the passage of the aforementioned "Deitrick rider," and similar protests were made by many other organizations, including the United States Chamber of Commerce. None of these organizations were, however, advised regarding this movement until near the close of the session, which was a short one, and after the adoption of the amendment by the House, by which time it had gained such headway that the protests, as is known, were not effective.

FAR-REACHING EFFECTS OF THE MOVEMENT.

While it has been generally recognized that this rider was the herald of a general movement on the part of a large influence to prohibit, through congressional action, all forms of satisfactory administration and economic performance in Government workshops alone, the rider itself may be taken as the expression of the real attitude of those opponents toward all privately owned shops, in general, and is an indirect step toward the accomplishment of a well-laid plan which now menaces the industrial world. Your committee believes that when the immediate plans regarding Government shops have been consummated, further effort will be made to extend similar prohibitions, in a far-reaching way, to establishments furnishing material or supplies to the Government, to the extent of even prohibiting altogether Government purchases from private plants unless completely operated in accordance with the terms of similar prohibitive special legislation.

OPPOSITION IS URGED.

It is in the light of this matter as thus presented that your committee deems it necessary to suggest that the chamber again consider this subject in good season and while there is yet time for proper thought of it on the part of all interested, and that it oppose any form of legislation of the character of that indicated herein.

In this connection it seems appropriate to repeat the following statements, which were included in its report of last February as reasons for opposing the "Deitrick rider":

1. Any action limiting the accuracy and economy of manufacture can not but impair the efficiency of work of the Government and, by reflection, the efficiency of all manufacture. Such impairment of efficiency can not fail to be among the factors enhancing cost of production and living expense.

2. The most searching investigations of the methods attached by this amendment, when these methods have been competently introduced, indicate that the workers employed suffer no detriment to health and prospect but, on the contrary, find their living conditions improved. The amendment should, therefore, be opposed in the true interests of labor.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Your committee therefore recommends that the following resolution be adopted by the chamber, and that copies of it and of the report be furnished the Senators and Representatives of New England, associations of manufacturers, associations of commerce, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and other associations of similar character, requesting their cooperation for the purpose of defeating any prohibitive or restrictive measures of the kind referred to herein which may be aimed at Government establishments at this session of Congress, viz: "Whereas under an equitable Government every individual is entitled to own and to enjoy the results of his own labor. No legislation should have for its purpose the withholding of such rights by retarding economic or industrial efficiency and by prohibiting the right to compensation based upon superior individual ability and its consequent impairment of personal ambition and initiative.

"Resolved, That the Boston Chamber of Commerce urges the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to refrain from favorable consideration of any measures aimed at Government establishments which tend—"To interfere with economical administration;

"To cause the abolishment of proper means for the determination and maintenance of standards of production; or
"To prohibit the forms or methods of remuneration to workmen in practice in the various similar industries of the country."

Respectfully submitted.

WALTER C. FISH,

Special Committee on Premium System in Government Work.

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN,
February 26, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
Newton Highlands, Mass.

DEAR SIR: The delay in answering your letter of the 3d was due to my absence from the city. In reply I would say that, before hearing from you, I had already written letters to the Congressman from this district, to our Senator, and to each member of the House Committee on Military Affairs, urging all of them to vote and use their influence against any legislation designed to prevent the use of a stop watch and the payment of premiums or bonuses to Government employees.

In answer to your request for facts from my personal experience in regard to the effect of the introduction of time study and bonuses, I would say that, within the last two weeks, I have been in Pittsfield and at that time interviewed a number of the employees of Eaton, Crane & Pike regarding this point. In reply to my questions, both the girls and the men who are working on bonus and who have been under this scheme of payment for from six months to a year, stated that (1) they preferred the bonus payment to the old piecework system; (2) they were better satisfied because they were getting more money and working 9 hours a day instead of 10; (3) their health had not been impaired in the slightest, and, judging from their appearance, I should say that it had improved.

From the management of the company I learned that the output had been largely increased and that service as regards keeping of promised dates of delivery was so much better that there was no comparison.

I was particularly interested in the replies given me by the girls on the wrapping machines, because I had set the time for the tasks on this work and had had considerable difficulty in inducing the girls to try to make their bonuses. They had been accustomed to piecework and were afraid that someone was trying to "put something over on them." I found, however, as I have already told you, that they were more than satisfied and don't want to go back to the old scheme. If there is anything further I can do to assist in this matter, please let me know.

With kindest regards, I remain,
Yours, truly,

J. A. BURSLEY.

EFFICIENCY SOCIETY,
New York, June 19, 1916.

TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS:

Under date of January 21, 1916, before his elevation to the Supreme Court, Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, an eminent advocate of the workers, wrote us as follows:

"Referring to the proposed congressional legislation to prohibit the introduction or use of time study and premium payments in Government establishments:

"In my opinion any such restriction upon the conduct of Government establishments would be highly inadvisable. The purpose for thus proposing the legislation is doubtless one which all of us would approve. Increased efficiency ought not to be purchased at the expense of health and other qualities essential to good citizenship and the general welfare, but no one can doubt that increased efficiency is essential to the public welfare; that we have not yet learned how best to secure that efficiency, and that the most important element in securing efficiency is the knowledge of facts—to the ascertainment of which time study is a means.

"To prohibit time study and premium payment is as crude a method of affording to the workman proper protection as the proverbial 'burning of the house to roast the pig.'"

We respectfully request you to consider this in connection with the Van Dyke and Tavenner bills and appropriation riders.

Yours, truly,

A. W. KIMBER, Secretary.

CHICAGO, February 20, 1916.

Mr. R. B. FRASER.

DEAR SIR: As per your request, I herewith submit my views on the system you have so carefully installed in our department; the same is for the betterment of the employee. Systematic labor by skilled workmen means carefulness, production, profit, and satisfaction, both to employer and employee.

Very truly,

JOHN GURALSKI.

Mr. FRASER: It's to my individual opinion in regards to the bonus system, which to say that bonus systems is better than the old way in many ways; for instance, as preparing lifts, etc., and doing away with a lot of unnecessary work.

The bonus system has added an extra pay envelope, which helps a great deal.

Yours, truly,

FRANK L. MARKOAT.

HAMDEN, CONN., February 26, 1916.

DEAR SIR: I take great pleasure in writing to you about our bonus system. I find it a great help to me and also to many others of this factory. It also encourages us to put more interest in our work.

I have always found it satisfactory, and it has never been any injury to my health.

FLORENCE JOHNSON.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

MY DEAR SIR: I have worked for the Acme Wire Co. 11 years. I was timed according to the Taylor system and I think they were very fair. As instructor here I am in a position to study the girls closely. They are just as contented and healthy as they were on daywork, as far as I can judge.

The work we get out is just as good as before because inspectors watch it from start to finish.

Under the Taylor system the girls do the work the quickest and easiest way, found by timing an efficient operator.

Sincerely, yours,

MARGARET PURCELL.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., February 28, 1916.

DEAR SIR: I have worked in the Acme Wire Co. nearly four years, and during that time I have worked under three systems—daywork, piecework, and now the Taylor system.

I do think and like the Taylor system the best.

Yours, truly,

A. KOCK.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., February 24, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: It gives me great pleasure to write to you in regard to the bonus system.

The bonus system is a great help to every one in my estimation, especially to the self-supporting girls. Every week when we receive our wages it is encouraging to think we have other money besides our regular week's salary. It is discouraging to me when I get a day job, because we know we don't have to work too fast, and it is tiresome and tedious to me.

The bonus system, in regards to myself, has not injured my health in anyway, which I am very glad to say.

Yours, respectfully,

MISS ROSE DALLAS,
No. 344 Second Avenue, West Haven, Conn.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., February 24, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: I have been employed with the Acme Wire Co. for the past nine years, and during that time I have been working about four years on the bonus system, which I can say with all sincerity that I do not work any harder than I did when I was on day work. I can also make more money.

Yours, truly,

MAE C. BARRETT.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: I am writing this letter for the purpose of encouraging the use of the bonus system.

I have been working for the Acme Wire Co., New Haven, Conn., for the past three years, before and ever since the use of that system, and have been well satisfied.

It has not interfered in the least with my physical condition or happiness, and as yet have never met with the slightest accident.

The bonus system not only benefits the employees in wages, but also enables the company to get out a sufficient quantity of work each day which has been thoroughly inspected.

For myself, I am in favor of the bonus system.

Yours, truly,

MISS HELEN BAKER.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., February 24, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: My opinion has been asked regarding the bonus system and I would like to say that I would rather have the bonus. After speaking to a number of others, we do not believe that we are overworked, but we are making far more than if we were doing daywork.

I am working in the Acme Wire Co. under the Tailleur system.

Yours, respectfully,

JENNY R. C. LIND,

BANGOR, ME., March 8, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. HALL: This is just a brief sketch of what I believe scientific management has done for the Eastern Manufacturing Co.

A few years ago this concern was practically being run by the employees. Now it is all done by system and is controlled by the scientific and service departments.

Perhaps one of the numerous facts that are to be mentioned, the first one should be in regard to the hours of labor. This mill, which always has been run on a schedule of 10 hours a day and a fixed amount of wages to be paid weekly to laborers, is now being run on a 9-hour schedule and the laborers are paid by piecework. This not only helps the mill, but also the employees. They take a great deal more interest in their work and get out more than ever before. Every employee makes more money. The girls on an average make from two to two-fifty a week over their usual amount of pay.

Before the system work was begun the head boss of each department employed his own help. Now this is all done through the service department. At this department is kept a record file of every employee. This makes it very easy to locate anybody about the mill. When office help is needed this file is referred to, and anybody that is an employee of the mill that has education enough for the requirements of the position is promoted rather than to take in a new person. This was never done before.

We also have a fine new dispensary, which was very much needed. This enables the firm to give proper care and attention to all accidents, which were only half attended to before.

We also have a library, which is something entirely new for us. In this library are kept several very good books, which are loaned to the employees free of charge for two weeks. It is surprising to see how much interest both the men and girls have taken in it. The girls have had candy sales to raise money to buy books, and it has also had some good donations.

Some of the girls have formed a basket-ball team and play two evenings a week.

The boys had a hockey team during the ice season. These were all unheard of before. In time we expect to have nice rest rooms.

From a general consideration of everything, I think scientific management has done much for this concern and has made everything around and about the mill 100 per cent better.

Sincerely, yours,

ANNA CURREN.

MARCH 8, 1916.

Mr. HALL,
Eastern Manufacturing Co. Mill, Brewer, Me.

DEAR SIR: I am pleased to reply to your question as to how I regard the conditions under the Taylor system and conditions under the old way, and will say:

First. I get more money in wages.

Second. That there is no lost time, and in many other ways I find the Taylor system much better for the workpeople.

Yours, truly,

E. S. SMILEY.

WILLIMAS & WILKINS CO.:

In classes of work where possible, I believe that by making time studies both employer and employee will be benefited. Surely persons who are competent and efficient and who produce a larger amount of work should receive a higher wage than those who are less efficient and produce less work. The employee is paid for the exact amount of work produced. The employer pays for the exact amount of work received. Is it not a square deal?

In my own experience the bonus system pays far better than a standard wage.

ADA G. BEARD.

BREWER, ME., March 8, 1916.

Mr. HALL.

DEAR SIR: I have been a "counter" in the Eastern Manufacturing Co.'s mill for the last 10 years.

Within the last two or three years the owners have introduced scientific management, which has worked a marvelous change in the mill and its employees.

Before this introduction work came along haphazard, with little or no regularity, working on one order and then suddenly changing to another without notifying the foreman. We also kept our own time.

Now there is a planning department, which assigns to each individual his work for the day. For the counters we receive a ticket at the window of this department designating what particular order we shall count, and with the time we receive it stamped on it; and on the back of this ticket how it must be counted—that is, in reams of 500 sheets or half reams of 250 sheets, and if the colored ream marks are to be inserted to mark the "knifeful" for the trimmers.

By the "knifeful" I mean as much paper as can be trimmed by an undercut knife at one time. The amount varies according to the thickness of the paper from two to two and one-half and three reams, thus saving time and energy on from one-half to one ream at each trimming. Then when we have finished the order we return the ticket to the planning room and the time is again stamped on it.

This systematic management has effected an increase in the wages of most of the employees, and although it did not increase the counters directly it has influenced us in an indirect way.

There is a move man now, whose duty it is to haul in these loads of paper assigned to us, and posted on a bulletin board beforehand, so he will know what we are working on and to take away those we have finished counting, thus doing away with the necessity of the men who wait on us going in search of a load, as they formerly had to do, taking the time to select a load of lightweight paper (to make his own work easy) and haul it into place for us. You may readily see how we thereby had many idle minutes during the day.

By scientific management we now have our pay has been increased at least 25 cents per day (each of us), in that we have steady work all the time with no loafing in between, despite the fact that the working day has been voluntarily shortened by the company from 10 to 9 hours.

Last but not least there is the "service department" and library, headed by the capable Mrs. Hoskins who has so interested herself in us girls that we are like a great family, all interested in the good welfare of each other. She has caused the walls of the mill to be whitewashed, making it clean and wholesome. She even furnishes the men with gum twice a week to try and discourage the tobacco-chewing habit with its consequential spitting.

There used also to be a good deal of familiarity between the men and girls, making them appear more or less vulgar. Now it is all different for the new system has restricted us in such a way that this condition is seldom almost never seen.

The library books are loaned us free of charge, and we have two basket-ball teams each engaged in friendly rivalry against the other.

I can not better express my sentiment and appreciation of this great scientific change from the old way of doing things than by saying that we employees have been benefited a thousandfold.

I will sign what I am,

Respectfully, yours,

CATHERINE COULTER,
"Scientific Management."

My DEAR MRS. HOSKINS: I thought I would give you an idea of what I thought what has passed in the last two years. I have worked here four years. Anybody employed the girls. The men said and did what they pleased. We are working shorter hours and getting more pay. We have many other things that are helping the girls out very much. I am better in health and all, and it is better in all ways.

INA CAMPBELL.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me great pleasure as instructor of the plater girls at the Eastern Manufacturing Co.'s mill at South Brewer, to testify in regard to task and bonus.

I worked on the platers four years previous to the installing of the task and bonus system. Under this system the object of the operators is to reach the highest possible point of efficiency for which they are paid.

Being an ex-operator under the old working plan I readily notice the efficiency of the task and bonus as regards the employer and employees. Therefore I heartily indorse the efficiency of the Taylor system.

There is also an improvement in the general conditions within the last few months that is beneficial to the girls and greatly appreciated by them, namely, the shortened hours, the rest room, with a nurse in attendance, which is greatly appreciated, and a great deal of sanitary improvements.

IRENE SHEA.

SOUTH BREWER, ME., March 6, 1916.

Mr. HALL: I take this manner of showing my sincere appreciation of the benefits which the girls in the plater department derive from the new system which you introduced in the Eastern Manufacturing Co.

Sincerely, yours,

THESSA DODWELL.

FEBRUARY 21, 1916.

Mr. E. B. PASSANO,
President Williams & Wilkins Co., Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR: I have been asked to state my opinion of the bonus system under which we work.

I like it and would much regret returning to a straight-salary method, when extra effort counts for little or nothing to the operative.

I consider the present system the finest sort of encouragement to do more and better work. It is a fair deal on both sides. It creates a personal interest on the part of the employee in the firm's progress, and the operative is enabled to earn more money with no more physical strain than under any other system, and with a greater mental satisfaction, because extra production and quality are recorded and comes back in the pay envelope.

I am earning more money in less time, with less physical and mental strain than I believe would be possible on a straight-salary basis, and I am better satisfied than I have ever been in the years I have been employed.

The fact that I came here 18 months ago a stranger, without home or friends in the city, and I liked your bonus system enough to remain, and then return here four times from trips home, rather than accept $18 per week straight salary in my home State, Massachusetts, is the best argument I could offer.

Very respectfully,

LILLIE M. HILL.

BALTIMORE, MD., February 20, 1916.

Mr. E. B. PASSANO.

DEAR SIR: In regard to the bonus question would say that having worked on bonus system now for over two years I think it is a good proposition for both operator and proprietor, as the operator strives to do a greater amount of work in a given time than if she were on straight time. It has not injured me physically, as I have gained in weight since I have had my present position.

Hoping you will continue the bonus system, I remain,

Respectfully,

Mrs. MAE LOWNBY,
No. 1028 N. Eden Street.

NAVAL CONSULTING BOARD OF THE UNITED STATES,
Brooklyn, N. Y., April 22, 1916.

Mr. W. HERMAN GREUL,
Secretary Committee of Ten,
Eleventh Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street, New York.

DEAR SIR: I have received yours of the 19th with inclosures, calling my attention to the Tavenner and Van Dyke bills. To my mind these measures, if carried into effect, would work great harm and injustice. I have not only been an employer of skilled labor for 35 years, but I have always been a great admirer of skilled mechanics and good workmen, and have spent much of my life in close contact with them. My aim has always been to recognize and reward meritorious service in every line. Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to see my men advance and receive more remuneration in recognition of extra effort and devotion to their tasks. In my judgment, all attempts, such as are represented in these bills, to smother and do away with proper reward for increased skill and efficiency are not only against all reason, but pernicious in the extreme. I know by personal experience that proper incentive for achievement is a wonderful stimulus to performance, and I believe this to be true in the case of every man, regardless of his calling.

As for myself, I am unalterably opposed to the robbing of any man of proper incentive that will inspire him to greater achievement and usefulness. In these troublous times, when the country may need our services, the best that can be brought out in each of us is none too good.

Hoping that this is responsive to your call, I beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

ELMER A. SPERRY.

UNITED SHIRT & COLLAR CO.,
Troy, N. Y., April 14, 1916.

Mr. H. D. MINICH,
Tenth Floor, 110 State Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: The bonus and efficiency methods which you have established in our different departments have been, in my estimation, a great success in two ways: The operators are well pleased, since their spirit of cooperation and efficiency brings them a proportionate increase in wages, and the operating costs are automatically decreased on this cooperative basis.

If the proposed bills of Mr. Tavenner and Mr. Van Dyke become laws and all time-study methods and all bonus systems of wages are prohibited in connection with all Government work, efficiency will, in my opinion, be greatly impaired and the result will be detrimental to employee as well as to employer.

Considering the crisis which business in this country faces with the end of the war, this is a poor time to tamper with what we have acquired in the way of perfected and efficient methods.

Very truly, yours,

J. K. P. PINE, President.

SEWELL—CLAPP—ENVELOPES.

CHICAGO, March 1, 1916.

MR. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR MR. THOMPSON: I am glad to do what I can to respond to your request of February 3 to give you some of the results of our experience with the setting of tasks by the use of the stop watch.

It should, of course, be clearly understood by those who are investigating this matter that the use of the stop watch is altogether unjustified and mischievous unless it is preceded by a careful building up of standardization and efficient methods. This preliminary to stop-watch work is itself of the utmost benefit to the worker, because its prime object is to make it easy and comfortable for him to do his best work—to surround him with the best conditions, to give him the best tools, and to acquaint him with the best methods. No time study which is not preceded by these preparations is of any value, and if time study ever comes into disrepute, it will, in my judgment, be mainly due to the ill-considered effort to use it without proper preparation. My personal experience in the envelope mill of Sewell—Clapp—Envelopes, Chicago, enables me to reply to your questions as follows:

The happiness of the worker.—Every worker in our plant who has been permitted to work under task and bonus as a result of time study has expressed himself as pleased with the new method, and no contrary opinion has come to our ears. It not only increases the worker's pay, which, of course, affects his happiness, but it removes practically all the worry, the fret, and the discomfort which, I believe, are more wearing upon the worker than the labor itself. It is an interesting fact that when our company recently offered to its employees an opportunity to buy some of its preferred stock, the first purchaser was one of those in this mill who had been working longest on task and bonus. He is a native of eastern Europe, who has no sentimental regard for the concern other than that which involves his own welfare.

The evidence is not wanting in our case that improved working conditions register not only in the peace of mind of the worker himself, but that material improvement in the home atmosphere likewise follows. It makes an immense difference to the family at home whether or not the father returns tired and fretted and worried by his work.

The health of the worker.—Whatever improvement in factory conditions contributes to the happiness of the worker is, of course, very likely materially to affect his health also. It is further to be noted that it is to the interest of the employer to protect the worker from all undue strain or driving.

Time studies are normally made under conditions which may be depended upon for permanent results, and anything like speeding up or exceptional output would destroy their purpose. In our mill time study revealed the fact that in a certain department a large portion of the time required for a certain operation was absorbed by a movement involving considerable muscular strain in an awkward position. Directed solely by these time studies, we devised a contrivance which removed practically all this strain, and the work is now done with ease by lighter and less muscular men than those whom it formerly tested severely.

Accidents: As a general proposition accidents are due to irregular or haphazard conditions. The preparation for time study works against anything of this sort and requires a careful investigation of the safest and best method of performing an operation which, theoretically, at least, would very much lessen the danger of accidents. We can conceive of no respect in which time study can increase the liability to accident.

Wages: Time studies are made for the purpose of setting a task which under scientific management practices results in the offering of a bonus. This bonus is not accompanied by any reduction in wages and is just so much addition to the prevailing rate of pay. In our mill time studies have resulted in material increase in every case where task and bonus have been established. It is our purpose to pay bonus to every man in our employ whose work is of such a character that reliable time studies of it can be made.

Hours of labor: No direct connection between time study and hours of labor now occurs to me. As time studies lead to task and bonus, and as these increase the worker's earnings and the output of the plant, the tendency is, of course, toward shorter hours, and there is nothing in the system which would exercise an influence in the contrary direction.

Output: Task and bonus based on time studies manifestly increase output. In our mill there has been a marked result of this sort. There would otherwise be no object in it. The effectiveness of the method lies in the fact that the increased output is produced not by driving the worker but by surrounding him with the best possible tools, methods, and conditions.

Cost of product: The ultimate object of time study is, of course, a reduction in the cost of the product, and in proportion as the output is increased this result is obtained, less, of the course, the increased wages earned by the worker. Scientific management principles result in a number of other mechanisms which tend in the same direction.

Quality of product: Task and bonus make necessary a complete inspection system, and this, of course, raises the quality of the output. This improvement of quality is made the easier by the various steps of standardization of tools, materials, and processes which always accompany it.

In our mill there has not been a single discordant note in the unanimous approval of the working of task and bonus methods of payment. Those who are now so paid are thoroughly satisfied, and those who have not yet come under this method of payment are plainly manifesting their eagerness and impatience to be so favored.

A recent experience may be of interest to you in this connection. Our company has for 15 years gathered its heads of departments and other workmen together at an annual dinner at which every man has an opportunity to speak his mind and has habitually availed himself of it with unreserved frankness. Criticisms and complaints of the management and of one department against another have been frequent. The last of these dinners occurred only a few days ago, and the tone of the talk around the table was in marked contrast to that which has heretofore prevailed. With possibly one or two exceptions, every speaker made the burden of his talk a direct or indirect appreciation of the benefits he had derived from scientific management. Some of the speakers were unconsciously paying this tribute to task and bonus but others attributed the bettered conditions directly to this system. It is probably impossible for me to convey to you the impression which I received, but I can only say that the unanimous opinion of the workers that scientific management has been a distinct benefit to them and the institution by which they are employed was emphatic and unmistakable.

I inclose a few letters written by members of our working force, which carry their own evidence of genuineness and sincerity. They are the result of my request that the men write to me their real sentiments without the slightest suggestion on my part as to what sort of opinions I wished to have expressed.

I trust that I have covered satisfactorily the items for which you ask and if there is anything else that I can do, kindly let me know.

I might state that no employees in any plant where I have worked on scientific management have ever suffered due to bonus and time-study methods. On the other hand, there has always been a greater degree of satisfaction and a tendency to stick, and to develop extraordinary workers instead of the common type. All of which is conducive, of course, to more permanent organization, better habits of stability and industry, and less expense due to dissatisfied help and changing conditions.

It seems to me that it is the height of inconsistency at this time, when the whole country is crying for preparedness, and preparedness against the most efficient Nation on the globe, a Nation which has built up its efficiency by just such means as those of scientific management, that certain of our Congressmen want to build laws which are going to be permanent factors in preventing the United States from realizing just the kind of preparedness they need. I see no reason why an instrument of precision, such as the stop watch, for measuring skill, should be objected to any more than any other instrument for measuring material or anything of value. It seems to me that these Congressmen could better spend their time in attacking the quacks and fourflushers who are using the stop watch instead of making their attack upon the methods themselves.

You are at liberty to use this communication and accompanying papers as seems to you wise.

Very truly, yours,

SMITH & FURBUSH MACHINE CO.,
HANCOCK AND SOMERSET STREETS,

MR. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of the 3d instant, I make reply to the questions in your letter as follows:

Our workers are much happier under the system because they make more money and are not scolded. It is their own loss if they do not produce enough to get premiums and eliminate scolding on account of suspicion of soldiering.

We have held our men much better.

The few men we use from time to time on straight daywork are dissatisfied and ask to be put on premium work.

The health of our workers is better than before, due to their generally better mental feeling and greater happiness in their work. No one in our shop has ever shown any ill effects due to overwork.

Accidents are less than formerly, due to better study of how to do each job to the best advantage.

Rate of wages is regular market rate per hour per day rate, and men average from 20 to 25 per cent premiums when working on premium work.

Hours of labor average 9½ hours per day, and extra 50 per cent for overtime.

Output is greater.

Cost is about the same as formerly, but the men get more money, and we know much better what cost is and consequently can make selling price more intelligently.

Quality of product is better than formerly, because we now have thorough inspection of product that formerly we did not have.

Trusting this may be of some advantage to the cause, we are,

Yours, truly,

C. W. SCHWARTZ, JR.

THE LODGE & SHIPLEY MACHINE TOOL CO.,
Cincinnati, Ohio, February 15, 1916.

EFFICIENCY SOCIETY,
52 Broadway, New York City.

GENTLEMEN: In answer to yours of the 9th in reference to the question of bonus or premium system of payment to the worker, wish to advise that we have had some experience along this line, having started in on the premium system some 14 years ago and maintaining it throughout this period. We have made it entirely satisfactory to the men. As proof of this statement, we recently gave to our men a service pin, and of the 475 on our pay roll there were over 200 who had been with our company over five years. This would show, at least, that the system of payment was not one to drive the men out of the shop. As a matter of fact it has a tendency to keep them here, as we find that the number of men leaving during a month will not exceed 2 per cent of the total number. This we consider a very small turnover. It must naturally have a tendency to make the men more cheerful and happier, as their remuneration is continually increasing as they become more proficient, which allows them more freedom to buy the necessities for their homes and some of the luxuries.

Regarding their health: We recently had the United States Government staff of doctors examine our men, and out of the total number there was only some 15 who did not care to be examined. Out of all who were examined we found but one man infected for the particular trouble they were seeking.

The bonus or premium system will, of course, have a tendency to reduce the cost of work. It also has a tendency to improve the quality of the product, due to the fact that if a man makes poor work he has to duplicate the poor work with good work and have his premium earning reduced, if he has any coming to him. This makes him more careful, although he knows he will always get the equivalent of his daily or weekly wage, still, if he has from 25 per cent to 30 per cent more than same coming to him due to premium earnings, he naturally does not care to lose this increase through negligent or careless work.

The system was hard to inaugurate, the men feeling that we would not treat them right; that if we reduced the hours on the work that we would cut the premium allowance. This we have never done, consequently to-day it would be a very serious thing to us if we were to make an attempt to do away with the premiums or bonus system. The men want it as much now as they disliked it 14 years ago.

Yours, very truly,

LOUIS B. WEBER, Assistant Manager.

BOSTON, March 1, 1916.

Re: Stop-watch legislation.
Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of the 3d, would say that we have made numerous time studies on our work and have set tasks and paid bonuses for the completion of the task in the specified time.

We have found—
That the workmen have been better satisfied and strongly objected to being taken off the task and bonus work and put on daywork.
We have no records of any ill health of the worker being due to his work on task and bonus.
There has been no increase in the number of accidents.
Wages have been increased from 25 to 50 per cent.
The hours of labor have been reduced.
The output has increased from 25 to 75 per cent.
Cost of parts has been reduced from 10 to 50 per cent.
The quality of the product has not decreased and in the majority of cases has increased.

Yours, very truly,

ABERTHAW CONSTRUCTION CO.,
JOHN H. SCOVILLE.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., February 19, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: I must apologize for having mislaid your letter of February 3 in regard to stop-watch legislation.

In regard to the questions which you ask, I would reply as follows:
Our experience has been that our employees have been anxious to have us take time studies on the jobs on which they are working, so that they may be able to make the bonus.

We have not kept statistics to show any change in the health of the worker or in the number of accidents, but are positive that the accidents are less on the men working on the time study than in the rest of the shop.

The men working on the bonus work average at least 35 per cent more wages than those working daywork. The hours of labor on the bonus work are the same.

The output is considerably more on the work which has been time studied and the cost of product considerably less.

The quality of the product is in general better under time-studied work, owing to the fact that the workmen understand that if any of the work does not pass inspection that they are not paid the bonus for the jobs.

We regret that we can not give you more definite information in regard to these questions, but would be glad to assist in any way that we can in getting to the legislators correct information on this matter.

We propose to protest as effectively as possible to our Representatives in regard to this proposed legislation.

Yours, truly,

NEW ENGLAND BUTT CO.
J. G. ALDRICH.

DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A., February 22, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of the 3d and referring to the questions in the second paragraph:

We believe that generally the happiness of the workers is increased through having premium work throughout the factory. We have been requested by the men to set standard times where we had not yet been able to get the work done, and often an employee is dissatisfied because it is not done as fast as he thinks it ought.

I do not see how the installation of premium work could affect an employee's health if he worked the regular factory hours.

There should be no more accidents with premium work than with any other work. Very often there are more accidents because the men are inexperienced.

The average premium earnings is about 27 per cent of the day wages. Therefore it is a substantial increase.

Hours of labor have been shortened by the premium system.

The output has increased, but so has the working force. I can not give you the ratio of increase in output that is due to the premium system.

I can not get the relative cost of product by reason of introducing the premium system. We introduced the system because we thought it was better than the piecework and any work system which we had previously used.

The quality of our product has been maintained in every degree. The stop watch and time study gives the employee many unnecessary movements and this reduces his physical and mental fatigue by reducing the lost motions to a minimum.

Any further information desired will be cheerfully given.

Yours, very truly,

DEAR SIR: Our monotype keyboards are operated under the differential piece-rate system. Since changing from the regular-hour rate about five years ago there has been an increase in production of about 33 per cent. The operatives are earning from 33 to 50 per cent more. They apparently are satisfied and in good health. STOP-WATCH LEGISLATION.

EATON, CRANE & PIKE CO.,
Pittsfield, Mass., March 10, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR Mr. THOMPSON: In reply to your letter of the 3d instant, would say that I do not see why the working conditions of Government employees are different from those in any mill or factory, and for that reason the benefits obtained by employees in other than Government factories working under the Taylor system of scientific management would apply to this work in Government institutions. The benefits derived by our employees from scientific management so far—and we have been at it but two and one-half years—are as follows:

Average increase in wages, 15 per cent.
Reduction in working hours, 16 per cent.

A feeling of greater confidence, in that the task set by means of a scientific study of the work is known by the employee to be accurate. In our case a recent test on machines producing 85 per cent of our boxes shows that the difference between the time allowed for 2,000 hours of work and the time taken was less than three-fourths of an hour.

The health of the workers has in no way been impaired. In fact, we firmly believe it has been benefited—

Because of the shorter hours.

Because of the greater ease of doing the work, even though the production be increased. The greater ease is brought about by a careful and scientific study of the method of doing the work, and, in the case of machinery, of making changes that will make the operating of same more natural for the employee and eliminating any undue strain that may have previously existed. Both in our hand operations and our machine operations unnecessary and tiring motions have been removed. We also give rest periods of 10 minutes in the morning and 10 minutes in the afternoon to employees engaged in the most tiresome or monotonous work. These rest periods are at the expense of the company. It has also come to our attention that, due to the opportunity afforded by scientific management to obtain a sizeable increase in wages, a number of our operators have taken a new lease of life and seem more happy and contented with life in general, which has an indirect effect on the health of the worker.

Accidents have decreased materially.

It has been gratifying to us to see many of our foremen and other employees who had been working in the same positions for many years without material progressing feel that scientific management offered them such a great opportunity for making themselves worth more to the company and to have them take advantage of that feeling and develop in a manner which oftentimes we did not previously believe was possible.

It has been said by some opponents of the Taylor system that the individuality is lessened or taken away. Our experience has been exactly the reverse.

We have spoken above only about the benefits to our employees, but the benefits to our company may also be of interest.

During the 10 busiest weeks in 1915 our production increased 22 per cent over the average of the 10 busiest weeks in 1910, 1911, and 1912. We are able to obtain under the system an increase in production on an average of 50 per cent per hour. The quality of our product has improved, as the bonus is based on perfect work.

The control of our orders has been as important as our increased production. We are able to give our customers 75 per cent better service and to make delivery promises that we know can be lived up to.

TIME STUDY.

The feeling against time study with a stop watch can only be caused by misunderstanding as to the meaning of "time study" and it seems as though the opposition comes mainly from those who can not have availed themselves of the opportunity to find out what time study really means. Otherwise, some of the arguments they have brought forth would not have been presented. While time study is an important factor in determining scientifically the length of time that it should take an operator or a machine to produce a certain amount of work, there are other factors equally as important, such as a proper routing system, in obtaining the increase in production. Not one of our operators objected in the least to time studies taken with a stop watch. We saw to it that they all understood what it meant. The fact that they are able without more effort to earn their bonuses in almost every instance, has demonstrated clearly to them, we feel sure, that the stop-watch system is not an evil but a benefit.

Very truly, yours,

A. W. EATON.

KLINK, BEAN & CO.,
San Francisco, February 17, 1916.

Mr. HERMAN W. GRUEL.

Chairman of Board of Trustees, Efficiency Society, New York.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your circular addressed to all members of the efficiency society, regarding the Tammner bill, will say that I have had many years' personal experience in large factories throughout the United States in the introduction of time study and premium and bonus payments, and submit the following:

The happiness of the worker is greatly increased when he is working to his normal capacity and making more money than a flat compensation.

The health of the worker: I have seen workmen whose health had been impaired by piecework rates which were laid down without scientific study. One of the objects of time study is to determine the rate of work which will not be injurious to the health of the workmen.

Accidents: Proper time study precludes accidents, as every possible method is studied to prevent them.

Wages: Wages are almost always raised for those workers who take a proper interest.

Hours of labor: The hours of labor are practically determined by the unions, on the Pacific coast, at least.

Output, nothing.

Cost of product: If the premium and bonus system is introduced, the cost of the product is lowered, and by increasing the output the overhead is automatically decreased.

Quality of product: As a rule the premium or bonus system appeals to the more intelligent class of workmen, and the more intelligent the workmen the better the quality of the product, other things being equal.

On the Pacific coast we have found very little, if any, objection among the workmen to the introduction of these methods, and we believe that this opposition comes largely from certain leaders who wish to use it in a political way. It certainly seems that we would have found objections among the rank and file in the regular course of our work, if it really existed.

Yours, very truly,

B. T. BEAN.

STOP-WATCH LEGISLATION.

LEWISTON, ME., February 16, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD R. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter to Mr. Bates of February 3 has been given to the writer for answer to-day. We are giving you answers to the various questions under the heading you have suggested, and we trust this answers all of these points.

We have, as you are probably aware, the usual records showing the old production, production after improving machinery and equipment before setting task, production asked for on task, average production actually obtained, increase in wages to bonus operators, reduction in wage cost, etc.; also a daily record for each bonus operator of their performance. If copies of any of these would be at all interesting to you, I would be very glad to send them at once.

As we are very desirous of defeating this bill, recognizing the influence it will have in industries, we would be only too glad to do anything you can suggest to assist your committee. Please ask for any further assistance you may require.

Sincerely, yours,

LEWISTON BLEACHERY & DYE WORKS.
J. E. MULLANEY.

LEWISTON BLEACHERY & DYE WORKS,
Lewiston, Me., February 16, 1916.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR SIR: Happiness of the workers: Our bonus workers are apparently happier and more contented, as it is now easier to hold them, while the day workers are very anxious and ready for bonus work and make no complaint to the presence of an instructor, in fact on several occasions having asked for the assistance of instructor.

Health of the worker: We have no cases of ill health among bonus workers.

Accidents: We are positive that the number of accidents is decreasing. Wages: Records show an average of 25 per cent increase in wages to bonus operators.

Hours of labor: Task workers rest at stated periods. Female workers, besides the rest periods, leave plant one-half hour early.

Output: Our output has been increased, due to improved machines and methods about 60 per cent, and due to training operatives and bonus incentive 40 per cent.

Cost of output: Is now about 80 per cent of former average cost.

Quality of product: Has not suffered, to say the least.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February 16, 1916.

EFFICIENCY SOCIETY,
52 Broadway, New York City.

ATTENTION MR. GREUL.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to yours of February 9, regarding personal experience with premium or bonus systems, wish to state that during my experience have found it is a mutual arrangement between employee and employer whereby, under your question "A"—

The happiness of the operator is greatly increased, as he has an opportunity to increase his earnings as well as efficiency.

We find operators who work under bonus systems to be in better physical and mental condition.

Regarding accidents, the writer believes there are fewer accidents because they are attending more closely to their work.

Regarding wages, the average hourly rate under bonus was 40 per cent higher than under regular day-work rating.

Hours of labor: We are getting more work under bonus system in eight-hour day than we formerly got under straight hourly rating in nine hours, due to increased production from bonus system.

Output: Greatly increased.

Cost of production: Considerably cheaper.

Quality of product: Equally as good as under day-work system.

Trusting this information is what you desire and will be of some benefit, I remain,

Yours, truly,

KNOX MOTORS CO.,
F. E. DOOLITTLE,
Superintendent.

EASTERN MANUFACTURING CO.,
Bangor, Me., February 7, 1916.

An increase in wages has resulted from the installation of this system of task and bonus, and the workers appear more happy and satisfied with their work owing to the fact that they are making more money and turning out a good day's work.

Since the introduction of scientific management this company has organized a service department whose principal function is to look after all matters pertaining to the health, comfort, and contentment of all employees. This department employs all new help and makes as careful a selection as is possible, endeavoring to secure for each position those who are physically and mentally suited to the work. Where the health of the worker is not good an effort is made to assign him work where there will be as little as possible physical strain. There have been no ill effects on the health of any of the operators employed on task and bonus, as there is no undue strain placed upon them while working under these conditions.

The nature of the work done in this mill is such that accidents are not liable to happen. No reports of accidents to workers on task and bonus have been made since the introduction of this system.

Weekly earnings of employees who have been placed on task and bonus have increased from 20 to 50 per cent.

Since the 1st of January, 1916, this company has been able to reduce its hours of labor from 10 to 9 and make an increase of 10 per cent on all wages affected by this reduction in hours.

The increase in output since task and bonus has been established varies in different departments from 20 per cent to 75 per cent.

The cost of product as affected by the work on which the task and bonus system is applied has decreased on various operations in amounts ranging from 10 per cent to 25 per cent. This decrease in cost takes cognizance of the fact that the overhead or indirect expenses are increased under the system of scientific management over what they were under the old type of management, but this increase of indirect labor is figured in the cost of production which shows a reduction in spite of this additional cost factor.

There has been a marked improvement in the quality of the product, due to the rigid inspection which has been made on all work done under task and bonus. This is evidenced by a decrease in the criticisms which have been made on our product by our customers.

Mr. SANFORD E. THOMPSON,
141 Milk Street, Boston, Mass.

DEAR Mr. THOMPSON: I am very glad to answer categorically the points in your letter of the 3d instant. In addition to this, I will write to some of the members of the House and Senate Military and Naval Affairs Committees in regard to the effect of bonus and premium work upon the happiness of the worker. I shall not indulge in any flights of fancy, merely remarking that the percentage of labor turnover on the operations which we put earliest and have had longest on bonus is markedly smaller than upon our piecework or daywork operations.

The health of the worker: Our employment statistics have not been available long enough or in sufficiently detailed form for me to give you any real information on this score. Incidentally, however, the necessity of the maintenance of standard conditions imposed by time study has resulted in more sanitary and cleanly conditions throughout our plant than existed previously.

Accidents: The number of accidents in our plant is very small, since the majority of the operations are hand operations and comparatively little machinery is employed. The bulk of the machine accidents we do have are in a department which as yet is not upon bonus, and for which the conditions of safety and cleanliness have not yet been standardized.

Wages: In the beginning of our time study and bonus work, we have progressively taken the operations upon which the wages were lowest, the output least, and the labor turnover greatest. Bonus work has resulted on these operations in an increase of wages of from 25 to 75 per cent; in a good many individual cases of over 100 per cent.

Hours of labor: Up to the present time bonus work has had no effect on the hours of labor, as only about half our plant is on bonus work, and we have not attained the ideal condition of balanced production that will enable us to change our hours, although the reduction of the working day is one of the chief goals at which we are aiming.

Output: With the introduction of bonus work the departments affected have shown a total increase of about 150 per cent in production in the past year and a half—that is, we are producing in the departments affected by bonus work about two and one-half times the amount produced 18 months ago. This is not due entirely to bonus work, but is largely contributed to by routing and generally more careful planning, but bonus work has made it possible to reach this altitude.

Cost of production: The direct cost of our product has been somewhat reduced. As to the effect on the indirect cost I am sorry I am unable to inform you, as I do not have the figures available at this plant.

Quality: The quality of the product has been immensely bettered; our inspection has steadily grown stricter, and we have not found the exaction of a high standard of quality is having any other than a beneficial effect all along the line. High quality of product and high speed of production have gone together under the maintenance of proper conditions. Our production in this plant, as you will notice, increased very appreciably in a short period. I am happy to say, further, that the end is not yet in sight; that there are vastly larger possibilities in the departments in which we have not done very intensive work. I should like to call to your attention an interesting incident that happened here within 10 days. A number of operators in a department which employs about 300 hands and which to the present has been working under piece rates, a good many of which are very inequitable, petitioned for an increase in the piece rates on certain lines of goods, and at the time of the petition raised the question why they could not be put on bonus work the same as operators in other departments, who, under new conditions, were earning much higher wages than formerly, and also higher wages than the petitioners. We have begun time study in that department.

If I can add anything further to this letter in future communications, I am at your service.

Very truly, yours,

D. G. WALSH, Jr.

TABOR MANUFACTURING CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Records examined by Mr. Godfrey, now president of Drexel Institute, show 73 per cent increased wages and 25 per cent reduction in selling price.

EASTERN MANUFACTURING CO., BANGOR, ME.

[By Mr. F. R. Ayer, vice president and general manager.]

Workers more satisfied: weekly earnings for employees increased 25 per cent to 50 per cent; hours reduced from 10 to 9; increase in output, 20 per cent to 75 per cent; cost reduced 10 per cent to 25 per cent; quality of product improved.

LEWISTON BLEACHERY AND DYE WORKS, LEWISTON, ME.

[By Mr. D. N. Bates, agent.]

Wages increased 25 per cent; rest periods given to workers; women quit work one-half hour earlier than men; accidents decreased; output increased by improved machine and methods about 60 per cent; by training operators and bonus, 40 per cent; cost reduced about 40 per cent; workers anxious for a bonus.

H. H. FRANKLIN MFG. CO., SYRACUSE, N. Y.

[By Mr. G. D. Babcock, production manager.]

Increase in wages, 36 per cent—20 per cent above average wage in locality; hours reduced to 50 per week; reduction in sale price of our product for improved quality, 32 per cent.

HERMANN, AUKAM &amp; CO., LEBANON, PA.

[By Mr. D. J. Walsh, Jr.]

Labor turnover reduced; sanitary conditions improved; increase of wages of 25 per cent to 75 per cent; increase in production, 150 per cent; largely through the combination of planning and bonus incentive; direct cost of production somewhat reduced; quality bettered. The operators in one department requested that bonus work be established in their department so as to give them a chance to earn as high wages as the operators now on bonus.

SMITH & FURBUSH MACHINE CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

[By C. W. Schwartz, jr., general manager.]

Twenty per cent to 25 per cent premiums earned; output increased; gross cost, including expenses, about the same, with much greater uniformity of cost and more accurate cost in detail; quality better; scolding eliminated.

PACKARD MOTOR CAR CO., DETROIT, MICH.

[By S. S. Beall, vice president of manufacturing.]

Happiness increased; have been requested by men to set standard times; average premium 27 per cent of day wages; hours of labor shortened by premium system; output increased; quality of products maintained.

KNOX MOTORS CO., SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

[By F. E. Doolittle, superintendent.]

Happiness of operators greatly increased; better physical and mental condition; more work accomplished in eight hours under bonus system than in nine hours on straight time; output greatly increased; cost considerably cheaper; quality equally good.

ACME WIRE CO., NEW HAVEN, CONN.

[By Ralph W. Langley, works manager.]

Wages of employees increased 25 per cent; records prove no increase in accidents; no injury to health; output increased 25 per cent to 50 per cent; cost diminished; quality of product improved; bonus earnings frequently deposited in savings bank.

PLIMPTON PRESS, NORWOOD, MASS.

[By A. E. Barter, superintendent.]

Workers happier through the setting of definite tasks; health improved and accidents decreased; wages increased 20 per cent to 30 per cent, with average wage increased much more than this through the more continuous employment, which is a direct result of time study; capacity of plant increased; standard of quality improved rather than lowered.

NEW ENGLAND BUTT CO., PROVIDENCE, R. I.

[By J. G. Aldrich, president.]

Employees anxious to have time studies made; accidents less; wages at least 35 per cent higher; output considerably more on work which has been time studied; cost of product considerably less; quality of product is in general better under time-studied work.

SEWELL-CLAPP ENVELOPE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

[By R. B. Frazer.]

Wages based on time study increased 15 per cent to 25 per cent; hours of labor planned to be reduced; increase in output up to 100 per cent. In a recent offer of special preferred stock the first purchasers were men who were working on bonuses.

WAVERLEY PRESS, BALTIMORE, MD.

[By Edward B. Passano, president.]

Increase in production 33½ per cent; operatives earning 33 to 50 per cent more, apparently satisfied and in good health.

CLOTHCRAFT SHOPS, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

[By Richard A. Felss, general manager.]

Happiness improved, health of workers improved, as shown specifically by average of absences only 1.4 per cent; accidents formerly quite numerous reduced to practically nothing; wages largely increased; hours of labor reduced from 54 to 48 and overtime practically eliminated; output increased; cost substantially lessened, although wages enormously increased; accurate standards of quality have been set through stop-watch observations.

EATON, CRANE & PIKE CO.

[By Wm. M. Eaton, secretary and treasurer.]

Increase in wages, 15 per cent; hours reduced, 10 per cent; greater confidence because employee knows task set by scientific study of methods and time is accurate; health benefited through the shorter hours; greater ease in doing work; rest periods and greater happiness because of wage increase; accidents decreased materially; output increased 22 per cent; quality of product improved.

Dr. H. S. Person, director of the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finances of Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., writes as follows:

"I have never been in charge of an industrial plant, nor have I practiced management engineering, therefore what I have to say is not based upon that sort of experience. I have, however, in order to acquaint myself with scientific management for the purpose of instruction, visited many plants, talked with workmen, and made observations, particularly with respect to the affect of scientific management upon the workman. My conclusions are as follows with respect to the Taylor system of management in which is used the stop watch for time study and in which is applied some form of premium of bonus-wage payment:

"The happiness of the worker is greater than under conventional management.

"The health of the worker seems to average better than under conventional management.

"The statistical record of accidents shows that they are less under the Taylor system of management.

"Wage are greater for a given expenditure of time and energy.

"Hours of labor vary in different plants according to the industry, but for any given industry seem to be less than for the average of that industry.

"The output is greater per hour of application of labor.

"The unit cost of the product is less than under conventional management.

"The quality of product is better than under conventional forms of management, for the reason that its method of inspection eliminates defective work."

Under this scientific management the service department was installed, which included numerous benefits for us. The working hours have been shortened, the sanitary conditions are much improved.

NELLIE MILLER,

First, I get more money in wages, and, second, there is not any time lost, and in many other ways I find the Taylor system much better for the work people.

Mr. WILLIAM HEMMERLY,
New Haven, Conn.

DEAR SIR: After I am over my surprise that intelligent people in our days can try to stop a method that soon will show up as the only method under which the workingman will work in the future, I shall gladly and frankly state my experience of working under a bonus system.

I started to work for a concern that was putting in a bonus system (Taylor system) in 1912. When I started to work the shop was still on day-work basis and all the jobs were day work. I was at that time earning $8 a week, but a few weeks later I was transferred to some part of the shop where they all worked on piecework. After a little experience I could here earn from $11 to $13, but when the whistle blew at night I would be all tired out because I started in full speed in the morning and kept it going as long as possible, but I would always be too tired to go anywhere at night.

After a while the company was ready to put the whole factory on bonus basis, and I started to work after the new system, together with the whole room. At first we did not like it at all, but after a few days had passed we all found that we were not only making the same money and doing the same quantity of work, but never got tired out as we used to, because there was a certain time set to do the operation in which made us start in with speed that would enable us to finish the job in time, and by keeping it going with that speed all day we would most the time produce more than we did after the piecework system without being tired, and after the bonus system we could always be sure to get at least our day-rate pay, even if we had bad luck with the work or didn't feel good, as we were always paid our day rate, even if we did not make the job in bonus time (the time the operator is allowed for a certain operation). The bonus time was set by a time-study clerk, who timed two or three medium operators with a stop watch. He did not only time the whole operation, but he also timed every necessary movement the operator did to do the operation, and by doing so he would get the exact time it would take any medium operator to do the jobs. On top of that was allowed a certain per cent for lost time, etc. So by any means this was the only fair way to get the time. It was fair to the operator, because she or he could be sure that it was the right time for the operation; and it was fair to the company, because they were sure to get the work done in the time it ought to be.

After that I have never heard one unsatisfactory word said in the shop about the bonus system, and we had many operators coming from the other shops with piecework system who stated that they never would work after the piecework system again after having tried bonus system.

The bonus system makes the workingman and his home happy, because he don't come home from work all tired out. He also gets fair wages and work under human conditions, with the same rights as the fellow workmen.

If you wish, you can publish this letter if it can be of any help for the standing of the bonus system.

Very truly, yours,

TORVAL D. HOYER,
Acme Wire Co.

I have worked in the Acme Wire Co. nearly four years, and during that time I worked under three systems—daywork, piecework, and now the Taylor system.

I do think and like the Taylor system the best.

Yours, truly,

A. KOCH,
Acme Wire Co.

With my part of work at time study on task and bonus have found it very interesting and educating.

The old method of payment means just one pay envelope on pay day, while the bonus plan makes a willing worker and puts on an extra red envelope into his hands, with lots to gain and nothing to lose.

S. F. GILLA,
Sewell-Clapp Envelopes.

Mr. E. B. PASSANO,
President Waverly Press, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SIR: I have been asked to state my opinion of the bonus system under which we work.

I like it and would much regret returning to a straight salary, where extra effort counts for little or nothing to the operative.

I consider the present system the finest sort of encouragement to do more work and better work. It is a fair deal on both sides. It creates a personal interest on the part of the employee in the firm's progress, and the operative is enabled to earn more money with no more physical strain than under any other system and with a greater mental satisfaction, because extra production and quality are recorded and come back in the pay envelopes.

I am earning more money in less time, with less physical and mental strain than I believe would be possible on a straight salary basis, and I am better satisfied than I have been in the years I have been employed.

The fact that I came here 18 months ago a stranger, without home or friends in the city, and liked your bonus system well enough to remain and then return here four times from trips home, rather than accept $18 per week straight salary in my State, Massachusetts, is the best argument I can offer.

Very respectfully,

FEBRUARY 21, 1916.

LILLIAN H. HILL.

Under the Taylor system the girls do the work the quickest and easiest way, found by timing an efficient operator.

MARGARET PURCELL,
Acme Wire Co., New Haven, Conn.

It has not interfered in the least with my physical condition or happiness. For myself I am in favor of the bonus system.

HELEN BAKER,
Acme Wire Co.

It also encourages us to put more interest in our work.

FLORENCE JOHNSON,
Acme Wire Co.

It opens the way to better positions for men of every phase of employment who can handle themselves in positions of trust and authority. I can speak without a possible chance of contradiction of my own position after showing the engineers that I could work under and with their plans my position as a foreman under long hours was improved and was placed in one of the most responsible positions in our plant, and my hours changed from nine and one-half to eight hours a day and giving me the opportunity to increase my earning capacity and my future fixed if I continue to be honest and on the job.

H. C. HOWES,
Sewell-Clapp Envelope, Chicago.

After working under its control against the old rule-of-thumb methods you find out how fair it is.

H. G. HOWES,
Sewell-Clapp Envelopes, Chicago.

In classes of work where possible I believe that by making time studies both employer and employees will be benefited. Surely persons who are competent and efficient and who produce a large amount of work should receive a higher wage than those who are less efficient and produce less work. The employee is paid for the exact amount of work produced. The employer pays for the exact amount of work received. Is it not a square deal?

In my own experience the bonus system pays far better than a standard wage.

ADA G. BEARD,
Waverly Press, Baltimore, Md.

In regard to the bonus question, would say that having worked on bonus system now for over two years I am in favor of it.

Resolution by Chamber of Commerce of the United States in regard to the question of industrial efficiency and reaffirming the chamber's former action on this question adopted at the fourth annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States February 10, 1916.

Whereas the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, assembled in its third annual meeting, urged that Congress should reject the so-called Deitrick amendment to a pending appropriation bill, in so far as this amendment sought to prevent the study of methods to increase industrial efficiency in manufacturing establishments of the Government and to forbid additional compensation to employees as a reward for improvement in skill and effort; and

Whereas no legislative enactment of any kind should have as its purpose interference with the development of industrial efficiency in ways which comport with the public interest: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in fourth annual meeting assembled emphatically reaffirms the attitude it has previously taken upon this question.

The amendment of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs is, on page 90, after line 19, to strike out:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Does the Senator wish to speak on this amendment?

Mr. BRADY. Just for a moment.

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRADY. I just wanted to say that I voted against striking out this amendment in the committee, and reserved the right to oppose the amendment on the floor of the Senate. I did so for the reason that I do not believe it is for the best interests of the Government or the workingmen, either, to strike out the section as it is written in the House bill.

I have listened with much interest to what the Senator from Massachusetts had to say, and he presents a splendid argument from his viewpoint. But I believe we will have more efficiency and good service by giving the workingmen bonuses in a different manner than to attempt to hold a stop watch on them. For that reason I shall vote to strike out the provision.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very glad to yield to the Senator from Idaho to make his very few and very modest remarks. I think he might have gone much further but for his modesty, for he has been in his time a very large employer of labor, and he has also had experience as a laborer. Speaking as he does in his unostentatious manner and giving it as his opinion, I think that what he has said is entitled to more weight than the words of an inexperienced man.

Mr. President, as a prelude to what I am about to say I want to put Massachusetts against Massachusetts. The junior Senator from that great State [Mr. WEEKS] has occupied the floor of the Senate in support of the stop-watch, Taylor, and other systems, which he groups generally under the head of efficiency systems, and has very earnestly advocated the continuance of these systems, and, by logic, the extension of these systems in Government plants; and I presume I would not do that Senator an injustice if I were further to assume that he is in favor of introducing this system into all departments of governmental work and activity.

I do not profess to be an expert as to the details of these systems, but as I understand the system it is this:

An expert, or an alleged efficiency expert, comes into a private or a Government plant. He makes up his mind how long it ought to take a workman to do a particular thing. Thereupon that is fixed as the standard, and any man who does the work in shorter time is given a credit, an additional payment. Any workman who exceeds the time receives nothing for the excess time. This, it is urged, makes for efficiency and offers a premium to the more skillful and active employees.

In order to determine what a workman is doing, as I understand the system—and I speak of it in the rough—if the expert has determined that a certain job ought to be done in 50 minutes, when a workman starts at that job the stop watch is started, and when it has run the 50 minutes the stop watch stops. If it takes the workman an hour longer to complete the job, he gets no pay for that additional hour; but if he gets through with his job in 40 minutes he not only gets the price he would receive if he did it in 50 minutes, but he gets an additional price. So that the premium is put upon speed—not upon the care or skill with which the work is done. If it be up to a standard sufficient to pass at all, a premium is put upon speed.

A very fine analysis of that thought is found in the remarks of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], made with reference to a provision such as we now have before us. It is reported in the House hearings. Senator LODGE said:

The one object of the time measure is to produce speed. Now, speed is not the only thing that the Government or any other employer or manufacturer is seeking for. There is something more important than speed, and that is quality. Speed has nothing to do with quality. Owing to great inventions of our time, owing to steam and electricity, we have carried speed to such an extent in all of our manufactures that certainly in many cases the product has deteriorated in quality as it has advanced in quantity and rapidity of production.

The stop watch and the time measure can tell you nothing whatever about quality. It may be a basis of fixing wages or anything else, but the only thing we can possibly tell by time is speed. We all associate a stop watch with its use for racing horses. I dare say it is used now for racing automobiles, but not by a man buying horses for his ordinary use.

Now, to put the stop watch on human beings may tell how fast they can work, but it can tell nothing of the quality of their work. Nor how long they may work. A horse may be very good for a short spurt and absolutely worthless for a 4-mile race. It is a poor test. It is a promoter of the idea that the one thing to do is to turn out just as much as we can just as fast as we can. That has gone through everything in this period of ours. It has deteriorated style, it has deteriorated literature, it has deteriorated art. It is deteriorating manufacture.

Mr. President, this is an important matter. There are about eight Senators in the Chamber; and I have gotten a little tired of hearing discussions here to vacant seats and seeing Senators come in and not know the question on which they are voting. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. KERN. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] on important business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, my sole object in calling a quorum was in order that this matter may be stated so that at least some 10 or 15 Members of the Senate will know what the question is when we come to vote on it. I do not say that for the purpose of criticizing Senators. We are held here necessarily from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6.30 in the evening. Every Senator has business to attend to that requires his attention elsewhere, and I have seen, particularly in the last few days, important amendments passed or defeated by men a large number of whom had heard no part of the discussion and were not familiar with the question.

Now, if you will bear with me a very few minutes, I want to state this matter. The House of Representatives by its bill prohibited or attempted to prohibit the use of the stopwatch system in the Government arsenals. The Senate committee strikes out that provision, and the question is whether we will introduce and extend that system in the Government plants and arsenals or whether we will stop it.

Congress undertook to stop it by legislation some time ago, and Gen. Crozier, as is conclusively shown by the House report, practically nullified the act of Congress.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator, I think, is doing Gen. Crozier a little injustice in making that statement. Most of the work done at the Watertown Arsenal is provided for under the fortifications bill. The fortifications bill did not contain the provision which the Senator is criticizing, and therefore he could do it without evading the act of Congress.

Mr. REED. Yes; he found a way by which technically he could defeat the purpose of the act. He very assiduously, and I will not say cunningly but persistently, pursued that course.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I wish the Senator would not interrupt me, because I am going to try and be very brief.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. REED. The real question is the Taylor system. It may be called by any name you please, but it is the introduction of the Taylor system with some modifications. I want the Senate before it votes this system into our Government arsenals to know what the Taylor system is.

I call attention to the House report at page 14, and you can get an idea of Mr. Taylor's object when he created this system from his own statement, which is quoted. If it be not the statement of a man who is willing to drive labor to the edge of despair, then I can not understand the English language. I would characterize it more harshly, but its author has gone into the great beyond.

When the writer left the steel works, the Bethlehem pieceworkers were the finest body of picked laborers that he had ever seen together. They were practically all first-class men, because in each case the task which they were called upon to perform was such that only a first-class man could do it. The tasks were all purposely made so severe that not more than one out of five laborers (perhaps even a smaller percentage than this) could keep up.

Where the labor market is large enough to secure in a reasonable time enough strictly first-class men, the piecework rates should be fixed on such a basis that only a first-class man working at his best can earn the average amount called for. This figure should be, in the case of first-class men, as stated above, from 30 to 100 per cent beyond the wages usually paid. The task idea is emphasized with this style of piecework by two things—the high wages and the laying off, after a reasonable trial, of incompetent men; and for the success of the system the number of men employed on practically the same class of work should be large enough for the workmen quite often to have the object lesson of seeing men laid off for failing to earn high wages and others substituted in their places.

Now, that was the idea of the father of this system, to create a system where only one man out of ten could survive its hardships, and to hold before all employees constantly the example of their fellow workmen being discharged.

How is the system organized and effectuated? I read from page 15 of the House report. They quote the testimony of Mr. Frey, who was one of the board appointed to investigate this very question, the Federal Industrial Relations Commission.

If you will follow them you will see how it works out a plan that absolutely compels every man to work in constant fear of discharge and every man to become the slave driver of his fellow workmen or of every man who may work under him. Here is the scheme worked out:

One instance showing the extent to which "efficiency experts" can develop methods of speeding the workers up to their physical and nervous limit made a permanent impression upon the investigators.

The plant employed the usual forms of time and motion study for the determination of what the task should be, and the workers were paid a bonus if they accomplished the task. For example, if the time set upon a task was one hour, the worker, if he finished the job in an hour, was credited with an hour and a quarter's pay, based upon his hourly wage rate; so that if this was 20 cents he would receive 25 cents for the hour's work.

This bonus was not considered sufficient to properly assist and stimulate the workers, so the foreman was also paid a bonus, this being based upon the number of workers under his charge who earned their full bonus. For the foreman's efficiency to reach 100 per cent it would be necessary for every worker in his gang to earn their bonus every hour of the working day. It was therefore to the foreman's interest to do all that lay in his power to see that every worker accomplished the task which had been set.

However, this was but a part of the scheme or system which aimed to get all of the work possible out of the workers, for another factor entered largely into the plan. The time-study man and task setter was also paid a bonus which was based upon the number of workers who failed to make their tasks, the task setter's efficiency reaching 100 per cent only when every worker in a group failed to finish their jobs in the time set for the accomplishment of their tasks. The time-study man was therefore paid a bonus to set the tasks so high that the workers could rarely, if ever, accomplish them, while the foreman was paid a bonus based upon the number of workers who could be prevailed upon to finish their jobs within the time set.

Under this system there were no rest periods—

And so forth.

There is more of this, which I shall not take the time to read.

Mr. THOMAS. I was called out, and only entered the Chamber while the Senator was reading. May I ask the Senator what he is reading from?

Mr. REED. I have just read from the testimony of Mr. Frey, of the Industrial Relations Commission, quoted in the report of the committee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, an analysis of the scheme exposes its diabolism and shows to what oppressive uses the Taylor system can be put. Let me illustrate the scheme just referred to:

A factory owner employs an efficiency expert whose business it is to determine the number of minutes within which each piece of work in the factory must be completed. It is then provided that if any workman does not perform his task within the given time he shall be docked, but that he shall have a premium if he completes the task in less than the specified time.

The factory owner then employs a boss who likewise comes within the control of the same system, the rule as to the boss being that his rating is to be determined by the efficiency of the men. Accordingly, if the boss can compel every man under him to complete his work within the time fixed by the efficiency engineer, the boss's efficiency is 100 per cent. If he can force the men under him to do the work in less time than that specified the boss's efficiency is thereby increased above 100 per cent. But if a single man fails to perform his task within the allotted time, the boss's efficiency is to that extent decreased. The result is that the boss as a matter of self-protection or self-advancement is compelled to drive his men to the very limit of their strength.

But the scheme does not end here. The efficiency expert or time-study man and task setter is paid a bonus if the workmen fail to perform the task set by him. If he sets the task so hard that no single man can perform the work assigned, then the task setter's efficiency goes to 100 per cent. The greater the degree of failure the higher will be the task setter's efficiency.

Conceive, if you can, the condition of an employee compelled to work at a task which is set by a man whose rating and value depend upon the task being made so hard that the employee can not perform it, and to work under a boss whose rating and value is to be determined by his ability to compel the laborer to perform the task in less than the time fixed by the efficiency expert. Is it not plain that the employee is being ground between the upper millstone (the efficiency expert), and the nether millstone (the boss)?

Such a scheme is more inhuman than that conceived in the mind of old Pharaoh when he compelled the Israelites to make bricks without straw. Pharaoh's scheme was crude and ineffective. The Taylor system is scientifically fiendish.

That is the Taylor system in its entirety and in its beauty, and that is the system that is being proposed for the Government factories.

As was said by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] time speeds are not the only element. You put a lot of men to work and tell them if they accomplish a certain task within a certain time, so that it can pass inspection, they will receive a premium, and if they do not they will lose their time.

One of these men is engaged in assembling one of the great pieces of ordnance, the working or the nonworking of which may mean the saving of a battle or the losing of a battle. Put him under such a system as I have described, that man may turn out a piece of ordnance and some day it will fail to do its work and a great catastrophe fall upon our arms. The whole system is inhuman. It is brutal. It is fiendish, and it ought not to be imposed upon white men or upon men of any other color.

Now, Mr. President, where was it devised? Was it a thing that was advocated by those who studied the welfare of labor or was it advocated by those who studied the other side of the question?

I find in this report that there is quoted as an advocate of this system that distinguished gentleman of whom we heard so much when we were investigating the lobby, and who was the head of the manufacturers' lobby association here in Washington.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has read some letters. Of course you can get individual letters from individual men, particularly as is indicated by this report when influence has been brought upon men by their bosses and their superiors. But what about the great voice, the common voice of labor, upon this question? The Senator says this system has met with universal approval. But this is what the House committee said after a full investigation, the results of which are to be found in this volume of approximately 375 pages. This is what that committee said:

Labor, organized and unorganized, has systematically opposed the introduction of the system into Government plants. Gen. Crozier asserts that outside influences are responsible for the workers' hostile attitude, but the evidence submitted to your committee seems completely to disprove the general theory.

I call attention in this connection of those who have some regard for human beings to the report at page 14, in which it is stated:

The United States Public Health Service has just issued bulletin No. 73, "Tuberculosis Among Industrial Workers," by Surg. D. E. Robinson and Asst. Surg. J. G. Wilson.

Those gentlemen are surely impartial and competent witnesses, and here is what they have to say:

"SPEEDING UP.

"This is a natural resultant of the piecework system, and from the standpoint of the employees' health does more harm than any other one thing associated with factory work. Although it works, or appears to work, to the interest of the employer by increasing the output of the individual workers, these good results are probably only temporary, as the pernicious effect upon the health of the wage earner will, in the end, have the opposite effect."

And again on page 16 of the bulletin, speaking particularly of the boot and shoe industry:

"One of the most noticeable things about the work in these factories is the high tension at which everyone seems to be working, as the work in nearly all instances is piecework and earnings naturally depend on the output. This high-pressure work or speeding, in our opinion, is one of the most important causes of the lowered physical vitality noticed among these workers, as the constant strain of work at top speed, week after week, must tell in the end. The human body is only a machine, too often a delicate one, capable of standing only so much abuse. With this high-pressure work for eight or nine hours a day, with but a half hour's breathing spell for lunch, coupled with the effects of dissipation and loss of sleep, we have a combination that only the strong can resist, the weak succumbing to any infection with which they come into contact. Moreover, the nervous organization suffers in this speeding process and neurasthenic individuals were frequently observed among both male and female shop workers."

If the Senator will pardon me, I call attention to another vice of this system. Who is it that lays out the work for these men? Who are these efficiency experts? If they were old and skilled mechanics who had themselves stood at the forge and at the lathe and had worked, they might devise a plan that would be reasonably fair for their fellow workmen; but this is what we are told by the House committee as the result of their investigation, at page 13:

The bulk of the time-study men encountered were immature men drawn from the shop or from college. They were expected to get their knowledge and training in all the matters enumerated above through the actual work of the time study and task setting. In the majority of cases encountered it was not considered essential that they should have had any special training in the particular industry. A man who had worked exclusively in the machine shop was considered competent, after a few weeks or months of contact and trial experience, to set tasks in a cotton mill.

A little further on, on that same line, at page 25, you will find this:

We found very early in our investigations that not only were the leading exponents of scientific management at odds between themselves as to how time studies should be made and what form of payment should be used, but that they were unanimously of the opinion that there were more fakers installing scientific management than there were fakers in any other profession.

So you take a class of so-called efficiency experts, the majority of whom are fakers, and you place one of those inexperienced fakers in a great factory where hundreds of American citizens are employed, and Mr. Fakir, who never put hand to a lathe, who could not assemble a monkey wrench, proceeds to say how long and how short a time a piece of work shall be done in. If he makes an unjust decision, every man in the plant suffers; but if he is really an expert according to the Taylor idea, he works out a scheme in which every man is worked at the highest tension of muscle and nerve and brain.

How has it worked? The House hearings and the testimony developed that to some extent. They took the case of some of the best workmen in some of the best shops who were working according to the schedules prepared by these alleged experts. They put that workman to work, and then found that his efficiency varied—that is, taking the rule of the expert now as the basis—all the way from 21 per cent to 150 per cent. In some cases working at the same rate, the same tension, he could do the job in two-thirds of the time laid down; in other cases, it took nearly five times the amount that was allowed to do the work.

That is the kind of system that we are asked to install in our Government workshops. It is repugnant to every principle of humanity; it is destructive to really scientific work; it destroys the independence of the laboring men; it puts them on a nervous and mental test, which absorbs all of their vitality. It is intolerable; it is unbearable; it is being condemned by the most humane of labor employers; and the Congress of the United States of America, which is engaged in passing legislation for the amelioration of the condition of children, for the shortening of the hours of labor, and for other measures looking toward a betterment of the condition of the toiler, is about to be asked by the Senate committee to commit itself to a policy as racking, as abominable, as harrowing, as revolting, as grinding as was ever devised by a slave driver in the Tropics.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate at any length, but I feel very deeply in relation to this matter. Primarily I am opposed, as I have before said, to this system. I feel that it is humiliating to the average man to have a boss stand over him as he would over a horse with a time watch. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] said that with very few exceptions all laboring men were for it. I find here in the House hearings, on page 35, the statement of Mr. O'Connell. I will not read the whole of his statement, but he says this:

The men at the Rock Island Arsenal of the United States Government—1,500 of them—when it became generally known that the Taylor system would be put into effect, these men, regardless of their trade or calling, whether mechanics or laborers, this army of men arose as one man and said: "No; no Taylor system for us. We are working for one of the best employers in the world, the United States Government; we have an eight-hour working day; the wages are as good as those paid by private employers; but we will not accept the Taylor system."

I find here, again, a letter to the former Secretary of War dated at the Watertown Arsenal, which the Senator from Massachusetts has quoted, to Lindley M. Garrison. I shall not read the whole of it, but I shall read a portion of it, as follows:

The effect of this system here has been to create a feeling of distrust between the employees and the management; it has destroyed every vestige of cooperation between the workmen and the foremen collectively, and has produced a condition of unhappiness throughout the whole works.

Yet I heard the Senator from Massachusetts quote from some letter which was sent to him from some private concern, stating how happy their employees were. The fact is the average man is not very happy under toll; there is no doubt about that. We work because it will bring us results.

As I said in my opening remarks on this subject, I realize that the Government of the United States can do nothing as to private concerns. The great plants of Carnegie, of Phipps, and those like the Homestead and Bethlehem plants will do as they please; but I pray, in God's name, let the Government of the United States be a model to the employers of labor throughout the land. That the Carnegie and Homestead people have made money for their principals under this system I do not deny, but let our Government plant not be built up upon the bone and blood of our American workmen.

The Senator from Massachusetts stated that under this system wages have been increased. I desire, however, to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that wages have been increased without the application of this system. The wages of bricklayers, carpenters, mechanics, and blacksmiths throughout our entire land have been increased. They have increased in wage, in general thrift, and in general happiness.

The Senator cites the fact that the time system was applied only in the case of the making of some intricate or delicate tools. I have here a report showing that men were timed while carrying 13 tons of ore during 8 hours. Think of a human frame lifting up and carrying 13 tons of ore! That this laborer might carry 15 or 16, or even more, tons of ore to suit these unreasonable and unholy exactions a time watch was held on him.

The Senator from Massachusetts tells us about some woman who in her stitching would use a thread a yard long, when if it was 10 inches long she might take two stitches instead of one. Great God! Has it come to this, that as to the poor seamstress who sits and stitches and stitches her very life away by the glimmer of a midnight lamp, they calculate the stitches to this degree? Oh, heavens! Is it possible that the liberal, generous, educated "hub of the universe"—Massachusetts—stands for a system that would so measure a woman's earnings and her livelihood?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield to my best friend.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Jersey in part represents a manufacturing State—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. A wonderful State. Do not a great many of the manufacturers in New Jersey employ this system?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think too many of them do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator received many protests from laboring men in those industries?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh, they are under the thumb of the men who employ them. No; I have not, but I should like to know by what process the Senator from New Hampshire has received so many commendatory letters of this unholy system? I have not received many.

Mr. GALLINGER. My observation is that laboring men are not much under the thumb of their employers nowadays. That is my observation.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No, thank God, the laboring men are on top.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they are.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes; I think they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know in my own little State, which is a manufacturing State, a good many of the industrial establishments are employing this system, and I have never received a single protest against it by letter or otherwise.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can find you protest after protest, although I have not sought them out. I could hardly believe that in the Senate, in this enlightened age, there could be found so splendid a Senator as the Senator from the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] standing up and defending such an unholy and indefensible system.

Mr. GALLINGER. My own impression is, if the Senator will permit me, though unfortunately I have not the facts to substantiate the suggestion I am going to make, that there has been a great exaggeration as to what this system really means. But we will let that pass for the present. I wonder very much, indeed, that in our great industrial establishments where this system is in vogue the laboring men are not complaining more than they are; in fact, so far as I know, they are not complaining at all.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate longer, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Jersey sits down, I want to ask him a question, which nobody can answer so well as he. What does he think the effect would be if the stop-watch system were applied to the Senate of the United States? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think it might be a blessing to the country; but, if we were engaged in physical toil, I would say that it would be utterly un-American, ungenerous, and inhuman.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs I cast my vote for the elimination of this proviso. Having done so, it is perhaps not improper that I should occupy briefly the attention of the Senate with a statement of the reasons which controlled my action.

The interests of the public are of some importance in all matters of general legislation, and generally quite as important as those which are identified with some particular features of it; and, in my judgment, the interests of the public as to this and kindred subjects of legislation, especially in our so-called measures of preparation, require the establishment of that efficiency commensurate with first-class production consistent with the rights of the employees of the Government and with the general elements of humanity.

Mr. President, it is very easy to attribute improper motives to those whose opinions are not entirely satisfactory to us, and it is equally easy to meet argument with vituperation. Vituperation, however, is a species of self-indulgence, and is in no sense argumentation. I shall, therefore, in the short time that I shall occupy endeavor to confine myself to the merits of the subject as I understand them.

I may say, Mr. President, by way of preliminary, that I have no fear of being reproached with any desire or intention of impairing the rights or denying the just requirements of labor in anything which I do here in the discharge of my duties. If a man's record is of any value, it should serve him amply by mere reference to it whenever occasion requires.

I advocated the eight-hour day nearly 40 years ago, and 29 years ago I appeared before a committee of the general assembly of my State in advocacy of an employers' liability act, basing my argument on the dissenting opinion of a judge of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the case of Railroad Co. against Kealy, as I now recall, in Eighth Ohio Reports, which embodies every argument for that legislation which has recently been enacted and which we designate by the general term of "employers' liability acts." I have been and I always shall be an advocate of every movement tending to ameliorate labor conditions, with due regard to the mutual welfare of all, so long as I am in public life. On the other hand, if there be propositions which do not commend themselves to my judgment and which seem to be inimical to labor or to society, I shall from the same sense of duty act in accordance with what my judgment requires. Hence, in so far as this subject is concerned, being one which affects the public interest quite as much as if not more than any private interest, the disposition to be made of it should be determined by such facts and inferences as may be pertinent to the subject.

Mr. President, with this preliminary statement, let us see what the proviso is. It reads as follows:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

In argument this proviso has been confounded—at least that seems to me a proper deduction—with what is known as the Taylor system—a system which has been lauded and condemned to as great a degree, perhaps, as any industrial experiment of modern times, the merits of which, either in theory or in practice, I shall not spend any time in discussing. It may or it may not be, for any purpose of mine, a most pernicious and damnable system, one invented for the undoing of labor and for the destruction of the energies and the health of those employed in our manufactories. But I want to say with reference to it that if the system is what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has asserted it to be, if the system is capable of being and has been used for the production of those conditions to which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] refers, it should not only be banished from all the avenues of Government employment but it should be prohibited by law in every State in the Union, for if it be true that in its general use it serves to debilitate, overwork, and destroy the health of the laborer, then a great public interest, above and beyond that of any manufacturer or of any laborer, demands governmental action for its prohibition.

But, Mr. President, has this system or any system which heretofore has been in operation in any of the arsenals or armories of the United States produced these dire results, or any of them; and, if so, where is the evidence of the fact?

This matter was presented to the Military Affairs Committee some two years ago for the first time in my experience. There it was the subject of general discussion, and arguments in favor of and against it were made by the respective members of that committee to each other. A Senator came before us asking to be heard against the proposed amendment. He was armed with a number of communications, principally, I think, from the Frankford Arsenal, from the workmen employed there; and, without any exception, these letters were in protest to the committee against the adoption of the proviso. I recall distinctly that in a number of instances it was recited by the writers that, through the extra pay they had been able to realize in the performance of their tasks, they had purchased homes upon the installment plan, and were depending upon the continuance of the existing system to earn sufficient to meet the installments and pay the amounts still due upon them. That, Mr. President, made and makes a greater appeal to me than anything which has been urged in behalf of or against the proviso, for if it be true that under the operation of whatever system was employed, the wage earner was able to obtain a home for himself and his family, to anchor himself to the soil of the Commonwealth, and become a freeholder in very truth, until those homes are paid for there should be no interference with the prevailing system.

Now, it may be that these letters were extorted from their signers by slave drivers in the employ of the Government, or by the exercise of some coercive power the existence of which I can not imagine in a governmental establishment, and that they were not, therefore, the free expressions of those who wrote the letters, or, if so, that they were exaggerated or false. But, Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the overpay was certainly no exaggeration. I do not think anything contained in these letters is an exaggeration; for if so, how easily it could have been refuted if the fact were so.

The letters which have been presented here by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], coming from the Watertown Arsenal and from outside employees, may have been the result of coercion, but to my mind it is a poor way to meet a proposition by questioning the source of the proof, and to insinuate that a fact properly authenticated should not be received because, forsooth, the contingencies may permit of the conclusion that the communication was not the act of free will of the person making it.

I also endeavored to ascertain, on my own account, if there were any specific instances of overwork under the prevailing system, such as the indefinite one instanced by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE]. Of course my means of investigation were limited, but they disclosed nothing of the kind; and the instance given by the Senator from New Jersey—which he unquestionably believes to have occurred—is, to my mind, nothing in the world but a myth. I do not believe that any individual can be produced who has been compelled to work under any system in any department of the Government until completely exhausted and taken to a hospital or some other place for physical relief.

It is easy, Mr. President, to cite an instance if it exists, and very easy to establish it by name, date, and place of occurrence. The Senator, in response to my request, could do no more than to state that he had received his information from some source, the only definite thing about it being its alleged occurrence in the mail department. I do not believe it occurred. I do not believe that the Senator, if he makes a proper investigation, will be able to discover that it occurred.

Mr. President, it will be noted that this amendment as it passed the House prohibits the use of any method whatever, by means of which the labor cost of any given piece of work or of the manufacture of any given item or article, can be ascertained. If not only the stop watch but every other device for determining these things are prohibited, then the determination itself is impossible; and if it is to be understood that all attempt at the measurement of things with a view of determining cost as well as efficiency is to be prohibited in all governmental workshops, then how is it possible to determine the relation, in labor and other expense, which those things which the Government produces bear to those which the Government does not produce but must purchase?

Some time ago it was stated upon this floor that in the manufacture of powder the Government output cost far less than the prices which before that time it had been compelled to pay to private manufacturers. How was that cost ascertained? There must have been some method of determining it by a consideration of every item going into the production of the finished article, some measurement involving, of course, the process of time, without which all measurements are absolutely impossible, with the consequence that the Government has been able to say: "The powder which we manufacture costs us only so much; therefore we will only pay a similar amount, or that sum plus a small profit, to those who desire to sell us powder hereafter." What private manufacturer would accept a mere ipse dixit of the Government any more than that of a competitor? And what one would refuse to accept the fact upon which the statement is based if ascertained by unimpeachable processes? And how are those facts to be ascertained in any manner if those in charge of governmental work are by law prohibited from using any method of determining the facts?

That, Mr. President, is one of my most serious objections to this proviso. It is catholic in its extent; it is absolute; there is no possible way, in my judgment, for an honest man to avoid the prohibition which it places upon his action, and I do not think anyone will attempt it.

Mr. President, much has been said here about the pernicious consequences to the laboring man, the wage earner, of the application to him of the principle of time service known in general parlance as the stop-watch system.

Now, I concede that it can be abused, and I join in the statement of the Senator from Missouri that where this or any similar system is used for the purpose of oppressing or speeding up and overburdening the physical system of the wage earner it is infamous. The term is not too harsh. But, Mr. President, the fact that any system is subject to abuse—and nearly all of them are—is no argument against the system itself when properly used and properly applied. We can be extreme and intemperate in everything; and in the past employers—there may be some now, but happily very few—who may be so actuated by the principle of gain as to exact the utmost degree of effort and the last ounce of strength, all that can be given by the employee in exchange for his day's wages. Such an employer is an enemy of his kind; his name should be anathema; and he is entitled neither to the consideration of his Government nor of society. On the other hand, Mr. President, in all of our modern establishments, and especially in view of world-wide competition, efficiency is and must be the watchword of the day.

I recall that some time ago Mr. Justice Brandeis startled the country by the statement, during a trial of some controversies before the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the railroad companies of the country could save a million dollars a day by the exercise of efficiency and economy in management. The statement, I say, was startling. Not only so, but it was regarded with incredulity by the great majority of the people and was ridiculed by the railroad managers themselves. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] reminds me that the late Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, upon the floor of the Senate made the remark—and I believe it was true—that a proper system of efficiency in governmental administration would mean a saving every year of $300,000,000—a saving which the present demands upon the governmental purse would make extremely desirable and relieve the majority members of the Senate Finance Committee of an infinite amount of worry and trouble over revenue problems.

Mr. President, the railroads, notwithstanding the indignant denunciation with which they received the statement of Mr. Justice Brandeis, began to act upon it; and I venture to state that their investigations and subsequent changes vindicated his judgment and that a great saving has been effected. Has any laborer in the railroad world been at all injured by reason of the introduction of these new ideas and systems of efficiency and of economy? Was the saving thus effected by the introduction of reforms and changes which bore upon the physical condition and wasted the physical energies of the wage earner? If so, Mr. President, we would have heard of it long, long ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am interested in the statement just made by the Senator from Colorado with regard to Mr. Brandeis. Does the Senator from Colorado mean to be understood as saying that the railroads have effected economies through which a million dollars a day has been saved along the lines suggested by Mr. Brandeis?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not say that. What I meant to say was that they began a system of economies which unquestionably disclosed the fact that they were operating their roads at needless expense, and I have no doubt they saved hundreds of thousands of dollars every day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that the suggestions of Mr. Brandeis were not adopted at all, that the railroads found it impossible to adopt them, and that subsequently the rates were increased in order to accomplish what it was thought might be accomplished by a reduction in operating expenses.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course I shall not enter into a discussion of the action of the railroads after the announcement; but my recollection of conditions, and the history of the times since that statement, is that in many instances economies were effected, efficiencies were established, consequent upon the published statement to which I have referred, which realized an enormous amount of revenue which up to that time was wasted.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, speaking of Mr. Justice Brandeis reminds me, the Senator may recall it, that a short time before going on the bench he made a public statement in which he said in effect that it would be a great mistake to give up the efficiency methods which were being used by the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator for the reminder, which had temporarily escaped me. Surely, Mr. Justice Brandeis would not be accused of being actuated by love and affection for the employers of the country, and certainly not by any desire to thwart the wishes of the wage earners of the Nation.

Mr. President, I do not know whether the so-called Taylor system is used in the Ford factory or not, but I do know, and I think we are all aware of the fact, that the operations of that great establishment are carried on with an efficiency and economy that is little short of a marvel. The management know to the fraction of a cent the cost of every car that is produced. They can figure the number of cars that can be produced every 24 hours, and in the event of an increase in their business exactly the added number of men and material needed for the purpose. The world has obtained a benefit from this wonderful organization that is incalculable in dollars and cents.

In the first place, Ford has built a car so cheap that it is accessible to all classes and conditions of men. The Ford machine is as common in the country as the cattle upon the hillside, and in evolving such a car, Mr. President, he has forced a reduction in the price of cars made by every other manufacturer in the land, in some instances to the extent of 50 per cent below the prices prevailing before this marvelous system of efficiency became effective in establishing an automobile standard to which all competitors must pay tribute.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator the same question I asked the Senator from Massachusetts, if the stop-watch system or time system is used in his factory.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator had done me the honor to listen to me he would have known that just a few moments ago I said that I did not know whether he used it or not, but that he used some system, and this proviso excludes the Government from using any system whatever. He has applied some system by means of which he has been able to determine the time necessary to produce every part of a car, and to assemble it, thereby determining the price to the public, combining both cost and profit.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will pardon me. That is a very different thing from working under the Taylor system. Any man might easily figure out what it costs, the time it takes in a factory, to produce a given result. That has nothing to do with the Taylor system.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not talking about the Taylor system.

Mr. REED. That is what this bill is aimed at.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator assumes that this proviso is aimed at the Taylor system. His construction of it may be correct. My construction of the proviso is that it prohibits the Government from using any system whatever, because no system is possible that does not involve some measurement of time. The Senator says that the efficiency of the Ford factory is something that can be obtained without resort to the Taylor system. I grant that; but it is impossible, Mr. President, to acquire it without a resort to some system that must take into consideration the most inconsiderable as well as the largest item going into the manufacture of the enormous output of that concern, and, as the entire country gets the benefit of it, it is the greatest of all the testimonials to the necessity of system and efficiency in work.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the interpretation put upon this proviso by the Senator from Colorado were correct, his argument would be unanswerable, but I beg to suggest to him this thought or to ask him this question: Is it not true that the system prohibited in the proviso has reference only to the ascertainment of the wages of the particular man; that is, the capacity of the particular man to produce? It does not prohibit any system for the ascertainment of the cost of work, but it does prohibit a system which establishes a standard for a particular man and fixes the wages of the man by the standard so established.

If it were true that it prevented the Government from ascertaining what it cost to turn out gun carriages or rifles, or anything of that sort, I would be almost as much opposed to it as is the Senator from Colorado, but it has no reference to the cost at all any more than though wages were paid upon a uniform standard of $3 a day or $5 a day. It is only for the purpose of ascertaining what the Government should pay that particular man.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator's construction of this proviso is not mine. The subject of wages is not mentioned in the proviso even indirectly. It prohibits the use of any system for the purpose of studying jobs or products. While the Senator's contention might be one of the results of labor studies, as I read the proviso, it is not the thing, if the language used in the proviso means anything to me, that is embodied in the phraseology employed by the drafter of the measure.

I was about to submit one further thought, Mr. President, upon the subject under discussion when interrupted. It is that this great system known as the Ford Motor Co. pays the best wages of any institution in the country, together with bonuses in the shape of a division of profits in addition to wages, the bonus being measured upon the basis of efficiency.

Where is the workman in the United States who criticizes or can fairly criticize the policy of that great private institution? Where is the man who does not feel fortunate if he can secure employment by it? Where is the employee who has left it voluntarily? It is to my mind the highest and greatest testimonial of industrial efficiency in the world, higher than the Standard Oil Co., because it distributes its benefits to every man who contributes, however humble a share, to the upbuilding and the continuance of its operations. Without the establishment of an efficiency system of measurement of some sort by means of which every item of cost could be ascertained, the great Ford factory would not be what it is, and the multitudes laboring there at a minimum of $5 a day for eight hours, with these additional bonuses, would be out of employment or holding precarious jobs all over the country.

Mr. President, however damnable a system may be when improperly employed or ill adjusted, if it can produce consequences such as this, if properly employed and developed, it is certainly a system which the Government of the United States should be privileged to resort to if it proposes to become a manufacturer of the wares which it consumes in competition with private production. I would like to see every arsenal in the United States run on the Ford plan. I would like to see every new industrial activity of the Government based upon the Ford plan paying wages at the same rate and paying bonuses of some sort, I do not care whether you call them bonuses or not, based upon a system of efficiency which wrongs no man and helps nearly everybody.

Mr. President, in this system which prevails in the arsenals, or which did prevail prior to the enactment of recent legislation, there is doubtless a standard called a day's work which is paid to every man regardless of his capacity and regardless of his output. In other words, no matter how far short a man may fall as compared to the man of highest efficiency the day wage is absolute and he only works so long. Unless I am greatly mistaken the limit of employment in our arsenals is eight hours. If that be true, then I can not conceive how it is possible that the application of some method for the purpose of determining the cost of production can be in any way physically or mentally injurious to the workmen.

I think the cases of speeding up to which our attention has been called have occurred, must have occurred where an eight-hour day did not prevail. I make that statement with some hesitation because my information is very limited, but upon general principles an eight-hour day based upon a fair standard of wage and of production can not very well produce any of the consequences which have been so eloquently pictured to the imagination here.

Mr. President, I have been always led to believe that class legislation should be avoided wherever possible. We do not always hew to the line with regard to that maxim any more than to others, but there is in this sort of legislation the objection that it is designed for the benefit of a class only, to the detriment largely of the Government itself, and class legislation is class legislation whether its privileged object be of high or low degree. In other words, class legislation is objectionable regardless of the persons who may be its beneficiaries. Of course, while it may be replied that class legislation begets class legislation, the fact that it is such can not be denied; and I think it should be excluded, and particularly in legislation which has for its object the initiation of enterprises of governmental concern and designed to enable the Government to experiment freely in its efforts to obtain such supplies on its own account as may be needed in its manifold operations.

I have heard it said, Mr. President, and by high authority, and my reading tells me that many so insist, that the real objection to the establishment of efficiency systems is that it serves to destroy that equality of wage earners for which a great many of the organizations contend. I make that statement also with some hesitation, because I am unaware of the extent to which it may be advocated or opposed; but this I know, that if an employer is to be inhibited from taking any steps or doing anything whereby he can ascertain the difference between the productive energies and powers of employees it obviously follows that he who is the least capable must ultimately become the standard for him who is the most capable, and that the dead level of mediocrity or a level below that must be reached if the purpose sought to be subserved can be obtained.

Mr. President, that is impossible. Legislation can not do it. Nature can not do it. All men are created equal. That is true as to equality of opportunity, but there are differences, physical and mental, between all the myriad inhabitants of this earth, and every man in a democratic country is entitled as a citizen to the exercise and development of every faculty which God has given him, subject only to the laws, and without let or hindrance by man or by government. We can obtain an equality in nature only by leveling the mountains to the plains. We can not elevate the plains to the level of the summits.

We must, therefore, Mr. President, legislation or no legislation, recognize the right of a man who possesses faculties superior to those of his fellows to enjoy the benefit of them in any system, regardless of what his calling may be. We recognize the right in every other department of life. We send our children to school and spur the ambition of each to exceed his fellows. Every system that will hold the ambitious down to the level of his less fortunate fellows will be repudiated by the common sense of every thinking man and woman in the country. The same is true in the professions; the same is true everywhere; and it will always be true, regardless of human legislation, as long as time shall run. There is no equality in nature; there is no equality of physical and mental endowment among men.

What is efficiency, Mr. President? One homely definition would be, the best way of doing things. I understand it is the purpose of the Government to follow that method of procedure which will enable it to ascertain the best way of doing things, so that it can compete with those great private institutions engaged in the manufacture of the articles which the Government proposes to make for itself, and just in proportion as we place handicaps on the Government just in that proportion will its attempt to compete with private institutions fail, and the Government manufacture will be a failure because of the contrast that its cost of production will present to that high state of efficiency prevailing in private circles and to which no just complaint can be made.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The question before the Senate is on the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I thought it was on my motion, Mr. President. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which is to strike out the House text. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and, in his absence, I temporarily withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). In the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "nay."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLISS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am relieved from my pair on the Army appropriation bill, and I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I inquire if the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I see he has not voted, and so I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMPSON (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brandegee	du Pont	Smoot	Weeks
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Thomas	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Harding	Townsend	Works

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	James	Myers	Shields

Gore	McCumber	Robinson	Walsh

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like very much to dispose of the committee amendments before individual amendments are offered from the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 91, after line 17, to strike out:

SEC. 2. That a council of executive information is hereby established, for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 3. That the council of executive information shall nominate to the President, and the President shall appoint, an advisory commission, consisting of not more than seven persons, each of whom shall have special knowledge of some industry, public utility, or the development of some natural resource, or be otherwise specially qualified, in the opinion of the council, for the performance of the duties hereinafter provided. The members of the advisory commission shall serve without compensation, but shall be allowed actual expenses of travel and subsistence when attending meetings of the commission or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities. The advisory commission shall hold such meetings as shall be called by the council or be provided by the rules and regulations adopted by the council for the conduct of its work.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the council of executive information to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the utilization of waterways; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation.

SEC. 5. That the council of executive information shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, and shall provide for the work of the advisory commission to the end that the special knowledge of such commission may be developed by suitable investigation, research, and inquiry and made available in conference and report for the use of the council; and the council may organize subordinate bodies for its assistance in special investigations, either by the employment of experts or by the creation of committees of specially qualified persons to serve without compensation, but to direct the investigations of experts so employed.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available for experimental work and investigations undertaken by the council, by the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies, for the employment of a director, expert and clerical expenses and supplies, and for the necessary expenses of members of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies going to and attending meetings of the commission or subordinate bodies. Reports shall be submitted by all subordinate bodies and by the advisory commission to the council, and from time to time the council shall report to the President or to the heads of executive departments upon special inquiries or subjects appropriate thereto, and an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including as full a statement of the activities of the council and the agencies subordinate to it as is consistent with the public interest, including an itemized account of the expenditures made by the council or authorized by it, in as full detail as the public interest will permit: Provided, however, That when deemed proper the President may authorize, in amounts stipulated by him, unvouchered expenditures and report the gross sums so authorized not itemized.

And insert:

SEC. 2. That a council of national defense is hereby established for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, an officer of the Navy not below the rank of captain to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and not more than six persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, each of whom shall have special knowledge of some industry, public utility, or the development of some natural resource, or be otherwise specially qualified, in the opinion of the President, for the performance of the duties hereinafter provided. The additional members of the council shall serve without compensation, but shall be allowed actual expenses of travel and subsistence when attending meetings of the council or engaged in investigations pertaining to its activities. The council shall hold such meetings as shall be called by it or be provided by the rules and regulations adopted by the council for the conduct of its work.

That it shall be the duty of the council of national defense to supervise and direct investigations and make recommendations to the President and the heads of executive departments as to the location of railroads with reference to the frontier of the United States so as to render possible expeditious concentration of troops and supplies to points of defense; the coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroad; the utilization of waterways; the mobilization of military and naval resources for defense; the increase of domestic production of articles and materials essential to the support of armies and of the people during the interruption of foreign commerce; the development of seagoing transportation; data as to amounts, location, method and means of production, and availability of military supplies; the giving of information to producers and manufacturers as to the class of supplies needed by the military and other services of the Government, the requirements relating thereto, and the creation of relations which will render possible in time of need the immediate concentration and utilization of the resources of the Nation.

That the council of national defense shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its work, which rules and regulations shall be subject to the approval of the President, and shall provide for the work of the council to the end that the special knowledge of such council may be developed by suitable investigation, research, and inquiry and made available in conference and report for the use of the council; and the council may organize subordinate bodies for its assistance in special investigations, either by the employment of experts or by the creation of committees of specially qualified persons to serve without compensation, but to direct the investigations of experts so employed.

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the necessary expenses of members of the council in going to and attending meetings of the council or its subordinate bodies or while engaged in its work. Reports shall be submitted by all subordinate bodies and by the council to the President and to the heads of executive departments upon special inquiries or subjects appropriate thereto, and an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including as full a statement of the activities of the council and the agencies subordinate to it as is consistent with the public interest, including an itemized account of the expenditures made by the council or authorized by it, in as full detail as the public interest will permit: Provided, however, That when deemed proper the President may authorize, in amounts stipulated by him, unvouchered expenditures and report the gross sums so authorized not itemized.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. After the words "President of the United States," in line 1, page 95, I move to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 95, line 1, after the words "President of the United States," it is proposed to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. CUMMINS. The effect of the amendment is to require that the civilian members of the council shall be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So far as I am able to do so, I am willing to accept the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the provision be read as it will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the provision will read:

SEC. 2. That a council of national defense is hereby established for the coordination of industries and resources for the national security and welfare, to consist of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, an officer of the Navy not below the rank of captain to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and not more than six persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall not consume the time of the Senate in further stating my objections to the creation of a so-called council of national defense. It is entirely right that the President and the members of his Cabinet shall receive all the information that they can looking to the proper movements of the Army and the Navy; but I am opposed to the march toward the supremacy of the military branch of the Government. I am opposed to giving the council the authority to supervise all the industries of the country and attempt to influence their development in the direction of military strength and power. The establishment of this council will, in my opinion, do more to turn the public over to the control of the military arm of the Government than the creation of large armies or the construction of large navies.

In adopting this amendment we practically announce that all the industrial and civil energies of our people will be exerted with reference to the movements of the Army and the Navy and their use in time of war. I am not willing, for one, to take that step, and I shall therefore vote against the amendment proposed by the committee. If the amendment is rejected I shall move to strike out the provisions upon the same subject which are found in the House bill, and when the time comes for a vote on the amendment I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). Announcing the same pair and transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to transfer of pairs, I vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLI] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LIPPITT. I renew the announcement of my pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], which I allow to stand for the day, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GRONNA. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I announce the same transfer of my pair that I announced on the last vote and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I make the same announcement that I made on the last roll call and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Utah Mr. [SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—39.

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to. The SECRETARY. The only other amendments of the committee passed over will be found on page 8, where, in the total for the Signal Service of the Army, found in line 5, the committee proposes to strike out "$3,775,000" and to insert "$14,827,156."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That went over at the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I believe he wanted to get some information which he has obtained, and he makes no further objection to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, in line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$3,222,100" and to insert "$13,281,666."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, line 6, after the word "War," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to expend from the above amount not to exceed $110,000 for the purpose of providing temporary shelter on the Canal Zone for one regiment of Infantry and one company of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 43, the item in line 20 was reduced from $20,280,000 to $16,000,000. I have since received advices from the War Department that that ought to be retained at $20,280,000, the amount originally estimated for by the department. I, therefore, ask that that be changed to $20,280,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on reconsidering the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to. Without objection, it will be reconsidered.

The SECRETARY. It is now proposed to restore the original amendment, striking out "$12,000,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$20,280,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 12, after the word "repealed," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the maximum age limit for eligibility to appointment of first lieutenants in the Medical Department of the Army shall be 32 years.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask that that be stated again?

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is an increase of two years of the present law?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Two years for the Medical Corps. I will state to the Senator that the Surgeon General advises me that under the strictness of the requirements for admission to the practice of medicine in many of the States of the Union, a young man is hardly fitted to practice his profession, or rather it is difficult for him to pass the examinations and be commissioned, until he is past 30 years of age, particularly where he serves an internship in a hospital. Many young men of 30 or 31 are just completing their education by service in the hospitals; and he therefore requested that this increase be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is a very startling suggestion coming from the Surgeon General of the Army—that a young man has to be 32 years old before he knows enough to go into the Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not mean to put it as strongly as that, but I meant to say that the requirements are very much higher than they used to be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they are.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. A young man graduates at 24 or 26 from the medical school, and then he goes and serves an internship in a hospital.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; a year or so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I may have put it a little stronger than the Surgeon General put it to me; but the effect of his language to me was that the requirements are very much higher than they used to be, and that a man is better suited for appointment at 32 than he is at 28.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to the amendment, but I thought it was a little strong.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is another amendment that the committee requested me to submit to the Senate. I send it to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

The President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Edward W. Whitaker, late lieutenant colonel First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, and brevet brigadier general United States Volunteers, a lieutenant colonel of Cavalry in the Army of the United States; and when so appointed he shall be placed upon the retired list of the Army, unlimited, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent: Provided, That on receiving the said retired pay under this act he shall relinquish all his right and claim to pension from the United States after the date of the passage of this act, and any payment made to him covering a period subsequent to the passage of this act shall be deducted from the amount due him on the first payment under this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that he substitute the word "approval" for "passage." It occurs twice in the amendment and it ought to be "approval."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it ought.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that that change be made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as suggested. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does that complete the committee amendments?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That completes the committee amendments, but there is one other amendment which is not a committee amendment. I offer this as an individual amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a commission, consisting of not less than three civilian citizens, residents of the United States, to hold office at the pleasure of the President, whose duty it shall be to inspect all foods supplied for the military forces of the United States for the purpose of determining whether the quality of such foods conforms with the specifications of the purchase, and whether such foods are wholesome, suitable, and adequate, and to report thereon at reasonable intervals to the President, with such recommendations as, in their opinion, may tend to improve the rations and promote the physical welfare of the military forces of the United States.

That each of said commissioners shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum and their actual and necessary traveling and incidental expenses, and the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, accept as an assistant to such commission the services of anyone who may volunteer for such purpose, and allow and direct the payment of his actual and necessary traveling and other necessary expenses.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the purpose in offering that amendment—and I know it is subject to a point of order if anybody wants to make it—is this: Already the question has been raised by some of the newspapers of the country, and by many who are very much interested in the National Guard, as to the quality of food that is being served, not only to the guardsmen but to the Regular Army; the question not only as to whether or not these goods come up to the standard but whether they are of the nourishing class of food that they should be. There is no way to reach these men who sell embalmed beef to the troops on the border unless they can be punished for violation of the interstate law. Many of these packing houses have their plants in the particular State where the food product is to be used. If the main establishment is in Chicago, for instance, they have a branch plant in Texas, and the goods are furnished and delivered to perform the terms of the contract in Texas, so that if the goods are not what they ought to be there is no way to punish them.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, does this amendment provide any way of punishing them?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not at all; but it gives the Government an opportunity to see whether or not the goods are what they ought to be.

Mr. CLAPP. Are our two institutions for the education of military officers so deficient that when men get command of a troop they are unable to determine whether or not these contracts are complied with? Is the War Department unable to determine whether or not the contracts are complied with? It seems to me it is an open affront to the War Department itself.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not stop to figure out whether it was an affront to anybody; but we do know that in 1898, during the Spanish-American War, embalmed beef, in spite of the officers of the Army, was served to the men in Cuba.

Mr. CLAPP. If that is being done to-day, Congress ought to investigate it, and somebody who is responsible for it ought to be brought to account.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not suggesting that it is done. I am only calling attention to the reports printed in the newspapers. I have had clippings sent to me from various sources. The object is to avoid the necessity of investigations and to see to it that those things can not happen again.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if the Inspector General has not the whole question under his charge, and will the Senator say that the Inspector General is not doing his duty in that regard? We have appropriated for I do not know how many inspectors; I have not looked it up. Are they not capable of doing that work?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They may be perfectly capable, Mr. President, but I am hedging against what may happen—not what has happened. I have here in my possession right now, I will say to the Senator, a letter from a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives—Mr. HULBERT—who went with Mr. McCann, who was the food expert, over to inspect one of these camps the other day, and he gives an account of just the conditions that existed in Cuba. Most of the food, I think, that is being served is all right, but there are occasionally cases where embalmed beef—corned beef, so called—is being served, and he says it simply represents the gristle and by-products of the meat where all the juices have been taken out.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks, in order to accomplish what he wishes to accomplish, he has provided a sufficient force. He provides, as I heard the amendment, for only three inspectors. How large is the force?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Only three.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what I thought, and the amendment provides an appropriation for those three only.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator think that three are sufficient to accomplish the purpose he wishes to accomplish and to inspect the food?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think it will be necessary to go to all the places, but a man is supposed to go to one of the concentration camps where there are large bodies of troops and where a large quantity of food must be collected.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Another thing I will ask the Senator. Is it not likely that there might be a controversy between the civilian board and the officers of the Army who are charged by law with these particular duties. Would it not lead to a conflict of authority and perhaps to an unfortunate disagreement?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is a bare possibility of that, but I assume that they would act together.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think this is a very unfortunate amendment. I can see that it will result in a conflict of authority and in harm rather than good. As it is manifestly general legislation on an appropriation I make a point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On page 23, after line 23, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 23, insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Col. Rogers Birnie (retired) a brigadier general and place him on the list of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. Is this reported from the committee?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it is not reported.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I wish to say in regard to the amendment I have offered that Col. Birnie is a man who has a splendid record, and his promotion has been recommended by the War Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Recommended to whom, I will ask?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There is a bill in the House, and it has been recommended.

Mr. SMOOT. Has not the President had the recommendation sent to him?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not think they are usually sent to the President.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On page 22 there is exactly a similar provision in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we are going to fight those cases when we get the bill in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be read again. I thought it was a promotion rather than a retirement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read. The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 23, insert the following:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Col. Rogers Birnie (retired) a brigadier general and place him on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to promote him on the retired list.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. With the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is not this general legislation subject to a point of order? I think it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is brigadier-general legislation. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object. I make a point of order on it. I am opposed to retiring any of these men and advancing their rank after they have dropped out of the Army. I think the whole thing is bad, and I expect to vote against every one I get a chance at and kill every one I can in any way I get a chance to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Georgia there is in this bill a similar provision.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I see, and it passed when I was out of the Senate. I am watching to reserve it for a separate vote when the bill comes out of Committee of the Whole and is reported to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the real point of order the Chair does not feel that it is general legislation. It looks as though it applied to this one particular demand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It amounts to an increase of appropriation then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That point was not made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I make it now, and any other point that occurs to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it increases the appropriation and there is no estimate for it, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 16, after the amount insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of the act of May 11, 1908, as amended by the act of March 3, 1909, relating to pay to beneficiaries of officers and enlisted men on the active list of the Army is hereby extended to officers and enlisted men of the National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 72.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, after line 25, insert:

That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for cleaning out the old jetties and other obstructions erected by the Government and placed in the French Broad River in North Carolina for the purpose of navigation and long since abandoned, and the Chief of Engineers of the Army is hereby authorized and directed to have removed as soon as practical all obstructions placed thereon by the Government for the purpose of navigation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I would not introduce that amendment here but for the fact that there is an emergency requiring it. It has risen by reason of the great flood. Thirty years ago, strange to say, the Government of the United States attempted to make the French Broad River navigable, and for 25 miles jetties were built 40 feet on each side of the river, leaving a channel 30 feet down the French Broad.

The recent storm has caused those jetties to be a great dam, and over 45,000 acres of the finest land there is in the country are buried in some 10 to 20 feet of water standing there over the corn. The water can not get away. These jetties are there, and they ought to be moved. There is fear that a great epidemic will break out by the standing water. The engineer has sent an expert down there, and he thinks that he can remove the obstruction shortly. I ask that this amendment be placed on the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina what bearing this proposition has on the military preparedness of the United States?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is only an emergency matter, and I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not know but that part of the coast of North Carolina was liable to invasion or bombardment.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been bombarded by the rains and the storms, and the people are in distress.

Mr. PENROSE. Sharks are getting up there, too, probably.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a river where no sharks are found; but black bass abound there, and if the Senator will come down there I will take him fishing and he will get some mighty fine fishing.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will vote for the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 25, it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the words:

And members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States and are discharged for physical disability.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, the amendment is offered because of the fact that a number of members of the National Guard of my State who have been sent to the Mexican border have been subjected to additional physical examinations, have been found physically unfit, and therefore have been discharged from the service; but no means have been provided for returning them to their homes, and they are there stranded and helpless. The amendment follows the provision on page 38, which makes an appropriation "for travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge." I merely include in that provision the members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States, but who may be discharged on account of physical disability.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask whether the National Guard members referred to by the Senator were examined before they went to the border?

Mr. KERN. I do not know about that; but I know they have been discharged on account of physical disability—that is my information—since they arrived there.

Mr. SMOOT. Since their arrival at the border?

Mr. KERN. Since their arrival at the border. The amendment will do no harm, and if any cases of that kind occur the men will not be left absolutely helpless after they have volunteered to serve their country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I know that several members of the guard of my State were examined when mustered into the service, but the examination, owing to the hasty mobilization, had to be very superficial. They were accepted under that examination, but after going to the front they were reexamined and found physically disqualified for the service and were discharged. They have no means of getting home; and it seems to me that their travel expenses ought to be paid.

Mr. KERN. The amendment is designed to meet just such cases as that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 10, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

To provide for the pay, transportation, and subsistence of those units of the National Guard which, not being included in the mobilization order issued by the President on June 18, 1916, were ordered by State authorities to maneuver camps for equipment and training in conjunction with troops included in said mobilization order, $450,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such expenses shall be paid only after they shall have been approved by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the Government of the United States shall not be liable for any such expenses incurred during a period in excess of 28 days in addition to the 15 days of annual maneuvers provided for in section 92 of the act of June 3, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to know the purpose of that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this amendment is to take care of a very peculiar situation which has arisen in the State of New York, and which I think does not exist in any other State, although I am not absolutely certain as to that. The mobilization order of the President of June 18, 1916, called on the National Guard to furnish complete tactical divisions of troops. It so happened that there were at that time 13 Infantry regiments in the New York National Guard. Of those, 9 regiments would have been included in a tactical division. The governor of New York, instead of calling out the 9 regiments, thought it best to call out the 13 regiments, in order, I assume, to make a more careful selection of the 9 regiments which should be sent to the Texas border. The result was that the 4 additional Infantry regiments of the New York guard were mobilized, just as all the other guard troops in the United States were mobilized, and sent to mobilization camps, and were immediately offered to the Federal Government by the governor in addition to the troops which were already accepted, the 9 Infantry regiments to which I have already referred.

The Government did not see fit, or did not need, to accept the four Infantry regiments, and those four regiments have been recruited to full war strength, have been completely equipped, and have been held in camp at the disposal of the Federal Government ever since.

A provision in this appropriation bill is to the effect that, in accordance with the act of June 3, 1916, the whole or any part of the National Guard shall be subject to annual maneuvers, not exceeding 15 days in length. The Secretary of War has assured, according to my information, the adjutant general of New York that he will allow pay, transportation, and subsistence for these four regiments of the New York guard for the 15 days in which, presumably and as a matter of fact, they have been engaged in maneuvers and in training. They constitute a force which the country could call upon at any time. The State, however, has kept those men in camp beyond the 15-day period. They have become, by reason of the training which they have received, exceptionally valuable national assets. They are the only regiments in the United States which have not been included in the mobilization order, either Regular or National Guard, which are recruited to war strength, and they are completely equipped.

It is on the ground and theory, to be perfectly frank, that the State of New York has done more than was asked of it, even if we do not include the additional four regiments, that I introduce this amendment asking the Federal Government, under proper regulations, to defray the expenses of transporting those troops to their homes, the cost of feeding them while they are in camp.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, so far as I am able to do so, I accept the amendment. It can go to conference, and we can secure further information concerning it, if necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., Tuesday, July 25, 1916) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow Wednesday, July 26, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God our heavenly Father, we pray that Thy Spirit may prevail in the hearts of Thy children and unite them into a harmonious brotherhood, each for all and all for each, exemplified in the life, precepts, and glorious example of the world's great religious Teacher; that we may free ourselves from the thralldom of materialism, which turns good into evil, peace into war, joy into sorrow, blights and corrodes the soul and robs it of the life eternal, which is joy and peace in the Holy Ghost.

Hear us, we beseech Thee, and answer our prayer that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 21, 1916, was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, and that on Thursday next we call business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, and that on that day business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent shall be in order. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I presume that means Suspension Day also?

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER. That was not included in the request.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that we will get rid of all these bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, which would give more time, of course, on the first Monday for the suspension of the rules.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman's request in any way mean suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. Not on Thursday.

Mr. MANN. Just the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. COX. Then, I do not know that I shall have any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. If this request be granted, it will not interfere with the consideration of conference reports if they should be ready?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman's conference report could only be taken up on Thursday by unanimous consent, anyway.

Mr. KITCHIN. It would not interfere with conference reports if we grant unanimous consent for their consideration.

Mr. LEVER. I do not know that we will be ready with our conference report on the Agricultural bill at that time, but I wanted to know.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that this interferes with conference reports?

Mr. KITCHIN. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, under our former understanding we will only take up these conference reports by unanimous consent, unless we give notice of three days if a contest is to be made upon them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request again. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, and that on that day business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent shall be considered, exclusive of anything else. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course that will not interfere with the request to take up the conference report on the Agricultural bill or any other report, because a conference report could only be considered in that way on that day.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is our understanding.

Mr. GARRETT. Or any other conference report.

The SPEAKER. Not to interfere with any conference report that can be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ZEBULON BAIRD VANCE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 322.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of North Carolina of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, erected in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, be made a special order for Saturday, July 29, 1916, at 3 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he omit the hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. My idea in putting in the hour is this: Two or three gentlemen are going to make unanimous-consent requests to be permitted to address the House on that day.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman would make it simply in order, then any request for unanimous consent could be granted, but if the hour is fixed at 3 o'clock it might be embarrassing. I would suggest that the gentleman say not later than 3 o'clock.

Mr. KITCHIN. Very well; I will ask unanimous consent that the resolution be amended in that particular, to make it not later than 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so amended, and the Clerk will report the resolution as amended.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of North Carolina of the statue of Zebulon Baird Vance, erected in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, be made a special order for Saturday, July 29, 1916, not later than 3 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the gentleman from North Carolina will permit, I would like to make this statement: Unless the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill is agreed upon and passed by the House before Monday next it will be necessary to pass a joint resolution continuing the appropriations of last year for another 30 days or for some specified time. I hope that we may be able to bring the conference report up on either Thursday or Saturday.

Mr. KITCHIN. This would not interfere with the conference report, because if we did not get through with its consideration on Saturday, if it be considered on that day, we would ask unanimous consent to continue this order until 4 o'clock.

Mr. LEVER. If it is understood that if the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill is ready for consideration on Saturday that this will not interfere with its consideration, I would not have any objection to it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I could not say that it would not interfere with it, because this is the only time we will have for this; but I would say that I shall ask unanimous consent that this go over until 4 o'clock, if it should be necessary.

Mr. LEVER. Well, I take it that in four hours' time we ought either to pass the conference report or vote it down.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask that that stand good until 4 o'clock.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on Saturday next for one hour on the question of vocational education.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman prefer Saturday or Thursday?

Mr. HUGHES. Thursday would be all right.

The SPEAKER. Which way does the gentleman desire to have it put?

Mr. HUGHES. Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent, on next Thursday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, that he be permitted to address the House not to exceed one hour—

Mr. GARNER. Not to interfere with conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to put that—not to exceed one hour on the vocational education bill, not to interfere with conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that to take an hour out of the unanimous-consent consideration of bills?

Mr. HUGHES. I do not think that would affect the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It seems to me, if we are going to have Thursday set apart for the Unanimous Consent Calendar, we ought not to—

Mr. HUGHES. If the gentleman prefers, I will accept Saturday; I would like Thursday, however.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that on next Saturday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, not to interfere with conference reports, that he be permitted to address the House not to exceed one hour on the subject of vocational education. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11240) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. POINDEXTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12194) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. POINDEXTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14576) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. POINDEXTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13620) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, had agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. POINDEXTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17053. An act making additional appropriations for the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1917.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments to bill (H. R. 15947) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. TILMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. LODGE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 3032. An act authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6497. An act for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum.

The message also announced that the President had, on July 20, 1916, approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 6497. An act for the relief of Oleanne Marie Zahl Branum; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same.

H. J. Res. 218. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of the gift of the Berkshire Trout Hatchery, Berkshire County, Mass.;

H. R. 14725. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide a part of the town site of Plummer, Idaho, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4866. An act for the relief of Julia R. Goodloe;

H. R. 8787. An act for the relief of the heirs of Hundley V. Fowler, deceased; and

H. R. 10484. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill with Senate amendments of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

H. R. 8002. An act confirming patents heretofore issued to certain Indians in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 19, 1916, they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills and joint resolution:

H. R. 11262. An act for the relief of Mrs. C. D. Corbin;

H. R. 11261. An act for the relief of Mary S. Corbin;

H. R. 6057. An act to amend section 14 of the reclamation extension act approved August 13, 1914;

H. J. Res. 218. Joint resolution authorizing the acceptance of the gift of the Berkshire Trout Hatchery, Berkshire County, Mass.;

H. R. 4866. An act for the relief of Julia R. Goodloe;

H. R. 8787. An act for the relief of the heirs of Hundley V. Fowler, deceased;

H. R. 14725. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide a part of the town site of Plummer, Idaho, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10484. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

SPEAKER PROTEMPORE THURSDAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] to act as Speaker on next Thursday. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding 40 minutes on next Saturday, after the reading of the Journal, and with these other conditions, not to interfere with conference reports, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] asks unanimous consent that on Saturday next, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, he shall be permitted to address the House for not to exceed 40 minutes, not to interfere with conference reports. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a comparative analysis of the Senate and House water-power bills as concerns navigable waters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the water-power bills. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 20 minutes on next Saturday at the conclusion of the two speeches already made in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that on next Saturday, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], he shall be permitted to address the House for not to exceed 20 minutes, not to interfere with conference reports, or—

Mr. ROGERS. Or with orders already made.

The SPEAKER. Of course it can not interfere with orders already made. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COTTON SEED AND COTTONSEED PRODUCTS.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, last week a conference report was presented on the bill (H. R. 4767) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish statistics of cotton seed and cottonseed products. There was an error in the phraseology of the conference report. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that, and to substitute a corrected conference report, for printing in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw a conference report and to submit a new one for printing in the Record. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the subject of the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. He asks to withdraw a conference report on H. R. 4767, the cottonseed statistics bill, and he submits a corrected report for printing in the Record. Is there objection? There was no objection.

FLOOD CONDITIONS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record a telegram from my colleague [Mr. HOWARD] touching flood conditions on the rivers in Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a telegram from his colleague [Mr. HOWARD] on the flood situation in Georgia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

DOUGLASVILLE, GA., July 25, 1916.

Hon. WM. C. ADAMSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Am on the ground in Douglas, where flood conditions have wrought great damage, and about 1,200 people in Douglas and Campbell Counties are in dire distress and great need of immediate assistance. Committee of citizens met at courthouse yesterday and passed resolutions beseeching Congress to give aid to these poor people. Understand same conditions exist in your district in Coweta and Heard. Engineer Simonton has made report to War Department. So far as my people are concerned, it is conservatively estimated that it will take about $3,600 to buy provisions for the 1,200 sufferers. Will you please introduce resolution this morning in your and my name and urge upon our colleagues the necessity of immediate action? See report of conditions in Gen. Black's office. Wire me Atlanta.

WM. SCHLEY HOWARD.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CAPSTICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record in reference to providing service honor flags to the volunteer soldiers now in service along the Mexican border.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of rural credits and also on the Democratic platform of 1912.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on rural credits and on the Democratic platform of 1912. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] have permission to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of child labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] have permission to extend his remarks in the Record on the child-labor bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN PROPERTY FROM TAXATION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider the bill (S. 5172) entitled "An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take it up in a minute.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on public buildings and full territorial form of government in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the public-buildings bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the public-buildings bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by incorporating an address made by former Gov. Colquitt, of Texas, in which he declares the Wilson administration to be the greatest failure in history. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing a speech made by ex-Gov. Colquitt, of Texas, declaring the Wilson administration to be the greatest failure in history. [Laughter.] Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not recall the particular address to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have it right here. I will be very glad to quote it.

Mr. GARNER. It is not necessary to do that, if the gentleman will call my attention to the time and place and subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On page 54 of the Record of December 29, 1914, Gov. Colquitt, who has just been nominated for Senator from Texas, made this interesting declaration, and as the campaign was fought out on this line in Texas, it seems to me informative to the House. The House ought to know on what lines Gov. Colquitt made his fight.

The SPEAKER. Has it been printed?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will indulge me a moment, I wish to correct his history. Gov. Colquitt has not been nominated for Senator of the State of Texas, and will not be nominated.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen! [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He led by 20,000 votes.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman intends to intimate by his statement in reference to Gov. Colquitt's recent vote in Texas that it was based upon his opposition to the administration, I want to correct him there. There were seven candidates in Texas for Senator. Gov. Colquitt was considered an antiadministration man. All the other candidates, however, were supporting the administration, and the man whom the administration, I think, feels the kindest toward is to run off the race with Gov. Colquitt, is one of the present Senators from Texas, and will undoubtedly win the election. I mention this in order that the gentleman's history may be kept correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit my remarks to be extended, I think his statement will be answered by Gov. Colquitt.

Mr. GARNER. The statement has already been printed in the Record. I do not think we ought to take up the space to print it again.

Mr. ADAMSON. Reserving the right to object, I say this, if Gov. Colquitt should happen to be elected and come here and serve during the second administration of our illustrious President, he will learn better sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. He will live a long life if he does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS of Texas and several other Members objected.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I understand there was objection urged?

The SPEAKER. There were half a dozen objections.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of public buildings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of public buildings. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Mexican situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Mexican situation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the subject of the military highway in California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of the military highway in California. Is there objection? There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—AID TO FLOOD SUFFERERS IN ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER. There are two little resolutions here, House joint resolution 271, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan quartermaster's and medical supplies for the relief of destitute persons in the districts overflowed by the Alabama and other rivers of Alabama and their tributaries, and House joint resolution 272, the very same sort of resolution, except that it refers to the Coosa River and its tributaries. These were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Unless there is objection, they will be so referred.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, what is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. A change of reference. One is the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. That goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. Speaker, I should think. It is for an authorization—

The SPEAKER. These things are generally referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and they are not privileged to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that heretofore resolutions of that character which did not carry appropriations have all gone to the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, the fact that this resolution does carry an appropriation does not necessarily take from the Committee on Military Affairs its jurisdiction of that resolution. I recall that in this Congress a resolution was introduced for the relief of the Arkansas flood sufferers, and that resolution went to the Committee on Military Affairs and was reported out by that committee. I do not see any reason why this resolution should not take the same course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION, PROPERTY OF DAUGHTERS OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill 5172, entitled "An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the property situated in square 173 in the city of Washington, D. C., described as lots 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, inclusive, occupied by the Daughters of the American Revolution, be, and the same is hereby, exempt from and after May 24, 1914, from all taxation so long as the same is so occupied and used, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act approved March 3, 1877, providing for exemptions of church and school property, and acts amendatory thereof.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 4, after the word "thereof," by adding the following:

"So, also, shall every rectory, parsonage, glebe house, and pastoral residence which is occupied as a residence by the pastor, rector, minister, or rabbi be so exempt from taxation in the District of Columbia: Provided, That such rectory, parsonage, glebe house, or pastoral residence be owned by the church or congregation for which the said pastor, rector, minister, or rabbi officiates: And provided further, That not more than one such rectory, parsonage, glebe house, or pastoral residence shall be so exempt for any one congregation."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill which the Clerk has just reported. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there are two provisions in this bill. One is in reference to the building of the Daughters of the American Revolution, proposing to exempt that from taxation, and the other is in reference to parsonages.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. Would the latter provision exempt from taxation a building that a minister happened to rent from somebody in town?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. The bill provides in plain terms that it must be owned by the congregation or the church for which he preaches. It must be strictly church property.

Mr. MANN. I make no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this exemption goes further than the exemptions under State laws in the various States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that this report is made by the gentleman's colleague, Mr. HILLIARD, who does not happen to be present at this moment. That question was gone into by the committee, and it was ascertained that this was in keeping practically with the laws of the States on that subject.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman, it seems to me you are setting a dangerous precedent by the enactment of this bill, and would be likely to open widely the gates to very dangerous exemptions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It would not open the gate widely at all. It would only apply to a parsonage actually owned by the church and actually occupied by the preacher for that church.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does it apply to all denominations equally?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. To every one, with no exception. It applies to every one alike.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How much taxes will be saved or exempted in the District of Columbia under this law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Has not the gentleman's committee made any estimation as to how much the Federal Treasury will lose by the passage of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Federal Treasury will not lose a cent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Because the Federal Treasury does not get the taxes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the taxes are paid, they will ultimately go into the Treasury, will they not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They would go into the Treasury for the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what I mean. They would relieve the Federal Treasury to that extent, would they not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that it is quite a clear case that the church and school act of March 3, 1877, intended to do what this bill now does, but the taxing authorities have concluded that wherever the words "church property" were used in that act they meant only the ground on which the church stood; and if the parsonage stood right by it and was owned by the congregation and used by the minister of that congregation, it did not apply to that; but that it applied to all school property, wherever it might be located. In other words, it was liberally construed for the school property and too illiberally construed as to church property.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT. This does no more than the laws in every State in the Union have done for church property?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is our information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NOYES, MINN., AS A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5645) for the establishment of Noyes, in the State of Minnesota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise, reported unanimously by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and are hereby, extended to the port of Noyes, in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that a communication from the Treasury Department which was submitted with the report, but by error of the printer was omitted, be read in connection with the report.

The SPEAKER. First, is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House where this important port of Noyes is located in the State of Minnesota?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is on the Northwestern Railroad at the Canadian border. The communication from the Treasury Department states exactly where it is located.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this bill been introduced at the instance of the Treasury Department?

Mr. DICKINSON. It has the approval of the Treasury Department. It has passed the Senate, has been unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee, and there is no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee how many such ports in the country have this privilege at present?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not able to give that information.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that we have passed such bills as this on previous occasions, but I did not think we afforded that distinction to insignificant places.

Mr. MANN. I think we invariably give the permission at every place on the Canadian border where a railroad crosses the line. Otherwise the railroad can not operate to bring in goods. This is a new railroad which has just reached this point.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this place on the Canadian border?

Mr. DICKINSON. I so stated.

Mr. MANN. It is on the Canadian border, and this is necessary to facilitate the bringing of goods into the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the communication which the gentleman has sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 29, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

Sir: I have the honor to refer to your letter of the 20th of April last, transmitting a copy of bill S. 5645, which provides for the extension to Noyes, Minn., of the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act of June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

An investigation conducted by the department as to the commercial necessity of such action discloses the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway have completed their respective lines running via Noyes and that considerable merchandise is imported and exported at that place.

I am therefore of the opinion that the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act of June 10, 1880, should be extended to Noyes, Minn.

Respectfully,

WM. P. MALBURN,
Acting Secretary.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DICKINSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW, ARK.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 50.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, requested to cancel their respective signatures to the enrolled bill (H. R. 12197) entitled "An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew."

That, upon the cancellation of said signatures, the Clerk be directed to reenroll said bill with amendments as follows: On page 1, line 8, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four"; in line 9, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what are these amendments?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The amendments are merely to transpose the words "four" and "five" in the description, the range lines having been incorrectly described.

Mr. MANN. It is simply to correct an error in the description?

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. To correct an error in the description.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16185) to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of New Orleans, a municipal corporation existing under the laws of the State of Louisiana, or to the subordinate agencies of said city, their successors and assigns, when authorized by the State of Louisiana, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near and above the said city, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That subject to the provisions of this act the said city of New Orleans, or its subordinate agencies, may construct a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of the bridge herein authorized.

Sec. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge or tunnels is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

Sec. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, as I understand the bill it reads that this bridge is to be constructed "near and above" the city of New Orleans?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. By the city?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the city to build a bridge outside of its corporate limits?

Mr. DUPRÉ. A constitutional amendment has recently been submitted by the General Assembly of Louisiana, authorizing the city of New Orleans to build this bridge, and giving it authority to go beyond the confines of the city.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The bill authorizes the city of New Orleans to build a bridge or dig a tunnel outside of the corporate limits of the municipality?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it also gives that right to the successors or assigns of the city to build the bridge. I do not know just what the method of doing that would be.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is the usual form in such cases. It is not supposed that the city of New Orleans will go out of business as a corporation. I imagine it will continue to exist long after the gentleman from Wisconsin and I have disappeared from the earth.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it in contemplation that the city of New Orleans shall assign this right to any corporation?

Mr. DUPRÉ. No. I will state to the gentleman that I have in my hand a copy of the constitutional amendment covering this subject matter, and that it provides that the city of New Orleans shall be the owner of this improvement, and that it shall construct and operate it through its Belt Commission.

Mr. MANN. It is possible that the city might have to do it through a suborganization created by the city.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One more question. The proposed tunnel or the proposed bridge—it is in the alternative, is it not, one or the other?

Mr. DUPRÉ. It provides that the Secretary of War may require the construction of a tunnel in lieu of the bridge.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it is to be used by the city, presumably for a belt-line road?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes; and other transportation lines that want to cross the Mississippi River.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no difficulty about the city building a bridge outside of its limits. It is necessary to go above the city, because ocean vessels come up to New Orleans, and the gentleman from Wisconsin need not be uneasy about it being a light matter to find somebody with money enough to take over this transaction. The great struggle there is to find means and methods of securing a bridge at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Wisconsin was not uneasy at all. He was making an inquiry which I presume arose in the mind of everyone who listened to the reading of the bill. My query did not indicate uneasiness, but simply a desire to find the facts that every legislator on this floor ought to know about a bill of this kind.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin should remember that obtaining information at any time makes some people uneasy.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice from reading the report that the War Department is averse to granting the privilege to the city authorities to build a bridge, but is willing to grant permission to construct a tunnel.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I do not think that the report goes that far.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have the city authorities considered building a tunnel in lieu of a bridge if the permit to build the bridge is not granted?

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is under serious contemplation. It is believed that it would be cheaper to construct a tunnel, and that it might be the best method of getting across the river.

Mr. STAFFORD. How far distant from the city is the proposed location of the bridge?

Mr. DUPRÉ. It is at a place called Nine Mile Point, which is 9 miles above Canal Street. It is just beyond the parish line of the parish of Orleans. I suppose it is 2 or 3 miles from the nearest point in Orleans Parish.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it to be used for surface travel as well as railroad travel?

Mr. DUPRÉ. The idea is for railroad travel more particularly. There is not enough surface travel there to warrant it alone.

Mr. STAFFORD. Never having traveled much in that vicinity, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the first bridge above New Orleans?

Mr. DUPRÉ. There is no bridge nearer than Memphis.

Mr. McKELLAR. Memphis is the first, and that bridge has just been opened. I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana, Is the purpose to supply the needs of traffic as well as the railroad traffic?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I think that will be covered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "or to the subordinate agencies of said city their" and insert in lieu thereof the word "it."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Amend line 4, page 2, by inserting, after the word "act," the words "the Secretary of War may require."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "require" and inserting the word "permit."

Mr. DUPRÉ. That is agreeable to me.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Amend, after the words "New Orleans," in line 5, by striking out the comma and insert the words "or its subordinate agencies may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "to."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, after the word "authorized," change the period to a comma and add the following: "in accordance with the foregoing act approved March 23, 1906, so far as the same may be applicable."

Mr. MANN. That is to give the War Department control over construction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DUPRÉ, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15947, the naval appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the naval appropriation bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNING. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is his intention to allow the House to vote on any of these amendments? I desire to have a separate vote on amendment No. 80, page 57 of the bill, authorizing increase in the enlisted strength of the Navy, and also on the amendments, commencing on page 176, line 13, for the further increase of the Naval Establishment of the United States, down to line 19, on page 180. I would like to have a vote on those amendments. I favor them and I believe the majority of the House also favors them.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to ask that the whole bill go to conference and that there be no limitation placed on the conferees. The conferees may report back an agreement and then it would be for the House to vote upon it.

Mr. BROWNING. Then we would have to vote for the rejection or the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The vote would be on the conference report as a whole.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct. I think the whole bill ought to go to conference without restrictions or limitations.

Mr. BROWNING. When I made the motion to recommit this House bill and voted against its passage, I did so for the reason that I did not consider it an adequate naval measure. The Senate has added important amendments which should be adopted, and in view of the fact that my motion to recommit was beaten by only six votes, I think the House should now be given opportunity to vote on the amendments of the Senate to which I have called attention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to amendment 89. I do not believe that I can consistently let this bill go to conference on unanimous consent unless there is some assurance given the House in some way that the House conferees will not yield upon that amendment until the House has had an opportunity to vote upon it. The amendment I refer to is on page 60. A Member of this House said to me a few days ago that apparently every man who was in the Navy who wanted to be made a rear admiral went over to the Senate and had himself included in the list, and I think that remark must be very nearly true. I asked the Navy Department yesterday to furnish me with data showing how many new rear admirals would be taken care of if this amendment No. 89 were passed, and I was informed that it amounted to only 82. Of course they say they will not all be taken care of in the next two or three years, but I am not willing to let this bill go to conference unless we have some kind of assurance that the House conferees are not going to yield and agree to the Senate amendment and come back here and place us in the position of having to vote the conference report up or down.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that my individual opinion is that that personnel legislation should be written with a good deal more care than it has been, and there should be a reduction in the percentages, reducing very materially the number provided for. There should be some personnel legislation, and the conferees would consider that very carefully. Speaking for myself I should not agree to it in the exact terms in which it is incorporated in the bill. I think it should be very materially reduced.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. I have been told that the position of rear admiral corresponds to the position of brigadier general in the Army. A brigadier general in the Army has control of 5,000 men. A rear admiral ought to have substantially the same number. It is proposed here that the Navy be increased to 74,000 men. If this provision be finally agreed to, inasmuch as we have 20 rear admirals now—

Mr. PADGETT. Eighteen.

Mr. COX. That will make exactly 100 rear admirals to 74,000 enlisted men—out of all proportion, absolutely topheavy.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman there are 18 in the regular number, and then there are additional numbers, making, as I now remember, 26 that are now rear admirals. As I understand the figures, it would make about 82 all told, not 82 or 83 in addition to what we have now.

Mr. COX. I think this amendment actually means 82 in addition to what we have now. And we have now 145 rear admirals on the retired list. By this amendment they propose to make rear admirals out of men in the Medical Corps, the Pay Corps, the Construction Corps, the Corps of Civil Engineers, Chaplains' Corps, thereby permitting almost everyone to get himself made a rear admiral.

Mr. PADGETT. As I stated to the gentleman, there is a great deal of correction that ought to be made in that, and it is my purpose to go over it very carefully and to reduce it.

Mr. COX. I do not want to bind the gentleman too strongly, but I can not yield my rights on that proposition, and yet I do not want to interfere with this matter going to conference.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Not now. If the Senate refuses to yield on this proposition, will the gentleman return this bill to the House and give the House a chance to vote upon it?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state to the House whether there is any reason why we should embody in the naval appropriation bill a reorganization scheme of the entire personnel of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. There is some personnel legislation that is very badly needed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why has not the gentleman brought it in in a separate bill so that the House could consider it upon its merits?

Mr. PADGETT. I will simply state that it was because we were engaged for nearly five months in the preparation of the naval appropriation bill, and while we have had extensive hearings heretofore, which have been printed, and a number of Members have them, we have not yet had an opportunity to bring in that legislation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to two more amendments with respect to the building program and the increase of the Navy. It seems to me that Congress is running stark, crazy mad on this preparedness program. This bill as it passed the House carried $270,000,000—

Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and sixty-nine million dollars.

Mr. COX. Practically $270,000,000, and they have added $50,000,000 in the Senate.

Mr. PADGETT. Forty-eight million dollars and odd.

Mr. COX. Well, we will not quibble over so small a matter as $2,000,000; but it makes a total of about $315,000,000 all told.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. What does the gentleman think about that proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. I think that some of it will stick and some of it will go off.

Mr. COX. I shall have to get a more definite answer than that before I can consent to have this bill go to conference at this time.

Mr. PADGETT. That is all I can tell the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. COX. I wanted to be given an opportunity to vote on this increase of the Navy which has been put on in the Senate.

Mr. PADGETT. As I said a moment ago, I think the bill ought to go to conference, and the conferees will try to adjust matters; and as to what we can do in reference to the building program I am not prepared to say, but I think there will be some adjustment.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Can not the chairman give the gentleman from Indiana the same assurance on the building program that he did in reference to the personnel legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. That unless the Senate yields somewhat it will come back to the House. Yes, sir; I will make that statement.

Mr. COX. As it passed the House, we provided so many battle cruisers, I believe. I think the Senate cut out a number and adds four battleships. Is not that correct?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. If I understand the gentleman correctly, that word "some" is a very narrow margin if this bill goes to conference. He states that unless the Senate yields "some" on that provision it would be returned to the House. That is very thin ice for a Member of the House to skate on who is opposed to such a tremendous building program as is carried in this measure.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I take it the gentleman believes that eventually this bill will go to conference?

Mr. COX. Oh, sure. It has to go to conference.

Mr. MANN. We all know this is a bill that will be passed in some shape.

Mr. COX. There is no question about that.

Mr. MANN. Well, what good will it do not to send it to conference?

Mr. COX. It might do a whole lot of good and it might not do any good. That will depend upon what the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union sees fit to do when we get there.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; because if the Committee of the Whole should do something it will still go to conference. A vote might be a direction, but I take it that on a bill like this the House would not instruct the conferees on any proposition.

Mr. COX. Well—

Mr. MANN. It seems to me—I believe I am as finicky about these things as anybody in the House—it might be better to let the bill go to conference and give the conferees time enough to learn something about these Senate amendments. It is perfectly safe to say there will be no long, protracted hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs if we should send it to the committee. If this bill should go to the committee, the committee will report the bill right out that all the Senate amendments be disagreed to and a conference asked for. We might spend a week or two weeks or three weeks on the bill in the House, and we would not get any further along than we are now. It is the inevitable result of our methods of legislation.

Now, some gentlemen do not want this bill to go to conference, because they want to agree to some of the Senate amendments. Some gentlemen do not want it to go to conference, because they want to disagree to the Senate amendments. I would be willing to eat my hat if on a vote in the House the House does not disagree to every amendment the Senate has put in the bill and in the end send it to conference. Now, the conferees will have a little longer time, when they will study the subject. The rest of us do not know much about it.

Mr. COX. With all due deference to the House Committee on Naval Affairs heretofore—and I have followed this bill as closely as other Members—I think I am clearly within the record in saying that the House conferees have invariably yielded to the Senate upon important material matters and the Senate has yielded upon the immaterial matters.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. COX. I think I am within the record in stating that.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman is not within the record. I think he is out of the record.

Mr. COX. If I am out of the record, I will stand corrected.

Mr. BUTLER. Just put it the other way.

Mr. COX. Just one more amendment to which I wish to call attention. The Senate sometimes does some wise things, but not often; but last spring, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was going through, it put an amendment on over there which prohibited employees from drawing double salaries where the salary aggregated more than $2,000. I think that was a good provision at that time. Now, then, the Senate here, by an amendment, proposes to avoid that.

Mr. PADGETT. No; they do not avoid that. I know about it. The Comptroller of the Treasury has made a ruling that secretaries or clerks of committees and various other clerks and officers are not public officers. He has said that they were not appointed to public offices, and that it should not apply to them. He has made the strange ruling that they are not public officers; that there is a difference between an officer and a public officer. That is the holding of the Comptroller of the Treasury. The result is that it had deprived a number—and among them the clerk of my committee, who is a retired naval officer, and is receiving his retired pay, and he is checked up, because they hold that he is not a public officer, and this is simply to correct that.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not want to go on record here as criticizing the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, does he?

Mr. PADGETT. I do.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman contend that the decision rendered by him was not within the law?

Mr. PADGETT. I do.

Mr. COX. Contrary to the law?

Mr. PADGETT. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. That provision was incorporated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, over which another committee of the House has jurisdiction. Here we have another committee seeking to preempt the work of the legislative committee, and I would like to know from the gentleman whether he thinks it is fair to the other committee for his committee to preempt matters that pertain to another committee of the House?

Mr. PADGETT. We are not to preempt it. I understand that in the Senate the chairman of the Appropriation Committee, Senator MARTIN, who had control of the measure and put in the other provision for the very purpose of taking care of these cases, is in favor of this amendment and agreed that it might go into the naval bill because the other legislation has been passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I remember, this provision was put on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as it was introduced in the House.

Mr. PADGETT. I said it was, and the Comptroller of the Treasury, as I stated, has made this ruling, that these clerks of the committee and other officers, in the Coast Guard, the Naval Militia, and various other ones that I could bring up, and which I have not at my tongue's end right now, are not public officers. He said no one is a public officer unless he is exercising a part of the sovereignty. He makes a distinction between an officer and a public officer, and because the word "public" was used in the act he is holding up their case.

Mr. COX. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this amendment briefly here:

But this shall not apply to retired officers or enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, or to officers and enlisted men of the Organized Militia and Naval Militia in the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia: Provided, That no such retired officer, officer, or enlisted man shall be denied or deprived of any of his pay, salary, or compensation as such, or of any other salary or compensation for services heretofore rendered, by reason of any decision or construction of said section 6.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. That is put in there—

Mr. COX. The gentleman held a moment ago, if I caught his position correctly, that the Comptroller of the Treasury in rendering this decision rendered a decision in violation of the law.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman's interpretation of it is wholly at variance with and unwarranted by law. To say that the clerks of the committees and these men who are in the Naval Militia and the Coast Guard, and these others whose names you read there, are not public officers, is not sustained by correct reasoning.

Mr. COX. This, from my viewpoint, is nothing short of absolute class legislation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. When that provision went into the bill recently, inserted as an amendment of the Senate, I made an inquiry of the conferees on the part of the House in reference to this situation. The clerk of the Naval Committee is a retired officer of the Navy. Clerks of equal rank in the House get $2,500 a year. He gets $2,400 a year, because of an old provision to the effect that no one drawing $2,500 a year could draw another salary from the Government. So far as I know, no one wanted to interfere with him. The conferees on the part of the House assured me that the provision that we had agreed to would not affect him or anybody in his class. Now, I take it, although I have not made inquiry, that the comptroller or somebody has ruled that it does affect him. Is not that right?

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct, and he puts it on the ground that he is not a public officer.

Mr. MANN. And is different from the understanding of the conferees and the House when the legislative bill became a law?

Mr. PADGETT. When the legislative bill was before the House I went over to the Senate and had a conference with some of the members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations—Senators MARTIN and SWANSON—and they put the language in there, after a conference with Mr. Courts, clerk of the Appropriations Committee of the House, in order to take care of this situation, and when that language was put in there the comptroller ruled that these persons are not public officers. He says there is a distinction—I have never been able to comprehend what it is—between an officer and a public officer, and because the language in the legislative bill used the words "public officer" these persons are not entitled to pay and he is holding up the pay of 50 or 75 persons, say, including the clerk of my committee.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember exactly the language.

Mr. GARDNER. The situation is this: If anybody objects to this going to conference, it goes to the Committee on Naval Affairs, does it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Either that or remain on the Speaker's table and a rule to send it to conference.

Mr. GARDNER. And the Committee on Rules may take it away from the Committee on Naval Affairs, but it can not take it away from the Speaker's table without unanimous consent?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the Speaker has it in his discretion to hold it.

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily the Speaker holds the bill on his table if anybody asks him to do it, but if anybody insists that it be immediately referred to the committee it is referred.

Mr. GARDNER. That is my understanding, but what I want to say is this: Frequently the chairman of the committee gets out of that situation by saying, "Before we report an agreement with the Senate we will give the House an opportunity to vote on all these questions that the House seriously wants to take up." For instance, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] has something he wants to take up. I want a separate vote on the building program, and I want a separate vote on the personnel, and I want a separate vote on the personnel of the Marine Corps. I have no doubt if the gentleman would say, "We will give the House a chance to vote on these major points," he would not have the slightest difficulty, and I and the gentleman from Indiana and everybody else would be glad to see the bill go to conference, so long as there is a chance given to the House to deal with these questions, and not go to the conference committee without action.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. What now becomes of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily if the Speaker is asked to hold the bill on the table he holds it on the table temporarily, but if anybody insists on its being referred, he will refer it.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that it be laid on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. No; I think it would be more expeditious to send it to the committee and the committee will report it back. Somebody will object when it comes back.

Mr. BUTLER. I will give notice that we will need a quorum here to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. I ask that it be referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered printed.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. You will have to have a quorum on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, may I give notice now that I will call a meeting of the Naval Committee at 2 o'clock this afternoon in the room of Committee on Naval Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee gives notice that he will call a meeting of the Committee on Naval Affairs this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I do not think a man can give notice on the floor of the House of calling a committee in that way. That is no meeting of the committee in the true sense.

The SPEAKER. It is done, and nothing can be undone about it. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked several times recently about the industrial conditions upon the Pacific coast. I propose to answer those inquiries by making a few observations this afternoon in regard to the lumber and shingle industries of my State. Unfortunately for us upon the Pacific coast, we are not reaping any of the great prosperity that comes from the contest across the sea.

The State of Washington produces over 80 per cent of all the cedar shingles manufactured in the United States and over 60 per cent of all shingles of all kinds produced in the United States. The greatest competitor of the State of Washington in the shingle industry is British Columbia.

The men working in the mills of Washington are all white and all American citizens. The labor employed in the mills of British Columbia is 80 per cent oriental, mostly Chinese. The American shingle weaver receives approximately double the wages that are paid to his Chinese competitors in British Columbia.

Cedar logs, the material from which shingles are manufactured, are considerably lower in British Columbia than in Washington.

With these facts known to all who care to inform themselves, the result of what free shingles would mean is so plain that it is astonishing that even Democratic statesmen should not have realized it.

No better illustration of the workings of the protective tariff can be found than in the history of the shingle industry of Washington.

In the Payne law there were material changes in the tariff upon three important products of the State of Washington. The tariff was reduced on coal and the price of coal immediately increased. It was reduced on lumber and the price of lumber immediately increased. It was increased from 25 cents to 50 cents per thousand on shingles, and the price of shingles was immediately reduced; new mills opened up; new markets were found; production increased; work and wages increased; the British Columbia producer was driven from many American markets that they had long controlled; the mills for the first time in the history of the industry ran 12 months of the year instead of 6 months. This is the history of the increase of the tariff on shingles under the Payne law, but these facts meant nothing to the Democratic Party.

In the Underwood law shingles were placed upon the free list.

Sixty days before the Underwood law went into effect all American mills were running full time.

Sixty days before the Underwood law went into effect half of the Canadian mills were closed.

Sixty days after the Underwood law went into effect 80 per cent of the American mills were closed.

Sixty days after the Underwood law went into effect all Canadian mills were running at full capacity, both night and day.

Sixty days after the Underwood law went into effect there were more idle men looking for work in the State of Washington than ever before.

The Payne law opened the American mill and closed the foreign mill.

The Underwood law opened the foreign mill and closed the American mill.

The Payne law gave the work and the wages to the American and kept the money at home.

The Underwood law gave the work and the wages to the foreigner—the Chinaman, the Japanese, and the Hindu—and sent the money out of the country.

The effect of the Underwood law was to immediately depress the markets of this country. During the first year under that law, the total amount of shingles consumed in the United States decreased 30 per cent, but notwithstanding this decrease in total sales, the sales from British Columbia for each month of that year in the United States was approximately equal to the total sales that had been made in any one year under the Payne law.

While most of our mills were closed those of British Columbia were running night and day, and 95 per cent of all the shingles produced in British Columbia are sold in the United States to the exclusion of the American product.

Such is the destructive story of Democratic free trade and the shingle industry. The great war in Europe changed conditions to some extent. The industry to-day in British Columbia is not so prosperous as it was immediately before the war, although the shingle industry is still probably the most prosperous in British Columbia.

Many of our mills are still closed. Many of them are running only a part of the time and at part capacity. Some of them are running on the cooperative plan, dividing with their employees such profits as they are able to secure, in an effort to keep from closing entirely.

Wages now and at all times have been very much lower under the Underwood law than under the Payne law.

During the last 10 months over 7,500 carloads of shingles have come into this country from British Columbia—more than came into the country during the entire time that the Payne law was upon the statute books. The Government has lost the revenue and is placing a direct tax upon the people to get money to meet current expenses.

During the operation of the Underwood law more than $8,000,000 in wages have been taken from American labor in the shingle mills of the State of Washington and given to the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Hindu in British Columbia. That much money has gone out of circulation and out of the country. Many of our mills are closed and decaying. Many prosperous communities and towns have become desolate places.

But the price of shingles to the consumer has not been reduced a single penny by the Underwood law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Unless the tariff is restored on shingles before the war in Europe ends, that industry is doomed to certain and rapid destruction.

Shingles is but one illustration as to the effect of free trade on the industries of Washington. The result as to lumber, lime, fish, the dairy and fruit industry is the same, differing only in degree. All these industries will be greatly injured if the tariff is not restored before peace is restored. They are not prosperous to-day, but they are existing only because of the indirect stimulation they receive from the battle-field prosperity that has come to us.

The conditions in Washington under the Underwood law before the awful conflict in Europe began is well stated by a mill owner in a letter that he wrote a few months after the Underwood law had gone upon the statute books. I quote from it a few sentences:

Belgium structural steel and Swedish high-grade and tool steel has practically captured our market. I am using Swedish steel in the blacksmith shop, feeding our men Australian beef, New Zealand butter, and Chinese eggs. You can not borrow money now unless you have gold bullion to put up for security. In other words, we have just about the same d—d Democratic times as 20 years ago. I have not seen a business man smile in three months, and we are all wearing our old clothes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is the gentleman going to leave the subject of shingles now?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman leaves that I should like to ask him one question. As I understand him, the shingle industry has suffered very materially by reason of the fact that shingles have been put on the free list.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is certainly correct.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that one of the Republican colleagues of the gentleman on this floor voted to put shingles on the free list and was thereupon elected to the United States Senate by the people of the State of Washington?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman has his facts a little bit twisted. It is true that a distinguished gentleman who now represents the State of Washington in the Senate [Mr. POINDEXTER] voted for the Underwood tariff law, which put shingles on the free list, but he was over in the other end of the Capitol when he so voted. It is also true, as shown by the record, that he voted for free shingles once before upon roll call before he voted for the Underwood bill, but unfortunately in the State of Washington his voting that way has not made any difference in the injurious effect that free shingles has had upon that industry.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. He voted for free shingles before he was elected to the Senate.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. With all due respect to my friend, I must decline to yield further. I do not intend to be led into a discussion of the tariff record of the distinguished Senator to whom he refers.

The other day the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the distinguished Democratic leader, referred in one of his speeches to the prosperous condition of the lumber industry in Washington. One of my friends sent me a telegram from which I read. This telegram is dated July 7, 1916. He says:

Lumber not prosperous. Many mills and camps closing. Ninety-nine representative fir mills last week reported orders nearly 10 per cent below production and production 12 per cent below normal. This is a fair indication of the entire industry. Lumber prices, which were fairly normal in the spring of 1913, declined until rock bottom was reached early in the fall of 1915, when the market steadied and advanced to nearly normal in early spring, 1916. In past two months again declined, averaging loss from $1.50 to $2 per thousand feet.

I may say that two or three days ago I received a paper from my city reviewing the lumber industry, and the production of lumber in the State of Washington to-day is 50 per cent below normal. Fifty-five of the larger fir mills, if I recall the number correctly, have closed indefinitely.

On the other hand, I want to call attention to the fact that according to this telegram there has been an increase in what the lumber men have to purchase. He says:

Costing more to manufacture. Saws advanced 10 to 15 per cent, leather belting 25 per cent, bar iron 100 per cent, mild steel 100 per cent, high-speed steel 600 per cent. Shingle industry worse shape than lumber. British Columbia, which shipped in 2,500 carloads in the year 1912, under 50 cents duty, and when United States markets were taking more shingles than now, shipped in 7,500 carloads first 10 months of the Government's fiscal year which has just closed.

This telegram is signed by J. H. Bloedel, one of the leading lumbermen of the United States. The war prosperity, that has overcome some of the evil effects of the present tariff law in the East, has had but little effect on our coast. Free trade still oppresses us. There can be no great prosperity in the State of Washington until the Underwood tariff law is blotted from our statute books. [Applause on Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] is entitled to one hour.

THE DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, you gentlemen on that side of the aisle, which separates the sheep from the goats, have for some time been engaged in lauding your candidate for the Presidency and lambasting ours, and while I am in a cheerful mood, and while some of your recent speeches are still fresh in my mind, I desire to make a few statements concerning the present administration, and which I trust will be received in the spirit in which they are given, my only aim being to promote harmony within your ranks, correct some false impressions, which have gone forth, and to call your attention directly to some things which you have neglected to talk about, but which the great masses of the people have not overlooked.

We have stood by your candidate for the Presidency many times when he needed help, and would stand by him oftener if he would only stand still once in a while, and right here I want to state that he is an excellent subject for the "movies"; but we have been mealy-mouthed about your shortcomings long enough, and from now on you must either "fish or cut bait." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

You have boasted long and loud of prosperity and all its attendant blessings and have extended your remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD page after page for weeks upon that subject and the end is not yet, but my friends there is no real sound substantial foundation on which to base your pretended prosperity. It vanishes as a desert mirage when you approach it. The prosperity you claim is but a sham and a mere shadow of feeble pretense. There is no money in the Treasury with which to meet the unprecedented appropriations you are daily piling up. You are enfeebling and impoverishing the Public Treasury instead of strengthening it.

Your free-trade law no revenue brings,
You must tax the people or borrow;
For you're going in debt to-day for things
You can't pay for to-morrow.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Inexperienced in governmental affairs, you have plunged into all manner of reckless expenditures and swamped the Treasury almost in a day. You have squandered millions of dollars of the people's money for things they do not need. In the words of Mark Twain:

You have achieved the dearest wishes of your hearts, but in so doing you have drawn a white elephant in the political lottery and have nothing to feed it on.

Great guns and little fishes! You slid into office on a platform every plank of which has been demolished, but you have patched it up, oiled and veneered it, and are going to try to slide in again; but you will be disappointed. It will be a case of "slide, Kelly, slide," but you will not reach the home plate again. You reached home on an error in 1912, but the people will fool you in 1916. [Applause on Republican side.]

Your gross disregard of the promises you made will be resented at the polls in November. You have proven false to the trust reposed in you, and deserve to be defeated. You have sought, at the expense of our Nation's honor, to play petty politics in nearly every measure you have advocated and in nearly every act you have done. You declared for the rigid enforcement of the civil-service laws of this country in 1912, but by hook and by crook you have seen fit to destroy the efficiency of the rules and regulations and made of them a farce. You have enforced the civil-service laws by adding upward of 30,000 people to the Government pay rolls outside the civil-service rules and regulations, and the end is not yet. You do not dare to deny it.

You have demoted competent, honest, and faithful public servants of different political faith from yours and promoted inefficient political weaklings of your own ilk. You have dropped from the rolls of the various departments of Government able and conscientious men and women who differed with you along political lines and have added to the list the names of those whose chief qualification was a "pull" back home. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. The American people are ashamed of you. You have sought through some of your leading Members to lengthen the hours of labor of the overworked and underpaid employees of the District of Columbia and have sought to destroy the organic act under which they live, or, rather, exist.

You have sought to make the Postmaster General a political censor, clothed with arbitrary powers with which to destroy the freedom of the press, muzzle editors, curb the circulation of newspapers and magazines, and ruin any owner of any publication who dared to oppose your administration.

You have done more during the last three and a half years of this administration to destroy the efficiency of the mail service on the rural free-delivery and star routes than any other party in our country's history. You have given the people who live in the remote farming, grazing, and agricultural sections of the West the worst mail service they have ever had. Instead of trying to encourage those who have the hardihood and ambition to settle up those great, rich, undeveloped sections of the country, you have ignored their prayers and petitions for a service which would bring them into closer communication with the outside world, and have seen fit to abolish their post offices, discontinue their mail routes, and have denied them the service to which they are entitled.

You have made of the Reclamation Service a football for contending parties, and instead of legislating so as to favor and encourage the development of meritorious projects, have made it possible for the development of only those projects located in sections where interested parties can muster the greatest political "pull," and for the truth of these assertions I would respectfully request that you read the statements of some of your leading Members of this House on the Democratic side made on the 29th day of July, 1914. The Members of the Western States, regardless of party affiliations, stood shoulder to shoulder in their efforts to see that all irrigation projects should be undertaken solely upon the grounds of merit, but were unsuccessful.

But what can the people expect? At Baltimore in 1912 you turned down the greatest living member of your party for the Presidency to suit the whims and fancies of the great apostle of peace, poetry, and grape juice. [Applause on the Republican side.] Thank Heaven, time evens up all things, and your candidate for the Presidency repaid his debt of gratitude, and for the only time during his administration put his words into action and knocked the apostle into a "cocked hat." [Applause on the Republican side.] It is needless to state that Mr. Bryan will be out stumping the country for the Democratic standard bearer this fall. It will be remembered, however, that he also stumped the country for Judge Parker some years ago. I have never heard anyone say anything about Judge Parker's having been elected, or of his having thanked Mr. Bryan for the part he took. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

You have torn down the barrier of protection which has stood for more than a hundred years between the working classes of this country and the cheap coolie and pauper labor of the Old World. You have weighted down and handicapped our working men in the race of life and have entered them in a free-for-all in competition against the teeming, starving hordes of Europe and Asia.

You told the people that if they would place you in charge of the administration you would immediately reduce the high cost of living, but you have deceived them, for you have raised it still higher, and the Lord knows when it will stop, for it is still going up. You have not only raised the price of every food product that goes down their necks, but have added 2½ cents to every collar they wear around their necks. My good friend, the gentleman from Texas, "Cyclone" DAVIS, notwithstanding. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

You have throttled honest industry and have sought to array class against class, section against section, and race against race, apparently for no other purpose than continuing yourselves in office. You have wantonly maligned and insulted millions of our most patriotic citizens, naturalized and native born, simply because their hearts beat in sympathy with loved ones of their own flesh and blood in foreign lands, and, like all true Americans who believe in fair play, dared to insist that this country maintain a strict neutrality. You refused in this House to warn American citizens to keep off armed belligerent vessels, but, more than that, you refused to protect them when they did go.

Your party has been weak, wobbly, and vacillating in its policies. You have side-stepped and back-pedaled on every important subject that has come up before you. In diplomacy the Kaiser has outgeneraled you at every turn, and John Bull seems to own you body and soul. Poor old Huerta and Carranza and Villa have vied with each other in taunting and humiliating you and have turned the arms and ammunitions with which you so lavishly supplied them upon our own citizens, and the end is not yet. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You have spent millions upon millions of the people's money in mock demonstrations of awe by our Army and Navy, but, although being in a "fighting mood," yet too proud to fight, and imbued with the spirit of "watchful waiting," it has availed us naught. The same awful conditions of outlawry still prevail along our border and throughout our neighboring Republic. Our soldiers have been ordered in and ordered out. Your candidate has time and again ordered them to march right in and turn around and march right out again. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Thousands of our young men from different States, half equipped, half clothed, and half fed, are speeding to the border. Judging from the way our troops have been treated in the past in Mexico, I am inclined to believe that they are now going there with some misgivings as to their future. Shades of Davy Crockett, when will this thing end!

We built the Panama Canal and paid for it, but it is not ours. You told the American people that we owned it, and that American vessels engaged in coastwise trade should have free tolls, but you deceived them. Why? Because Great Britain told you what to do, and you did it. [Applause on the Republican side.] How can you face the American people and ask them to believe you again? You can fool some of the people some of the time, but you can not fool all of the people all of the time.

According to late reports, your candidate for the Presidency, after a long period of "watchful waiting," is now in a "fighting mood" and is ready to fight, no matter what the cost, and we are informed that you have adopted as your new slogan for the coming campaign, "No matter what the cost." Now, my friends, that is what is the matter with your party now. You have been running this Government upon that principle ever since you came into power. You have taxed the people to death. You are striving to build up a great and powerful political machine, no matter what the cost. That is what has depleted the Treasury and forced you to raise revenue by a direct tax upon the people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You are asking the people to continue you in power because you claim to have maintained peace, but it is noticeable that you keep on levying what you are pleased to call war taxes just the same. You led the people to believe that you could run this Government on less money than our party could possibly get along with; that you would cut down appropriations materially; but you have done nothing of the kind. You have given the people the most extravagant administration in American history.

You made the people believe that by the passage of the Underwood law not only the cost of living would be reduced but taxes would be reduced, and they would not feel the effects of taxation at all; but you have taxed them "coming and going." In other words, you are trying to "double shoot the turn." You are trying to "play both ends against the middle," but it will not work. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The proof you present for their consideration reminds me of the tramp who knocked at a farmer's door and asked for something to eat. The good-hearted old farmer looked him over and asked, "Are you a Christian?" "Why, can't you tell?" answered the tramp. "Look at these holes worn in the knees of my pants. Don't they prove it?" The farmer's wife promptly brought out a "hand-out," and the tramp turned to go. "Well, well," asked the farmer; "what made those holes in the seat of your pants?" "Backsliding," replied the tramp as he hurried on. [Laughter.]

Now, my friends, that is what is the matter with your party. You have all worn holes in the seats of your breeches by backsliding. You are genuine backsliders, but if I am not much mistaken some of you will have a different reason to offer for the porosity of the posterior part of your trousers after the people register their kicks at the coming election. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

You pledged your candidate for the Presidency to a single term, but the type was not cold until he was building up his fences for another; but then what do promises and platforms mean to you in the mad scramble for public office. You said in your platform of 1912:

We favor a single presidential term, and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution making the President of the United States ineligible for reelection, and we pledge the candidate to this convention to this principle.

Gentlemen, you have kept that promise faithfully, have you not? And yet, not fully satisfied that the people would believe you, you went them one better in order to make them "sit up and take notice" by saying, in conclusion:

Our platform is one of principle which we believe to be essential to our national welfare. Our pledges are made to be kept when in office as well as relied upon during the campaign, and we invite the cooperation of all citizens regardless of party who believe in maintaining unimpaired the institutions and traditions of our country.

Strange to say, you did not insert either of those planks in your last platform. I wonder why. [Laughter on Republican side.]

You further stated in your platform, as follows:

We believe in the preservation and maintenance in their full strength and integrity of the three coordinate branches of Federal Government—executive, the legislative, and the judicial—each keeping within its own bounds and not encroaching upon the just powers of either of the others.

Yes; you have lived up to that, too, have you not? You have done more to destroy the strength and integrity of the three separate and distinct branches of government than any political party in all history. [Applause on the Republican side.] In fact, it might be truthfully stated that under your administration the executive and legislative branches of the Government have been merged into one. Your candidate for the Presidency is the "whole show." You pass through both Houses of Congress what the President wants, how he wants it, and when he wants it, and those of you who dare to vote according to your own convictions and in opposition to his are blacklisted and marked for slaughter, and many of you on that side of the aisle will bear witness to the truth of my assertions. If you do not believe me, ask some of the Members from the "Lone Star" State. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Time and again your candidate has come before both Houses of Congress and whipped you into line upon the pretended grounds of patriotism. Congress alone has the power to declare war, and yet your candidate for the Presidency has time after time gone off on a tangent and taken unto himself the right to virtually declare war without the advice and consent of Congress, and then when he has blundered along until he is at the end of his rope he comes in here and prayerfully asks us to back him up. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Well, we have patriotically come to his rescue and backed him up in virtually every mistake he has made, so far as any questions of patriotism were concerned, but we are getting sick and tired of it. We followed him to Vera Cruz, foolish as was the mission, to exact an apology and salutation from poor old

Huerta, the man he had refused to recognize as the de facto head of the government. There was nothing else for us to do, for he had made another blunder, and we had to stand behind him. Well, after we had spent millions upon millions of dollars of the people's money and lost a number of precious lives and killed a few ignorant and half-starved Mexicans, and obdurate old Huerta would neither apologize nor salute, your candidate for the Presidency, realizing the awful mistake he had made, turned around and marched right back again. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Well, not long ago we followed him on another mission. It was not only punitive but puerile. We started out with the express purpose of capturing Villa, "dead or alive." Well, at last accounts Villa is not dead, but very much alive. But what has become of our puerile expedition? It has all gone up in smoke. Our puerile expedition is over. We lost some more precious lives and accomplished nothing except to show that we are pursuing a weak, wobbly, and vacillating policy, and your candidate for the Presidency has made another blunder and is ready to turn around and march right out again. He said that we went to Vera Cruz to force a salute to the flag. Secretary Lane said that we went there to serve mankind. At any rate, we did not get the salute and I am unable to see wherein we rendered any service to mankind. I would like to have some of you gentlemen on that side of the aisle explain to this House and to the people of this country just what you have accomplished on either of these expeditions that has resulted in the betterment of mankind. I do not think that we will follow him on any more of those puerile expeditions. We are tired of it, and so are the people who elected us. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Your party has no domestic policy whatever. It has no foreign policy. You are simply drifting, like Jack London's Snark, in the doldrums, with sails all set to catch some vagrant breeze. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

You have talked long and loud about State rights. That seems to be your main stock in trade, but never in the history of this Government has a party done so much to take from the States their several rights, and especially is it true with reference to the question of taxation. You have tied up the great natural resources of the West, retarded development, and confiscated the revenues which rightfully belong to the several States.

You have not only sought to muzzle the press and make it subservient to the partisan views of the Postmaster General, but you have seemingly sought, through various administrative officers, and especially through your partisan Comptroller of the Currency, whose arbitrary actions have recently been challenged in the courts of this city, and successfully, too, in the minds of all fair-minded men, to hamper and embarrass, to say the least, the banking institutions of this country in the pursuit of their regular business and in a roundabout way compel them to "line up" behind the administration. No one at all familiar with the proceedings in the Riggs Bank case or with current events for one moment doubts your purpose or the objects sought to be accomplished.

Your administration might be said to be one great big family affair. Your Secretary of the Treasury, a most excellent and pleasing gentleman of good parts, chances to be the son-in-law of your distinguished candidate for the Presidency and naturally has much to do, directly and indirectly, by virtue of his position, with the placing of Government deposits, but, of course, no one would for a moment intimate that there would be any favoritism shown any particular section or locality of the country or any particular class of bankers. It is noticeable, however, that the Southern States have not been overlooked in the general disposition of the public funds.

Your distinguished Secretary of the Interior is a great and good man, and it is hard to believe for a moment that he would seek to do politics in the position he occupies. And yet, I presume, I may quote from an editorial which recently appeared in the Tonopah Bonanza, one of the rugged pioneer papers of my State, and for whose editor I have the highest regard, the following editorial, which speaks for itself:

THROTTLING THE PRESS.

Some attention has been paid to recent efforts of the Democratic Party to muzzle the press, but the statesmen who take tricks at the helm of the ship of state unite in saying the party is not responsible for the acts of a few individuals, even though the list includes members of the Cabinet and the Postmaster General. In any event, the fact remains that the administration at Washington has sedulously essayed to secure a strangle hold on the molders of public opinion in a manner that had not been attempted by any previous administration. The Wilson administration stands on record as the first from the time of Washington that ever deliberately tried to prostitute the press by offering a bonus for the perversion of sentiments and the construction of opinion. This order evinces such contemptible meanness that it is difficult to comprehend how any administration could stoop to the infamy which, nevertheless, is a fact that can be established by reference to the files of the surveyor general's office or the register of lands at Carson City. It is a matter of record. No one has ever tried to deny it or to clear the skirts of the administration of the charge. Simmered down the statement is that the Wilson administration was the first in power to issue a direct order to all officials of the land office that applications for patent, all public printing, and all patronage emanating from that source for the printer must be given to a publisher friendly to the administration.

So far as I am advised, no one in authority has ever yet denied or refuted the statements contained in the above editorial.

You claim that times are prosperous and that our factories are running full blast and working overtime. In a sense that is true, but what are they doing? They are principally engaged in manufacturing munitions of war and near munitions of war for destructive purposes. Your prosperity comes through furnishing the very means by which whole nations are being destroyed and whole countries devastated. That is what has made your pretended prosperity. Ah, my friends, you are cutting coupons from the shrouds of the dead on the fields of battle while you are chanting "Peace on earth, good will toward men." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our great farming communities will long be able to point with pride to the achievements you have made along the lines of cheap competition. You have opened up their markets to Mexico and South America on the south, to Canada on the north, and to China and Japan on the west, and the cheap meats and other farm products of Mexico, Argentina, and Australia and other countries will, after this war, put them out of business.

The farm products from Argentina and Australia alone will make it impossible for them to compete, pay their help living wages, and live according to our standard of living. The manufactured products of Japan alone will, after this war, drive thousands upon thousands of our workmen out of employment and upon the streets. The other countries will not be far behind in the fierce competition when the war is over and they settle down to their industrial pursuits. Millions of orientals will, under our present free-trade laws, enter into competition with our own workmen, not only on their farms and in their factories abroad but upon our farms and in our factories at home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And, by the way, your candidate for the Presidency has some strong convictions concerning orientals, and judging from what he has said and written, I would like to ask some of you gentlemen on that side of the aisle how he feels concerning the questions of exclusion and immigration, for his attitude on those questions can only be by us surmised. It will be remembered that your candidate once wrote a book entitled "History of the American people," and in commenting upon the Chinese exclusion act, in volume 5, page 213—and, by the way, one can not help but notice your candidate's lucky 13—among other things, he says:

The Chinese were more to be desired as workmen, if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports.

And while we are on this subject, let me ask what classes and nationalities of our foreign-born immigrants from Europe belonged to that so-called "coarse crew," and it might be well for those of you who are planning on doing some political speech making during the coming campaign to read his aforesaid history and study what he has to say concerning the so-called "coarse crew," that came crowding in every year at our eastern ports. You will doubtless be called upon to answer some very pertinent questions on different subjects embraced in that book. To save you some trouble I will quote his exact words, which are to be found on page 212 of volume 5:

But now there came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy and men of meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland, men out of the ranks where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence.

Now, in view of his strong leaning toward the orientals, would he favor the repeal of the Chinese exclusion act, or is it at all likely that he would favor the restriction of Japanese immigration? These are very important questions in the minds of our American workmen.

The people of this country would like to know just where he stands on these questions, and they have a right to know; and if any of you know, you ought to come forward and tell us. And again, our immigrants who have come here from Italy, Hungary, and Poland would like to know and have a right to know what he meant by referring to them as the "lowest class" and the "meaner sort." And we want to know and have a right to know whether or not he favors the exclusion of the people who come from Hungary, Poland, and southern Italy. At any rate, the immigration bill is still in the Senate and will not be acted upon until after the next election. At least, that is the Democratic program according to all reports. I have not heard or read of any "spectacular visit" made by the President to the other end of the Capitol in which he insisted upon its passage. I wonder why. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

England makes our flags for us now, and in the light of what has taken place during the last few years, well she might, for we have virtually acknowledged her right to dominate and control the affairs of this Government. Of course, I do not mean to insinuate that this country has shown any disposition to follow her ideas concerning the control of the Panama Canal, or her rights concerning blockades, blacklisting, right of search, and contraband of war. Oh no, we have maintained a strict neutrality between our rights and those of Great Britain. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

And while we are on this subject let us pause and listen to the following poem written by Jack Wiley, and which appeared for the first time in the American Economist:

THE LIMIT.

Shall the flag be made in England?
Kinder riles one up a bit;
Kinder starts the blood a-billin'
Just to merely think of it.
Shall the flag we call "Old Glory"
In a foreign land be made?
This is certainly the limit
Of the foul work of free trade.
Shall the flag be made in England
Far away across the deep?
Down with sentiment and feeling?
Buy your bunting where its cheap?
What care free-trade foes of country?
They've no patriotic pride.
What's the flag but so much dry goods?
Make it on the other side.
Shall the flag be made in England?
Kinder riles one up a bit;
Kinder starts the blood a-billin'
Just to merely think of it.
Work and wages they have taken,
And in idleness men lag;
Taken industry to England;
Now they want to take the flag.

[Laughter.]

That poem should be read in every public school in the land and on all public occasions, and I trust that those of you who voted for the Underwood tariff law will commit it to memory and recite it to your constituents when you start in campaigning next fall. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, let us think for a moment of how appropriately we celebrate our national independence in these days of free-trade doctrine. In addition to our English-made flag, English bunting, English festoons, and other draperies, and our Japanese lanterns, Japanese candles, Japanese shields, and Japanese anchors, we find our boys and girls all "dolloed" up in Japanese clothing, flying Japanese kites and Japanese balloons, and firing off Japanese firecrackers and Japanese torpedoes, and sending up Japanese skyrockets and other punk-illuminating combustibles, and if you examine closely enough you will find most of our patriotic free-trade participants wearing Japanese suits, Japanese shoes, and Japanese hats, and smoking "bum" Japanese cigars. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Of course the money which went to pay for all these Japanese-made goods, wares, and other articles, which you have noticed, came from the pockets of our own workmen and went into the pockets of the Japanese laborers abroad. The money we paid for those manufactured articles went to build up great industries across the sea, to the detriment of our own people and institutions. Take a look at our Goddess of Liberty and you will find her wearing Japanese-made clothing and carrying a Japanese parasol, and it is a hundred-to-one shot that she is fanning herself with a Japanese fan. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

In order to more fittingly observe the occasion during this "watchful-waiting" period it might be well to cut out the reading of the Declaration of Independence and have some pussy-footed gentlemen on that side of the aisle read your candidate's declaration of the "New Freedom," or some one of his notes to Carranza or the Kaiser. It will not make much difference which [laughter and applause on the Republican side], for—

His notes are a fine sample, on the whole.
Of rhetoric, which the learn'd call "rigamarole."

And by all means, whatever you do, omit singing "America" and the "Star-Spangled Banner" and all hands join in singing "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Such a celebration of our national Independence Day may be safely sane and democratic and in line with your ideas of a lofty patriotism, but I think, seriously speaking, that it is about time for us to return to the good old days of protection, when we wore homemade clothes, ate homemade food, used homemade flags, homemade bunting, homemade festoons, and other decorations, and flew homemade kites and homemade balloons and set off homemade firecrackers and homemade torpedoes, and recited the Declaration of Independence and patriotically sung "America" and the "Star-Spangled Banner." On such occasions our own workmen, as well as their wives and children, could fittingly celebrate the occasion and each be able to spend a little homemade money for home-grown peanuts and circus lemonade, but we will never be able to do that as long as you continue to follow out the principles you are advocating and the policies you have pursued. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

You are now laying everything that happens to the war; but when the war is over and the foreign countries settle down to their industrial pursuits, and turn their munition plants into factories for the production of such articles of commerce as are most in demand during times of peace, and our markets become flooded with their cheap products, the American people will begin to feel the effects of your un-American principles of free trade. And, lest we forget, I desire to quote from our old friend, Jack Wiley:

AFTERWARDS.

Oh, yes, the war in Europe will Help to increase our trade,
For folks must now use lots of goods
That right at home are made.
Biz will pick up along the line;
We all know that is true.
But what's agoin' to happen

When
The War Gets
Through?

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Just now there is a bully chance
To start in and produce
The same goods that they make abroad
Which are in gen'ral use.
'Twould be all right at present time;
They'd sell like hot cakes, too.
But what's agoin' to happen

When
The War Gets Through?

When Europe settles down to peace
And starts to making things,
Our profits from the sale of goods
Will suddenly take wings.
Unless we have Protection—see?
We'll all go up the flue.
That's something sure to happen

When
The War Gets Through.

[Laughter.]

And while you are proclaiming to the voters of this country your so-called unparalleled prosperity, why not take them into your confidence for a while and explain something of the causes of the great number of recent business failures throughout the country? And in order to set you right I will insert some tabulations from Bradstreet's record of business failures recently appearing in the American Economist:

BUSINESS FAILURES.

The claim of free traders that the country is now enjoying the greatest prosperity it has ever known is hardly borne out by the increase in business failures noted by Bradstreet's of May 27:

	Week ending—		Weeks corresponding to this week—
	May 25, 1916.	May 18, 1916.	1915	1914	1913	1912
Middle.....	83	85	86	86	90	75
New England.....	38	27	21	28	26	21
Southern.....	88	82	83	61	36	47
Western.....	76	61	72	57	32	45
Northwestern.....	25	23	19	20	12	17
Far Western.....	38	24	40	38	22	26
Total.....	348	302	321	290	218	231

An increase of more than 50 per cent in failures for the week ending May 25, 1916, over the corresponding week in 1913, protection period, tells whether the country is now as prosperous as it was when a protective tariff was in operation.

An increase in commercial fatalities is shown in Bradstreet's record of business failures:

	Week ending—		Weeks corresponding to this week—
	June 22, 1916.	June 15, 1916.	1915	1914	1913	1912
Middle.....	90	81	107	87	68	91
New England.....	26	23	38	26	30	24
Southern.....	71	72	92	65	58	53
Western.....	64	57	78	62	61	34
Northwestern.....	22	21	21	12	10	16
Far western.....	31	31	40	28	31	21
Total.....	304	285	376	280	260	239

The 304 failures of the third week in June, 1916, as against the 239 failures in the corresponding week of June, 1912, full protection period, do not bear out the claim of the free traders that the country is enjoying a period of "unparalleled prosperity."

Bradstreet's of June 3 reports business failures in the United States for the weeks named below as follows:

	Week ending—		Weeks corresponding to this week—
	June 29, 1916.	June 22, 1916.	1915	1914	1913	1912
Middle.....	66	90	81	82	70	44
New England.....	21	26	27	25	18	27
Southern.....	81	71	76	43	46	38
Western.....	65	64	58	46	26	34
Northwestern.....	15	22	18	15	12	5
Far Western.....	30	31	32	33	22	22
Total.....	278	304	292	249	194	170

A wide difference will be noted between the 170 failures for the same week of 1912, protection year, and the 278 failures of the week of 1916, free-trade year.

And, following up your usual custom about election time of being all things to all men, and realizing that your Underwood law was a failure, and that the people were beginning to understand that your so-called prosperity was but temporary and owing entirely to large orders from abroad for armament and munitions of war, and that when the war was ended the business of the country would be in a chaotic condition and our market flooded with cheap goods from foreign countries, and that the revenues collected on imports and by direct tax were insufficient to meet the running expenses of the Government, you conceived the idea of passing through this House a new revenue law which might tend in some degree to appease the righteous indignation of an enraged people. The bill which you introduced and which has just passed reminds me of a story. A number of young college boys who were studying "bugology" concluded that they would play a joke on their old professor, and set about the preparation of a new specimen which they proposed to take to him for classification. So they took the legs of a spider, the antennae of a moth, the wings of a grasshopper, the thorax of a bee, the abdomen of a beetle, and the head of another insect and carefully fastened them together in such manner as to present to all appearances an insect theretofore unclassified and unknown. They took their newly created insect to the professor and laid it on his table. They sheepishly gathered around and asked him to what particular class of insects the newly discovered specimen belonged. The old man was familiar with all kinds of insects, for he had been a professor of entomology for 10, these many years. He put on his glasses, looked it over carefully, and smilingly told the boys that in his opinion it was a "humbug." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, that is what is the matter with this omnibus revenue measure which you have just presented and passed. You have taken a few good ideas from the Republican Party, another from the Progressive Party, another from the Socialist Party, and have added the stinger of your own party, and have presented it to the people for classification, and if I am not much mistaken when they put on their glasses and carefully glance it over they will readily classify it as a Democratic "humbug." [Laughter.]

But your candidate for the Presidency can do one thing, and that one thing to perfection. He can talk and write notes. [Laughter on the Republican side.] With him it is notes, notes, notes, and words, words, words; in fact, he has talked so much and written so much that no one any longer pays much attention to what he writes or what he says. He has strained his vocabulary in labored attempts to coin catchy phrases and thus popularize himself with the reading public; but, to quote, they say:

Words are like leaves; and where they most abound,
Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.

He has to all appearances given more consideration to the question of succeeding himself in office than to strengthening and upholding the fundamental principles upon which this Republic is founded. Instead of adopting a strong and firm national policy, with a determination to uphold the traditions of our forefathers, he has seen fit to follow a zigzag course of least resistance, maintaining only a partial neutrality, which has aroused the enmity of many strong nations and created the friendship of none. We are looked upon as a weak, "wishy-washy" Nation, bent on enriching ourselves at the expense of our principles, and ready to sacrifice our rights on land and sea in order to further enhance the value of American securities, and thus add to the material wealth of our public coffers. Foreign countries, each and every one of them, have come to the conclusion that our destiny is temporarily in the hands of one who is "too proud to fight," and are vying with each other in their efforts to weaken and discredit us in the eyes of all mankind. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Sacramento Bee, one of the greatest independent newspapers in the West, and which was a strong supporter of President Wilson in the past, under the caption "A marvel of inconsistency is Woodrow Wilson," recently contained an editorial, from which I desire to quote brief excerpts:

Whenever Woodrow Wilson has conceived the idea that the sentiment of the American public is toward the punishment of Mexico he has declared himself as "feeling in a fighting mood." Whenever he has thought that sentiment has waxed and waned and that the American people want peace, practically at any price, he has become as dovish as a combination of William Jennings Bryan and Henry Ford.

Woodrow Wilson consistently, if not conscientiously, has trailed after what he believes to be the shifting waves of sentiment of the people of the United States. He is declaring now that we should not intervene in Mexico.

It is all nonsense for any of his partisan defenders to declare that Woodrow Wilson has the courage of his convictions.

He has shown in the first place that he has no convictions, and, in the second place, he has demonstrated that he lacks courage.

Woodrow Wilson is doing what he is doing to-day in direct opposition to what he did yesterday, simply and solely because he believes what he conceived to be the popular thing yesterday has become the unpopular thing to-day.

In another editorial appearing in that same paper complaining of the fact that the National Guardsmen were not well equipped, I find the following terse statement:

These facts furnish the severest condemnation of President Woodrow Wilson and force the public to believe that he is either a demagogue, playing upon the string of popular sentiment for his own benefit, or, if sincere and misled, then so hopelessly incompetent as Chief Executive as to offer a grave menace to the country in time of danger.

I noticed in the Washington Post of yesterday the following headline:

HIGH COST AT ITS APEX.

And carefully reading the article appearing thereunder, I ascertained that our esteemed friend, the genial Secretary of Commerce, who has long been known as the President's "harbinger" of prosperity, has at last discovered the apex to the high cost of living; and I am pleased to note that the apex of the situation has been located on Democratic ground. We have always known that such was the condition, but it remained for the Secretary of Commerce to come forward and admit the facts. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

"The situation reminds me," Mr. Redfield explained, "of a certain mountain range I know of. You climb gradually for a long time until finally you reach the summit. Instead of finding a descent starting immediately, you find a wide tableland, which goes along practically level for a considerable distance. But finally the descent begins."

Now, in many respects the gentleman is correct. The people of this country have been climbing uphill for three and a half years, looking for that apex [laughter on the Republican side], and it will be something of a relief for them to know that they have at last reached the summit; but it will be somewhat of a disappointment to them to learn that they will be compelled to travel for a long time across a wide tableland before their burdens will be lightened and they can hope to find relief. I am of the opinion, however, that the descent will not be reached until after the 4th of March, 1917, and then the weary and footsore travelers can come down from the high altitude of Mr. Redfield's tableland, otherwise known as "the high cost of living," and bask once more in a congenial clime of Republican plenty and prosperity. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

It is particularly interesting to some of us who have been interested for years in labor legislation and who are in a position to know something of the attitude of the President on certain labor questions which have heretofore been taken up with him personally by different labor organizations to note the marked interest he is taking at this particular time in the general welfare of the laboring classes. [Laughter.] He is particularly solicitous about the child-labor law. At least he has attempted through the press to convey that impression, and were it not for the fact that he once wrote a book entitled "Constitutional Government of the United States" we might be inclined to take some stock in his sincerity; but on pages 178 and 179 of that work he is squarely on record as being opposed to the Federal regulation of child labor, and for the benefit of those of your number who are interested in that question I will quote his exact words:

Its power is "to regulate commerce between the States," and the attempts now made during every session of Congress to carry the implication of that power beyond the utmost boundaries of reasonable and honest inference show that the only limits likely to be observed by politicians are those set by the good sense and conservative temper of the country.

The proposed Federal legislation with regard to the regulation of child labor affords a striking example. If the power to regulate commerce between the States can be stretched to include the regulation of labor in the mills and factories, it can be made to embrace every particular of industrial organization and action of the country. The only limitations Congress would observe should the Supreme Court assent to such obviously absurd extravagances of interpretation would be the limitations of opinion and of circumstances.

Now, gentlemen, you will notice that he states in words the meaning of which can not be misunderstood that child labor is not a proper subject for Federal legislation. It is a pretty plain statement of his position, is it not? Perhaps some of you who are close in his confidence can tell us why he has changed his mind at this late date and apparently departed from the traditional doctrine of his party. Perhaps some of you can tell us whether or not he is also ready to change his mind with reference to the woman-suffrage question. From all accounts he is about ready to turn a complete somersault on that question. I wonder why. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The Washington Post of this morning's issue said that two of the woman suffragists who visited the President yesterday expressed themselves as "encouraged," while another said she felt "hazy." [Laughter.] Now, gentlemen, you will try your best to put that question off until after election, but, seriously speaking, I will say to you that you might as well "face the music" and quit your dodging, for they now hold in their hands—

A weapon that comes down as still
As snowflakes fall upon the sod;
But executes a freeman's will,
As lightning does the will of God;
And from its force, nor door nor locks
Can shield you; 'tis the ballot box.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Your candidate for the Presidency puts his actions into words, but our candidate for the Presidency puts his words into action, and when the ballot boxes are opened on the 7th day of November of this year and the votes are counted and recorded it will be found that the American people, having at last tired of hesitation and indecision, have arisen to the occasion in a manner becoming a great people and have selected for the Presidency a man with a head, a heart, and a backbone—the Hon. Charles E. Hughes, of New York.

Forever float that standard sheet!
Where breathes the foe but falls before us,
With freedom's soil beneath our feet,
And freedom's banner streaming o'er us?

[Applause on the Republican side.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. Sisson. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Dixon). The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that on Saturday next he may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. That is subject to all other previous orders. I doubt if there will be time.

Mr. Sisson. I have no desire to displace anybody else.

Mr. MANN. We commence a special order at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Sisson. My understanding is that there are two orders, but that all the time will not be taken up before 3 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. There may be time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, In the campaign of 1908 the Republicans promised a revision of the tariff. They were successful in electing the President and a majority in both branches of Congress. After the inauguration of President Taft, Congress met in special session and took up for consideration in the House what was known as the Payne bill. The House was permitted, under a special rule adopted by the majority, to vote upon five items out of four thousand in the bill, thus preventing a proper discussion or an opportunity to amend the bill. It went to the Senate, where a large number of amendments were made to the bill, and in nearly all cases increasing the rates of duty over those in the House bill. It was discussed and denounced vigorously in the Senate by the progressive Republicans, who believed the duties were too high and did not carry out the promise made by their party in the campaign of 1908. The bill was finally enacted into law, and bears the name of the Payne-Aldrich bill. There came a revolt throughout the entire country at the action of the Republican House and Senate against this bill. Mr. Taft, then President, apologized for many of the rates in it. It was claimed by the progressive Republicans that this act had been written in the interest of the beneficiaries of a high protective tariff.

In 1910 a Democratic House was elected, which passed several bills revising single schedules, but none of them ever became a law, President Taft vetoing those which were presented to him for his signature. In 1912 the Democrats gained the Presidency, the House and Senate promising to revise the tariff and to take out of it the special privilege. They passed a tariff law based upon revenue demand and not upon protective principles which guarantee to the manufacturer an enormous benefit and the right to lay tribute upon the consumers of this country. The Democrats believe the day of special privilege for industries is over and American manufacturers do not need this high protection. We have raw material in abundance; we have the highest inventive genius in the world, vigorous and skilled workmen, who are able to produce all manufactures in competition with all the world. We have come to a place in the commerce of the world where we are no longer limited to the home market, but sell our manufactured goods all around the globe. The day of high tariff and special privilege in this country is over. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The day of revenue tariffs will always be with us, because we must raise a certain amount of our revenue through the customhouse.

We believe in millions for necessary revenue, but not one dollar for special tribute. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Under the Democratic tariff bill the duties were reduced on woolen goods from 99 per cent to 35 per cent; window glass, from 46 per cent to 28 per cent; woolen clothing, from 79 per cent to 35 per cent; house furniture, from 35 per cent to 25 per cent; files, from 60 per cent to 25 per cent; pocketknives, from 78 per cent to 40 per cent; woolen blankets, from 73 per cent to 25 per cent; cotton underwear, from 60 per cent to 25 per cent; stockings, from 75 per cent to 50 per cent; shirts, from 64 per cent to 25 per cent; ready-made clothing, from 50 per cent to 30 per cent; chains, from 46 per cent to 26 per cent; and so on through more than a thousand articles of common everyday use—articles used by all the people and articles that should not be taxed to enrich their producers.

Republican tariff rates averaged on woollens as high as 96 per cent. The Democratic average is 40 per cent.

Woolen blankets that Republicans taxed from 71 to 105 per cent are now taxed at from 25 to 50 per cent. Woolen hats have been reduced from 86 to 35 per cent; flannels, from 86 to 113 per cent to from 25 to 35 per cent. These reductions would have given the people permanent benefits in reduced cost of living but for the European war.

The woolen tariff used to be called the keystone of the arch of protection. The key has fallen and the whole structure has tumbled down.

Democrats have always said that the tariff on farm products was a sham, and was only placed there to try to fool the farmers. Why, they used to say that a Democrat could not look a sheep in the face. Now, under the Underwood tariff the sheep go to the roadside to greet them as their friend when passing. Do you complain of free wool? No; you do not even mention it, much less talk about it.

Mr. DENISON. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, for a question.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask my colleague if he supported the tariff on dyestuffs provided in the recent bill for revenue or protection?

Mr. FOSTER. I will say that I did support the revenue bill with the tariff on dyes; but it is entirely different from what the protectionists contend for. That bill provides that the duty shall be gradually reduced after a definite time, and, if your party had written it, it would have provided that the rates should be higher and continue indefinitely. That is the difference between your way and ours in writing a tariff bill. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that his party has been in favor of a tariff commission, and yet he voted against the tariff commission in this bill, and he voted against the provision in that bill repealing the special stamp tax.

Mr. COX. And did not the gentleman vote against the duty on dyes?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman voted against the duty on dyes and for higher duties, and against the laying of an extra tax for preparedness on ammunition manufactures. The gentleman voted against laying an extra tax on the large incomes of the people of this country, and when the distinguished gentleman heard the speech of his colleague from Iowa [Mr. Goop], it had no effect upon him, but he followed the standpatters and voted against the progressive measure taking taxes off the backs of the poor and placing them on those who were more able to bear them.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not yield further.

The door opened to special privilege for manufactures has been closed and the door of an equal chance for the millions has been opened and it will never be closed.

The convention at which Justice Hughes was nominated in Chicago adopted a platform. What is there in it? Is there any criticism of Democratic measures? Nothing but the tariff. Special privilege again seeking to get back into power. Do they criticize the banking act, Federal Trade Commission, rural credits, or any other bill of importance? No; they dare not do so. The patriotic Members on that side voted for them.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COX. In the platform adopted by the Republican Party at Chicago, did they not specifically declare for a tariff commission?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes; they declared for a tariff commission.

Mr. COX. And on the 10th day of July was there not a bill presented on the floor of the House containing a tariff commission?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. COX. And did not 139 Republicans vote against it?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember the number, but all but 40 voted against it.

Mr. COX. Including the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON]?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think my good friend voted that way.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain to the House why the majority did not give us a chance to vote on these different issues separately instead of putting them altogether in one bill, so that we would either have to vote for or against the whole conglomerate mass?

Mr. FOSTER. We gave you a bill that took the burdens off the backs of the producers of this country. We gave you items in the bill which proposed to pay for preparedness by taxing the large incomes instead of upon the poor man's labor, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goop], whom I will quote again, said that when he wanted to raise money he would not go to the poorhouse but would go to the financial institutions that had it, and so we gave you an opportunity to do this in this bill, and yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] complains because we did not pick out the things the he might have voted for and give him an opportunity to vote upon them. Revenue bills are not passed through this House in that way, and I am surprised that my good friend from Illinois should think or imagine for one moment that a tariff bill is made up by taking each separate item and permitting each Member to vote upon those things that he thinks ought to pass and letting those things go that he thinks ought not to pass. There was ample opportunity given to amend the bill and to strike out any item in it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Is it not true that there were separate bills introduced for the dyestuff proposition and the tariff-commission proposition by Members of the House?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman be good enough to explain to the House why the majority did not allow a chance to vote on these bills separately?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell you why, because the bill was so good in its entirety that we did not believe that there was any Progressive Republican on that side who would be able to stand before his people and tell them that he had voted against it. This was a righteous bill.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Is it not a fact that the Republican side of the House engaged in the game of creating all of the indebtedness they could and not having the nerve and backbone to vote to take care of that indebtedness?

Mr. FOSTER. That is partly true. Some of them voted for it; most against it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, my colleague surely will not make that statement.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that?

Mr. MANN. That there is anyone on this side who has voted for preparedness who has not been willing to vote to pay for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I would make exceptions. I will not put all of them on the blacklist. No; of course not.

Mr. KELLEY. And I want to say to the gentleman that I voted for about $200,000,000 less, and I think most of the people on the Republican side voted for about $200,000,000 less than the entire budget will show.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken some trouble to look up some of the bills that Members on that side have introduced, by which they expected to take money out of the Treasury which would go largely into their own districts, and I find that it runs all the way from $15,000 a Member to over $30,000,000 a Member, and I want to say that the total amount which these men wanted to take out of the Treasury amounts to over $250,000,000. Of course I do not mean to say every Member introduced some of these bills. Some did not introduce any.

Mr. KELLEY. How much would the appropriations have amounted to if all had passed that were introduced on the Democratic side?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know; I could not give the gentleman those figures; but I do know that on the Republican side of the House if men who have tried to take money out of the Treasury, who introduced bills for their own districts, had been able to get them passed, it would have amounted to over $250,000,000, and I dare say there is not a Member on that side of the House who will rise in his place now and say that he introduced a bill for buncombe, who will not say that he really wanted to get the money out of the Treasury that he might take it home to show to his people what he had to his credit. If there is one, I pause for a reply.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The question is not how much the Republican Party has introduced—

Mr. FOSTER. Did the gentleman introduce any bill that he wants to apologize for?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not apologizing. I am making an assertion.

Mr. FOSTER. But I am not yielding for that purpose. If the gentleman wants to apologize for anything, all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no occasion to apologize for any of my actions.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not yielded to the gentleman except to apologize.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman has nothing for which to apologize.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman is ready to do so, I will allow him to apologize to the House now for introducing bills to take money out of the Treasury that he might take it home to show to his people.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows full well that I have no occasion to apologize.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not yielding for that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman knows that I have no reason to apologize.

Mr. FOSTER. I am yielding to the gentleman only to apologize, if he desires to do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman knows full well that I have no occasion to apologize.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois refuses to yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I did not for a speech.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FOSTER. I yielded to the gentleman for the purpose of apologizing. When the gentleman is through with his apology I will proceed. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, that is the only apology I will make.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, in Chicago, when the convention met, they did not criticize the banking act; they dared not do it. They did not criticize the Federal Trade Commission. They did not criticize the rural-credits bill, because all but 12 of their men voted for it; nor did they criticize any other bill of any importance except the tariff law.

Mr. GLASS. May I interrupt my colleague for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman is mistaken. They did criticize the rural-credits bill, and then every one of them, except 12, on that side voted for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I said the Chicago platform did not criticize it. They did mention it, because they have gone back so far and there were so many things that they were unable to criticize in this administration that they finally said they were for a real rural-credits bill, and on that side of the House they interpreted it to mean that our bill was a real rural-credits bill, because they came back and nearly all voted for it.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois does not expect a Republican, when a roll is called, to do what he said in Chicago at the convention?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLEY. We are not like you folks; we do keep our pledges.

Mr. FOSTER. You have not done it in the past.

REDUCED REVENUES.

It was expected by the Democratic Party, with the Underwood bill, with the reduced rates, it would produce less revenue, and so announced at the time. Under the law passed October 3, 1913, it was estimated to produce $270,000,000.

There was actually produced from customs the first year $292,320,014, or a sum $22,320,014 in excess of the estimates. It should be remembered also that the estimate of $270,000,000 took into account the estimated revenues for three months under the old law and nine months under the new. It was intended and openly stated that the Underwood tariff law, in removing the duties entirely from certain necessities and reducing them upon others, would produce less revenue at the customhouse.

In 1913 the Payne law produced $318,891,335, and the Democratic estimate for 1914, the first year of the Underwood law, was $270,000,000, or a difference of $48,891,335. This was the estimated deficit on customs. The Underwood law, however, was a better revenue producer than was expected by its friends. It actually produced $292,320,014, so that the deficit from customs, instead of being $48,891,335, as estimated, was $26,571,321.

A deficit from customs was foreseen, and that deficit was estimated at $48,891,335, which dwindled as the receipts came in to $26,571,321.

The deficit was not only foreseen, but provided for. The loss in revenue from customs was to be made up by a new law creating an income tax and an amendment to the law for corporation taxes. The tax on incomes produced $28,253,534.85, while the tax on corporations produced $43,127,739.89, or a total of $71,381,274, to meet an estimated deficit of $48,891,335 and a real deficit of $26,571,321. The income tax alone provided for the actual deficit and left an excess of nearly $2,000,000 in the Treasury. In other words, the Underwood law was a success.

This is better shown in the bird's-eye tabulation of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Revenue from—	For year ended June 30, 1914.	For year ended June 30, 1915.
Customs.....	$292,320,014	$318,891,335
Corporation and income tax.....	71,381,274	35,005,299
Total.....	363,701,288	353,897,691

The Secretary of the Treasury says:

This makes an amount of revenue raised under the act of October 3, 1913, greater by $9,803,594 than the amount collected the previous year under the preceding revenue measure.

In other words, the Underwood law was a better revenue producer than the Payne law, and no sophistry can hide or change this truth.

The war in Europe and the question of preparedness now call for increased revenue. The standpat answer to this is "Re-enact the Payne law and the revenue will be sufficient." In other words the only panacea for our ills is a protective tariff.

In the light of history this assertion is not worthy of those who assert it. In other words, no tariff ever passed has been sufficient to meet the demands of ordinary expenditure, and the reenactment of the Payne law, while it might add to the profits of certain manufacturers, would not make up the deficiencies of our revenue under the pressure of the European war and national preparedness.

It must be remembered that the tariff has always been supplemented by an internal-revenue law, and that the latter law was not changed by the Democrats until October, 1914, when the emergency revenue law was enacted. Following is the revenue collected from both these laws, as given in the Statistical Abstract of the United States, for each year from 1900 to 1915:

	Receipts from—
	Internal revenue.	Customs or tariff.	Average ad valorem.

Now, when it is considered that the total ordinary Government disbursements for 1913, the year of the Payne customs law were $748,703,574, it becomes evident that the Payne law did not pay 50 per cent of the ordinary disbursements of that year, a normal year, and that its reenactment would not meet 50 per cent of the demands of any normal year, much more the demands of war and preparedness.

The actual disbursements for 1914 were $762,942,758. A reenacted Payne law would have paid 41 per cent of this, and, if war demands and preparedness be considered, less than 25 per cent. In this way the arguments of the standpatter are shown to be absurd.

The Republican argument is based upon an increase of imports under the Underwood law over the Payne law amounting to $357,000,000 and that the Payne rates applied to the increase would supply all the necessary taxes growing out of war and preparedness.

Admitting that this increase is correctly stated and that it represents an increased quantity of dutiable merchandise corresponding to the increased valuation, the argument that the Payne rates, whose equivalent ad valorem was about 41 per cent, applied to these figures would supply the necessary taxes falls to the ground.

But these figures do not show an increased quantity valuation but merely an increased price valuation. The Payne tariff rests almost entirely upon fixed rates per pound, per yard, per ton, or some other quantitative unit which has no relation to value. The protectionists have always argued against flat ad valorem rates and have based their rates to the largest extent on quantitative units. Having done this, we can not permit them now to select a flat ad valorem rate and apply it to an increase of values to the extent of $357,000,000. It has been shown that of this so-called increase $248,000,000 of it grows out of increases of value entirely, the quantities remaining relatively the same. It has also been shown that $134,000,000 of increased imports were on the free list under both laws. Adding them together they more than absorb the $357,000,000 without increasing the revenue even when jacked up by the Payne law.

What are our ordinary disbursements? They include our expenses for the maintenance of two Houses of Congress; the Library of Congress; the Botanic Garden; the Executive office; the Civil Service Commission; the Department of State, the consuls, and foreign ministers; the Treasury Department, covering the mints, the customs service, the internal-revenue department, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Public Health Service, Life-Saving Service, public buildings, interest on public debt; the War Department; the Navy Department; the Interior Department, covering the General Land Office, the Indian Office, the Pension Office, the Patent Office, agricultural colleges, Geological Survey; the Department of Labor; the Department of Commerce; the Judicial Department, and a large number of independent bureaus and offices. While the Post Office Department is a part of the machinery of Government, it is supposed to pay for itself, and the disbursements which follow are for the ordinary departments of Government, exclusive of the general post office.

Following are the actual disbursements of these departments for several years up to the beginning of the European war in August, 1914:

1905.....	$593,671,513
1906.....	595,171,125
1907.....	694,956,141
1908.....	733,988,226
1909.....	798,740,637
1910.....	726,666,720
1911.....	726,424,850
1912.....	718,529,662
1913.....	748,703,574
1914.....	762,042,758

The Underwood tariff law was passed to meet ordinary expenditures based on past experience, and, as has been shown, met every expectation of its projectors. It was not passed to meet the demands of war, especially such a war as has been in progress in Europe for the last two years, nor for the demands of the trouble in Mexico. The Underwood tariff did its service admirably, but it could not be expected to produce revenues from imports which the war kept away from our ports. Every nation on earth has learned that during a period of general war no system of tariff legislation is reliable as a revenue producer. The standpatters of the United States are the only people that learn nothing from their defeats at home nor from the common experience of mankind. They eat tariff, drink tariff, think tariff, and prescribe tariff for all political ailments, just as the old-time physicians did with calomel and jalap. The tariff hydrophobia is an incurable illness, dangerous alike to the patient and the people.

TARIFF DUTIES INSUFFICIENT.

Some Republicans have freed themselves from the disease, and they are to be commended. The Member from Iowa [Mr. Goon] had the courage to say on the floor during the present month these words:

A comparison of the appropriation bills for the Army, Navy, and fortifications of this year (1916) with the years 1909-1912 (the years of the Payne law), inclusive, shows that we would have paid during each of these years, if we had engaged in preparedness then instead of now, at least $420,000,000 a year in excess of the amount actually appropriated for such purpose.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. KELLEY. I should like to inquire of the gentleman whether or not, leaving out increases for the Army and Navy and fortifications, it is not true that the appropriations for this Congress will be $200,000,000 more than any other Congress in the history of the country except the last one?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what the amount is, but I will tell the gentleman this: The Government is growing and its activities are increasing, requiring a larger expenditure each year.

Mr. KELLEY. I thought perhaps the gentleman had the figures.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will take the record of the Congress he will find we passed a law providing agricultural extension or vocational education. We have passed a law which provides for good roads, which take considerable money out of the Treasury. We have also passed other laws which are in the interest of the people and which have taken money. I do not know what it all amounts to; the gentleman may be right. But many on that side voted for most of these bills.

Mr. FERRIS. However much we may have appropriated, practically every one of those bills passed by unanimous consent. Is not that true?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes; at least with Republican votes.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no; that is not true. There is the shipping bill with $50,000,000 to start with.

Mr. FERRIS. The appropriation bills were passed by unanimous consent, practically.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably not unanimous consent as to all, but I will say this to the gentleman, that all of them passed with Republican votes.

Mr. FERRIS. Is it not also true in the preparedness program in each and every instance that side moved to recommit with instructions to report an increase?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not think the $50,000,000 flood-control bill passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. It passed by votes on both sides of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. There was not a roll call on them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because that side would not give a roll call.

Mr. FERRIS. One-fifth of the Members could get it.

Mr. FOSTER. I will be glad to yield later if I have time. But the gentleman from Iowa says further:

Where would we have obtained the money to pay for the increased cost of preparedness? Certainly we would not have increased the tariff duties. The defeat of the Republican House in 1910 was so universally charged to excessive duties in the Payne law that in 1912 in our Republican platform we said "Some of the existing import duties are too high and should be reduced," but with the provisions of the Payne law in force to-day it is estimated that we could not hope to collect under it more than $100,000,000 a year in excess of the annual collections under it when it was in force.

The absurdity of prescribing the Payne law for a cure of extraordinary and emergency needs has been shown to be absurd from a number of viewpoints and ought to be dismissed from all further consideration.

THE INCOME TAX.

The Republican Party in 1909, in passing the Payne law, found that it would not produce sufficient revenue and added to it a law taxing corporations. The Democratic Party, in passing the Underwood law with its numerous reductions, found themselves confronted with the same loss of revenue but to a greater degree. The Democrats amended the corporation tax to make it yield more revenue and then passed the income tax. Taxation is a serious study, and no matter how it is applied produces objectors.

The people objected to paying what they considered to be more than their fair share of taxes as expressed in a tariff law on articles of everyday consumption. The Democrats removed or reduced the taxes on consumption and transferred them to individual incomes. And why not? Students of taxation everywhere declare it to be the most equitable tax that can be conceived. I agree with these students, and am proud of my vote for the income tax. It exempts all incomes of $3,000 and less a year, and taxes all incomes of more than $3,000 1 per cent. Then as the income increases this 1 per cent is increased until both incomes and rates have reached a maximum. Those who are so unfortunate as not to have an income of $3,000 a year or less are deprived of the privilege of paying this particular kind of tax. Some objection is made to the tax because only a few pay it. It is charged that less than one-half of 1 per cent of the population pay the tax. This is erroneous.

Over 2,500,000 stockholders in the 190,000 corporations reporting pay the tax besides 357,000 individuals who make returns, or nearly 3,000,000 people. Inasmuch as the family is practically the unit in this law, these figures should be multiplied by five—15,000,000 people are now taxed by an equitable tax whose possessions for many years have escaped taxation.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. May I interrupt my colleague just there?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. If my colleague will yield, I desire to call his attention in this connection to the fact that candidate Hughes, when governor of New York, on January 5, 1910, delivered a special message to the New York Legislature advising against the ratification of the income-tax amendment to the Constitution, and prevented its ratification for that entire session, and that the amendment was not ratified by the New York Legislature until after the expiration of Mr. Hughes's term of office and the election of a Democratic legislature.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think that is not denied by anyone.

During the year 1914 the tax yielded $71,381,274.74, of which the individual income tax yielded but $28,253,534.85. It was evidence that many people were dodging the payments of this tax as well as the internal-revenue tax. The Secretary of the Treasury, with his usual energy, set about to round-up the tax dodgers and nontaxpayers with most pleasing success.

For the year ending June 30, 1915, the total receipts from the personal-income tax were $41,046,162, an increase of $12,792,628.24, or a total for both of about $85,000,000. The great apparent increase in the personal-income tax was due more to the fact that the returns for 1915 were for 12 months, while those of 1914 were for 10 months. The decrease in the corporation tax is ascribed to the European war and to the disturbances in Mexico. The Secretary of the Treasury still pursued his investigations of inaccurate returns and palpable evasions of the law, and on June 30, 1916, reported a total for both taxes of $124,867,430, or an increase of nearly $40,000,000. In the nature of things this income tax will increase rather than decrease, but the returns of 1915 and 1916 show that the framers of the

Underwood law in reducing the tariff wall made ample provision for all deficits growing out of the reduced revenues by the enactment of the present income-tax law. All these calculations, however, are based on years of normal expenditure, and the actual workings of the law justify and support the calculation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time does my colleague wish?

Mr. FOSTER. I could get along with 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my distinguished colleague may have 20 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended for 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague very kindly.

EXTRAORDINARY DEMANDS.

The European war introduced new phases of thought demanding extraordinary action. Henry E. Dunn, president of Bradstreet's Commercial Agency, in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury on November 13, 1915, said:

Our own position as that of the leading neutral country was, of course, bound up in the general debauch. All our stock and cotton and most of our other exchanges, excepting grain markets, promptly closed. Securities of whatever kind were practically unsalable, fear of hostile action swept the sea of our ships, and a blockade of our export and import commerce resulted until British sea power was demonstrated. Our domestic financial position, fortified by the recent adoption of a real national banking system (the Federal reserve law), was strengthened by the courageous and patriotic action of our bankers working in harmony with the Federal authorities, and the arrangement for the settlement of the great balance we owed abroad was a triumph of skill and of cooperation between our public men and our business interests.

The blockade made serious inroads on our dutiable as well as other imports, thus curtailing the revenue derived from customs. In October, 1914, Congress passed an emergency internal-revenue act, which in the first six months of its existence yielded approximately $40,000,000, and about $80,000,000 for the year 1915.

On the heels of the European war came the disturbance in Mexico and the country-wide demand for preparedness. Provision was made by a Democratic Congress for a greater Army and Navy, for a prudent and effectual development of our military power in every line, and for the protection of the Mexican border. All these things called for an extraordinary outlay of money. The appropriations for these things exceeded the appropriation for normal years by from $300,000,000 to $450,000,000.

The passage of the revenue bill this month provides for all these demands, and taken with other laws already passed assure us that the revenues of the Government, ordinary and extraordinary, are on a sound, healthful, and most satisfactory basis.

On account of the extraordinary expenditures for preparedness, it became necessary to raise additional revenue, and, as said by Mr. Good, of Iowa, if the same proportion of expenditures had been made under Republican administration when they were in power, the revenue tariff would have been $1,600,000 short; if now, the revenue of the tariff would not afford sufficient money to pay these additional expenses, so the rates on incomes have been raised and an inheritance tax has been levied. The tax upon munitions of war certainly no one ought to complain of, when we realize the enormous profits that have been made by these manufacturers in the last few years.

Mr. Good, of Iowa, said on this subject:

I have here the Wall Street Journal for February 28 and 29, 1916, the most conservative financial paper in the world. On February 29 it gives a list of 26 munition manufacturers in the United States, and those concerns state their war orders for 1916 will aggregate $2,000,000,000, and these concerns state that their profits on their war orders for 1916 will aggregate $1,000,000,000. And yet we are against a little tax on that kind of concerns. Where will we raise it? Oh, some one says under his breath, we will put a tax on tea and on coffee. If you tax the breakfast table of the American laboring man to pay the burden of preparedness, there will not be enough Members on this side to ask for a quorum.

He further said:

That same article on February 28 gives a statement of the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co. for 1914-15. In 1914 the profits of the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., according to their own statement, was $5,000,000. In 1915 their profits were $57,000,000. And yet we are unwilling to lay a little tax on this kind of an institution. We have built up in the North, in the East, and in the South a very magnificent school system of the United States, and how did we do it? By putting a tax on consumption? No; we put a tax on property. That is the only way we can pay for preparedness. And, Mr. Chairman, when you analyze this bill, why did not we strike out provision after provision as it was read?

THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

A tariff commission has been provided which is expected to study the tariff question and endeavor to secure unbiased information that would be nonpartisan and accurate. Thirty-nine Republicans and 1 Independent voted for this bill, showing again that the bills which the Democratic Congress has proposed meet with the approval of a large number of Progressives upon the other side of the House.

OUR UNEXAMPLED PROSPERITY.

Henry G. Dunn, in November of last year, said:

Industry has gained steadily through the year, an especially marked surge forward being noted as the fall advanced, resulting in many new monthly records of production and a whipping into line of laggard trades, seeming to guarantee the setting up of new records in a year beginning in hardship and gloom. Of late domestic demand, which has seemed to lag behind export trade has expanded; bank clearings, railway traffic, iron production, and wheat exports have all set up new guideposts, unfilled orders have banked up in our barometric industry, car shortages are already present, rail and ship terminals are congested with freight shipments, failure and liabilities are decreasing, commodity prices are at the highest level ever known, with a minimum of complaint as to high cost of living, optimism is well-nigh universal, and what was apparently at its inception a prospect of threatening import to the world's progress has become a stimulant such as never before witnessed to the country's productive energies.

What was thus so graphically outlined by one of the country's greatest commercial agencies in November, 1915, has gone on with increasing force through all the year 1916, until it can be truthfully said that the country is in the midst of an unexampled prosperity, cheering to all American hearts, and only dampened by the groans of the pessimists, who are glad only when all others are in pain. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Four years of Democratic administration have made the people glad, the best index possible of a party's wisdom, as well as the best pointer to its future continuation in power.

OUR EXPORT TRADE.

The monthly summary of Foreign commerce of the United States for March, 1916, shows our export trade for nine months ending March, 1914, 1915, and 1916, as follows:

1914	$1,859,116,144
1915	1,853,659,736

or a grand gain in 1916 of more than a billion dollars over the corresponding period in 1915.

Our farmers have profited largely in this tremendous gain. Comparison of exports of farmers' products for nine months ending March, 1916, with a like period in 1915 and 1914:

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

For 50 years, under Republican rule, the country existed under a banking and currency law of Republican origin which gave us an absolutely inelastic currency, first, and, second, a fictitious bank reserve. Under the old law all the revenues throughout the country were deposited in the great cities, where it was used for stock speculation.

The Hon. Carter Glass calls these the Siamese twins of disorder, and charged the Republican Party with failure to remedy the evils.

Five times between the years 1870 and 1912 the country has passed through financial panics resulting in nation-wide business catastrophes. Each of these panics came when we were in apparent business prosperity, and each of them was due—in part, if not altogether—to our defective banking and currency system. The Republicans knew this, acknowledged it, but were afraid to remedy it; at least, though long in power, they did not remedy it. The Democrats were not afraid to remedy the evil, and at once passed the Federal-reserve law, the most important piece of legislation of the last 50 years. It sounded the death knell of the money trust, and in all human probability the death knell of financial panics. It has been in operation nearly three years and has given general satisfaction.

GOOD-ROADS LAW.

Constructive legislation of the highest nature is shown by the passage of the Democratic highway bill. It will conduce to the establishment of a more effective highway machinery in each State, strongly influence the development of good roads, stimulate large production and better marketing, promote a fuller and more attractive rural life, add greatly to the convenience and economic welfare of our people, and strengthen our national foundations. Such are the results which those best qualified to speak ascribe to this law, and with which opinion I am in strict accord.

The law appropriates $75,000,000, in five annual payments, as follows:

First year.....	$5,000,000
Second year.....	10,000,000
Third year.....	15,000,000
Fourth year.....	20,000,000
Fifth year.....	25,000,000

The States are expected to make available an equal amount, or its equivalent, so that the highway bill in its totality involves the expenditure of $150,000,000 in five years.

While Republicans are criticizing the Democratic administration for keeping us out of war with Mexico, a war involving the expenditure of treasure and blood uselessly and needlessly, the Democrats have marched calmly forward to the greater questions of better highways, better banking, rural credits, and a better business understanding. The real and lasting interests of the common people have had their first inning in legislation and have won the game. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION ACT OR VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

By a unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress this Democratic measure encouraging agriculture in a practical way by appropriations became a law.

This very important law grants an appropriation the first year of $10,000 to every State in the Union, which sum is to be increased year by year for a definite period until the Government will contribute annually about $4,000,000 for the support of this important work. It is proposed to carry directly to the farm all the scientific discoveries and best practical developments of the Department of Agriculture and the colleges. Agriculture adds about ten billions a year of new wealth to our Nation, and the producers of such an enormous amount of wealth deserve the fostering care of the Nation. This care can be best expressed by methods prescribed in this new law. It is confidently believed that this legislation will at no distant day double the agricultural productivity of the United States, while increasing the self-respect, the thoughtfulness and the power of the farmers. It means not only getting the most out of the soil without looting it but putting into our farmers and their children the best of all the world's wisdom, vigor, and initiative.

THE TRADE COMMISSION BILL.

This law is a part of the Democratic program for the regulations of trusts. In the House 41 Republicans and 15 Progressives voted for the bill, leaving 98 Republican standpatters to vote against it. The wisdom of the bill is best attested by the number of the opposition who supported it and stands out as a signal triumph for those who have always maintained that the best examples of constructive legislation as shown historically are those originated, vouched for, and passed by the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The bill carries out the principle enunciated by President Wilson: "A square deal for business, the eradication of the unsquare from business, and a real square deal for all the people." Business has handicapped itself by a lot of bad practices and programs; it has tied itself hand and foot by "unfair methods," if not by fraudulent procedure. This bill removes all the handicaps, bonds, and chains from a sound business program, and starts business ahead untrammelled, unshackled, and without a handicap. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It begins the go-ahead era of sound business life and promises much for our commerce and industry. This law is a good running mate for that other Democratic masterpiece—the Federal reserve act—and the two running either tandem or side by side will pull all our business into life, force, and profitable results. They will revolutionize business in every State and enable the total of American business to grasp opportunity by its foretop and create a larger business of profit in the greater sphere of the world. With all shackles cut out American business now has a chance to show itself the king bee in the world's mammoth business hive. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Another Democratic measure in the antitrust program was the Rayburn bill, now on the calendar, extending the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the issuance of railway securities.

The third measure of the program was the Clayton Antitrust Act, the whole making a symposium of legislation controlling and regulating the trust problem. The Clayton bill defines the Sherman law more clearly; strikes at the evils of interlocking directorates in corporations; prohibits price discrimination and destructive price cutting. It also settled a controversy over the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes that had been a bone of contention for many long years. It gave to labor its magna charta.

THE RURAL-CREDITS LAW.

For a number of years the question of legislation providing for loans upon farm credits has been agitated throughout the country, but it was left for a Democratic administration to whip these ideas into practical form and to give the country a law expressing the result. In European countries such laws have been in force for many years, and Government credit has been extended to worthy farmers with the most satisfactory results. The American law is the pioneer in the country and is expected to go far toward the fullest development of our land and its resources.

THE SHIPPING BILL.

The shipping bill provided for Government ownership of ships, which will enable the products of the farms, factories, and mines to be shipped to all parts of the world at a less freight rate than now charged. Since I have been in Congress I have seen the attempt made to pass through this House a subsidy to those shipowners. The shipping bill passed the House with the aid of the votes of the Republicans who were honestly trying to serve their constituents by providing a means for carrying their products to the markets of the world. Did those who opposed this bill advance their claim for subsidies? Neither have they offered any other solution of this problem. We believe if this bill becomes a law that it will relieve this situation and that our people will have ships to transport their goods to foreign lands at less freight rates than they are now compelled to pay.

CHILD-LABOR LAW.

This Democratic House has passed the child-labor law, which protects the children of this country from being placed in factories and sweatshops at an age when they ought to be in school. This law will save the children and make them better men and women when they are grown. I can recall the investigation of the Lawrence, Mass., strike, when it was shown that these mill owners worked these little children in the factories at starvation wages, their pale faces and frail bodies showing every evidence of such treatment. This law will put an end to such conditions.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW.

Many States now have a workmen's compensation law, giving fair compensation to those who are injured during their employment. This House has passed an adequate compensation act insuring the man who toils, if he becomes injured, that he will be properly cared for, or if he lose his life those dependent upon him will not be turned out upon the charity of the world. We are fast approaching a time in this country, and this Democratic administration has done much to hasten the day, when we think more of those who toil and create the wealth of the country, and not so much in trying to pass laws for the special benefit of those who may grow rich at the expense of the consumers of the country.

The Democratic Party does not oppose business, but wants to encourage it, and to build up the trade and commerce of our country throughout the world, and a legitimate business of any kind or character need not fear legislation which has been passed in the last three and one-half years; but those who seek special laws that they may lay tribute upon the toilers and producers of this country will not have a place in the Democratic program.

Our Republican friends have criticized the administration on account of the Mexican situation. They have seen fit to charge incompetency and lack of patriotism for our own country and its people. Would they have marched the Army of our country into that Republic, uselessly sacrificing our boys upon the altar of war? They had the opportunity, and yet they did not raise their voices in demanding that we should go to war during the administration of Mr. Taft, who at that time wisely kept us out of war. The President will not be changed in his determination to solve this problem in a peaceful way if possible by the barkings and howlings of these jingoes [applause on the Democratic side], who would not go to war themselves but who would be willing to sacrifice the young men of our country for their own selfish interest. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To-day we are at peace with all the world, and our people are enjoying the greatest era of prosperity known in its history. Wages are higher than they have ever been; the products of the farm, the mine, and factory are in demand and at good prices. Shall we disturb this prosperous condition of our country by placing again in power those who would enact laws for special privilege that they may reap from the honest toil of the millions of our people that to which they are not entitled. The laws we have passed give to every citizen an equal opportunity and an equal right for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and the right to enjoy the fruit of his own labor without paying tribute to anyone. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I can not believe the American people are again willing to put the Government in the hands of standpatters and reactionaries. But I believe the intelligence and patriotism of the American people is such that they will continue in power an administration and Congress, to see that these beneficial laws are strengthened if necessary and honestly enforced in the interest of all the people.

The Democratic Congresses from March 4, 1913, to the present hour have been Congresses of work—being in almost continual session during that period. Some of the work of these Congresses has been analyzed in these remarks, but by no means all of it, and time forbids that I should go further into details.

The President has had the support of Congress in his wise and patriotic efforts to serve the whole people of the country. During a period filled with the gravest questions of both national and international importance, he has stood four square to all the winds of criticism and reproach that have been heaped upon him. He has stood for the country's power and the country's peaceful relations with all the world. He has kept us at peace with all the world, enabling us to create and sustain a prosperity unexampled and heretofore unapproached. Peace and prosperity—twin sisters born of wisdom and patriotism—are now the country's glory, forming the greatest asset any President can give the people, and a glorious crown to his work. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Saturday, at a time when it will not interfere with preferential matters, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the probabilities are that all that time will be taken up. At 3 o'clock the House takes up the presentation from North Carolina of the statue of ex-Senator Vance.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague would hardly get in Saturday, but I have no objection if it is understood that it does not interfere with the other orders.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. On what day will we probably be in session next after Saturday?

Mr. MANN. Tuesday or Wednesday, probably, but I can not tell for certain. Probably not on Monday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Ask unanimous consent for the day following.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman that he let it go for the present.

The SPEAKER. Two hours and a half of speeches are provided for Saturday after the reading of the Journal, and so forth, and there are only three hours between 12 o'clock and 3. So it would probably cut the gentleman off right in the middle of his speech.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I amend my request, Mr. Speaker, and make it the first day when in session following Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that on the first day after Saturday the House is in session, after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the business on the Speaker's table, not to interfere with conference reports, he shall be permitted to proceed not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I am going to ask my colleague to withdraw his request for the present until we know when we shall meet. We expect to have some ceremonies next week in connection with the unveiling of the statuary in the pediment here on the House wing of the Capitol; and I am not sure whether it will be while the House will be nominally in session or previous to the meeting of the House. Thursday or Saturday the gentleman can get his request, when that is known. There will not be any difficulty.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. MANN. There will be no difficulty, in fact, about getting in.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Thank you.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a short article on the establishment of a department of aviation, with a statement of my colleague, Mr. LIEB, on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the creation of a department of aviation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, July 27, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on reexamination of Chicago River, Ill. (H. Doc. No. 1294); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustration.

2. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting item of suggested legislation for incorporation in the general deficiency bill (H. Doc. No. 1295); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, recommending that appropriation for increasing storage facilities at San Antonio Arsenal, San Antonio, Tex., be made for the fiscal year 1917 instead of for 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1296); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of E. Belle Piatt, widow of Abraham Piatt, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1297); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Assistant Secretary of War, submitting a report of a claim against the United States, which has been adjusted and settled by the Chief of Engineers and approved by the Secretary of War (H. Doc. No. 1298); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Benjamin T. Blakeney and Mae Blakeney Moore, children and sole heirs of Thomas J. Blakeney, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1299); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copy of order of the court dismissing the petition in the case of Margaret C. Lamms et al., heirs of Moses C. Bayles, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1300); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, urging that further consideration be given to the matter of making an appropriation for the removal of the wharf in connection with the quarantine station at Honolulu, Hawaii (H. Doc. No. 1301); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from Maj. Brown, general purchasing officer of the Panama Canal, written by direction of Gen. Goethals, requesting that the present limitation in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved July 1, 1916, limiting the cost of the two new Panama Canal colliers to $1,300,000, be increased to $1,510,000 each (H. Doc. No. 1302); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on reexamination of Chicago Harbor, Ill. (H. Doc. No. 1303); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

11. A letter from the Acting Secretary of State, calling attention to an error in the Diplomatic and Consular act approved July 1, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1304); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1916.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 25, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we can not proceed right now, with so few Senators in the Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Husting	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Brandeggee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Smoot
Chamberlain	Jones	Penrose	Sterling
Clapp	Kenyon	Pittman	Stone
Colt	Kern	Ransdell	Taggart

Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Myers	Sherman	Walsh
Gallinger	Nelson	Simmons	Warren
Gronna	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Harding	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. I understand that the District of Columbia appropriation bill will be ready for consideration by the time the pending measure is disposed of. I desire to give notice, as the representative of the majority, that immediately after the disposition of the District of Columbia appropriation bill I shall move to take up for consideration the House bill known as the child-labor bill, and ask that it be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will state to the Senator that the District of Columbia appropriation bill is ready to be taken up.

Mr. KERN. I assumed that it was.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that at all, except that the Military Academy bill, I understand, will have the right of way immediately after the Army appropriation bill. It will not take very long to dispose of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will simply express my gratification at the announcement made by the leader of the majority. The minority, or a large proportion of the minority, are quite as anxious that the child-labor bill shall be considered as the Senator from Indiana or his associates on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In connection with the observations of the Senator from New Hampshire, I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will be gratified in like manner by an announcement from the leader on the other side in the course of a day or two, as soon as matters are adjusted, that the immigration bill will likewise be taken up and be made the unfinished business to follow the child-labor bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, reciprocating the observation of the Senator from Wisconsin, I join with him in the hope he has expressed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Just for a moment. On an inquiry addressed to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], he positively assured the Senate that he intended to make a motion to bring up the immigration bill, and I am a little surprised that any other legislation is permitted to take precedence of the immigration bill after the positive assurance made by the Senator from South Carolina that he intended to move to bring it up. But I do not ask for any explanation at the present time. I simply want to record the status of the matter, that the Senate was assured that the Senator from South Carolina would move to bring up the immigration bill.

Mr. KERN. I will state that by the time the child-labor bill is disposed of we will make an announcement regarding the disposition of the immigration bill that I think will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Pennsylvania and all the other ardent friends of the immigration bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the leader of the majority intend to ask the Senate to act on the immigration bill prior to final adjournment?

Mr. KERN. The majority is entirely independent to act on any bill it desires to act on. It has manifested that independence all through the session I am sure, and it will continue to do so.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Indiana announced his intention regarding the child-labor bill, and I did not know whether he had any objection to declaring the intention regarding the immigration bill.

Mr. KERN. I have no objection to declaring any intention I may now have. The announcement will be made at the proper time, and in my own way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to submit three amendments on behalf of the committee. They are slight changes in the bill as it has so far been acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, strike out lines 21 to 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For additional 10 per cent increase of pay of officers on foreign service, including officers of the Organized Militia or National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, strike out lines 1 to 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For additional 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service, including enlisted men of the Organized Militia or National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $1,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the amendment is agreed to, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if that does raise the pay of the enlisted men?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No. I will state the purpose of the amendment. The way the bill originally read it might be construed as giving 10 per cent additional pay where they were not in foreign service, and it was only intended to increase the pay under the existing law in case they were in foreign service; that is all.

Mr. REED. Let us understand. If the Regular Army is in Mexico, do the enlisted men get additional pay?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They get additional pay, both the officers and privates, when they are in foreign service, whether in Mexico or in the Philippines.

Mr. REED. If the National Guard is engaged in protecting the border, but are on American soil, its members do not get the additional pay.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; neither do the Regulars.

Mr. REED. Of course; but we all understand in its practical operation what it means, because we know that substantially all of the Regular Army will get additional pay because they are south of the Rio Grande.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not all of them are south of the Rio Grande; only a small part of the Regulars.

Mr. REED. The greater part of them. None of the National Guard will get additional pay, because they are north of the river.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is correct, Mr. President. That is the law as it is now.

Mr. REED. The Regular Army private who is stationed just north of the river and guarding the border will receive less pay than his fellow soldier of the Regular Army who is just south of the river.

I ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that all of these men are engaged in a common work, to wit, the protection of this country against the aggressions of Mexico, some of them being stationed by the orders of their commanders north of the line, some of them south of the line, and all of them liable at any moment to be engaged in conflict? That is the situation. I ask the chairman of the committee if he thinks that is a fair or wise discrimination?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the law as it is to-day. It was not enacted for this specific occasion. The law already provides that officers and men engaged in foreign service shall be entitled to extra pay. The only reason—

Mr. REED. Now—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me state to the Senator the only reason for the proposed amendment. I really do not think it is necessary; I am simply acting on the recommendation of the War Department. I do not think it is necessary, but the War Department felt that lines 16 to 23, on page 27, might have a wrong construction placed upon them, and therefore this was inserted for the purpose of clarifying the situation.

Mr. REED. The chairman says that this is the present law, and that is correct, of course. But the present law was enacted for the purpose of meeting the conditions then existing or which could be reasonably anticipated. Some of our soldiers were stationed in China. It was a hardship for them to be put in that far-off country. Some of them were stationed in the Philippines, where they suffered not only the hardship of being separated from their own country but the dangers incident to that climate and to that service. Occasionally some of them have been sent to various islands. Some of them have been sent to Central American countries. Under those circumstances, of course, additional expense is imposed upon the men and the officers.

I can see why the law was drawn in that way; but, Mr. President, we are now proposing to make a law applicable to present conditions. What are these present conditions? We have not invaded Mexico for the purpose of conquest. Every soldier on the Mexican border, or north or south of the Mexican border, whether that soldier be a Regular or whether he be of the National Guard, is engaged in the same work, the work of the man south of the line and the work of the man north of the line being a part of a general plan to protect our country against the invasion of marauding expeditions by Mexicans. Incident to the work of both of these forces, of course, is the pressure that is being brought upon Mexico to establish peace.

Mr. President, I think the chairman of the committee ought to amend his amendment so that it will read: "or engaged in protecting the Mexican border or serving in Mexico," so that it will apply with fairness and justice to all classes of soldiers who are serving along the Mexican border. I ask the chairman of the committee if he will not accept that as an amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think it would be just to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. The committee has, so far as my knowledge extends, undertaken to place the Regular Army and the National Guard in exactly the same category; that is all. The purpose of this amendment is to do that very thing. Of course, Congress has not any control of the movements of these troops. The President might be induced, at the suggestion of men who are particularly interested in having the National Guard perform foreign service, to bring back the Regulars who are now over the Mexican border and replace them with National Guardsmen, which would entitle them to the increased pay. I do not think the Senator wants that; I do not think the people want that; and yet the President can do that very thing to-morrow. So this applies only to the men who are doing foreign service.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, of course the chairman of the committee will exercise his own judgment, but this proposition is so manifestly fair and equitable that I did hope it would be accepted. However, I have about made up my mind that nothing will be accepted unless some Regular Army officer declares that it ought to be written in the bill.

I move to amend the amendment by adding after the words "foreign service" the words "or under the call of the President engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether serving within or without the United States."

I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment of the committee as it would read as I propose to amend it.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 2, after the words "foreign service," it is proposed to insert "or under the call of the President engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether serving within or without the United States," so that as proposed to be amended the clause would read:

For additional 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service, or under the call of the President engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether serving within or without the United States, including enlisted men of the Organized Militia or National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $1,000,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, against that amendment I make the point of order that it is not estimated for and that it is an amendment of existing law upon an appropriation bill. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this appropriation bill does not attempt in any way to change existing law. It simply makes provision for payment under the laws as they now are, but the Senator's amendment changes that existing law and allows an increase of pay even when the soldiers are not engaged in foreign service.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if my amendment to the amendment is out of order, then the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon is also out of order. Each is germane to the other. I simply extend the definition so that men engaged in foreign service will be held to include those who are protecting our country against a foreign enemy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the present law of the United States give to enlisted men of the Regular Army and of the Organized Militia or National Guard, when called or drafted into the service of the United States, 20 per cent additional pay?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rather think it does, Mr. President. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not rule on a point of order on any such statement as that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Well, Mr. President, I do not profess to be absolutely beyond the power of making any mistake. The Almighty alone, so far as I know anything about it, is the only

One who does not make mistakes. I will say this, however, that the men in the Regular Army are entitled to extra-service pay when engaged in foreign service. There is nothing in the law about the National Guardsmen, except that when they are mustered into the Federal service they become a part of the Regular Army. It is for that reason that I stated a while ago that I very much questioned if the amendment was necessary; but that, in order to remove any doubt which might exist upon the subject, the National Guard were specifically mentioned in the appropriation, which was made for that purpose, and estimated for, but the Senator from Missouri wants to go further.

I think, Mr. President, that as soon as the National Guard is mustered into the service, it becomes a part of the regular enlisted personnel of the United States Army, and that in law they are entitled to this extra-service pay. That is a question of construction. In order to remove a doubt we put this language in the bill. It was only to protect the National Guard in case of doubt that it was done; but I do not think it was at all necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wants to get the state of the law, because the ruling on the point of order depends on the state of the law. If it were necessary, in order to fix the status of the Organized Militia when called or drafted into the service of the United States to insert the original amendment, then beyond peradventure it is just as much general legislation as the amendment to it is general legislation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; I beg pardon of the President. In any event, only extra pay is allowed when foreign service is engaged in; but the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is to change the existing law, whether it applies to the Regular Army or to the National Guard, so that they shall have extra pay when engaged in domestic service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But if the present law granting 20 per cent additional pay on foreign service only applies to the Regular Army of the United States, and does not apply to the Organized Militia when called into service of the United States, then, when an amendment is presented which proposes to put the Organized Militia when drafted into the service of the United States under the same provision with reference to foreign-service pay, it must be an amendment of the law, if that be the condition of affairs.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am insisting that the National Guard become a part of the Federal service when they are mustered in and that the law applicable to the Regular Army applies to them. That is a fixed statute; that is an act that was passed by Congress on the 30th of June, 1902.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the difficulty about the contention of the Senator from Oregon is that his contention is not borne out by his amendment, because the amendment is not needed if his contention is right.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Chair that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon only refers to foreign service? The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri refers to the Regular Army and to the National Guard in domestic service, which changes the whole law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, yes; but it must be perfectly plain if the Organized Militia is not now, when called into the service of the United States, a part of the Regular Army of the United States, when the committee attempts to put them upon the same basis as the Regular Army as to pay for foreign service, that is changing the law with reference to the Organized Militia and its pay; and it must be perfectly apparent that if the committee do that, then any Senator has a right to move to amend the law and to introduce an additional amendment, so far as the Organized Militia is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, the amendment, as found on page 28, was reported from a committee and it has been estimated for. If that be the case—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Estimated for by whom?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has not been estimated for by anybody.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it had been estimated for by the department.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The amount in the committee provision has been estimated for.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I mean.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But I say that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will require a very much increased appropriation—probably double the amount of the appropriation contained in the bill—and no estimate has been made for that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is without the record.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator from Oregon if there had been an estimate made based upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri? If there has not been, then, of course, it is increasing the appropriation; and, furthermore, it has not been reported from a standing committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has not been.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, that will not do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a plain statement now from the Senator from Oregon that the $1,000,000 appropriation was not estimated for.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No, Mr. President. I say that the proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri involves an expenditure that has not been estimated for. The amount in the bill has been estimated for, based upon the enlisted men in the National Guard and the Regular Army who may be in foreign service.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understand it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let us get this right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks he has it right.

Mr. REED. Very well, if the Chair has it right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any contention that the specific appropriation here of a million dollars for additional pay to enlisted men on foreign service, including the Organized Militia, has been estimated for. There is not any contention that it has been estimated for by the department or anybody else. The suggestion of the Senator from Oregon, who knows about these matters—and the Chair does not dispute his statement—namely, that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will call for additional appropriation is doubtless true—the Chair does not want to put it in that way, and will say it is true; but it appears outside the record. All that the Senator from Missouri is seeking to do is to change this amendment so that it will apply to the troops on the Mexican border.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to a point wholly apart from those we have been discussing. The rule is perfectly plain that any amendment involving any increase of appropriation, unless reported from a standing committee, is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not doubt that.

Mr. LODGE. This undoubtedly involves an increase of appropriation, an additional charge on the Treasury.

Mr. REED. When a standing committee comes in with its recommendation we can then amend it, and that is the situation here.

Mr. LODGE. The rule so provides.

Mr. REED. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Chair would be impressed with the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts if there was anything on the face of the record to show that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri involves an increase in the appropriation. That is outside of the record, unless there is an admission on the part of the Senator from Missouri that it is going to take more than a million dollars.

Mr. REED. I make no admission of the kind; I do not know.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, the Chair, to end the discussion so far as the Chair is concerned, is of the opinion that when the committee seeks to change the law, any Senator has the right to offer an amendment also changing the law.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire, then, to say a word on this matter. I care not whether it is the National Guard or the Regular Army that we are considering, this slight increase ought to be made. Let us consider the Regular Army. These men are ordinarily located in the States, at fortresses, at barracks, and places where they have their accustomed habitat, a place in which to live, and where they can buy food and all the little extras which they use at the ordinary prices charged other citizens, and, indeed, at less prices, because the commissary department of the Army furnishes such things at much less than usual prices. So that now when they are called into Mexico and put to additional expense there is nothing unjust or inequitable in giving them a slight increase in compensation which will make up for the loss they sustain.

Applying the question to the National Guard, the argument made is not only sound but the reasons advanced are multiplied a hundredfold. I have here on my desk letters from the relatives of men who left employments that were paying them seventy-five to a hundred dollars a month to go to the border to serve their country.

I have letters showing that in some instances these men left families almost destitute, because, like other people in this country living upon wages, they had not laid by any considerable sum of money. I could read you letters that would touch the sympathy of any man who has a heart. These men are serving on the Mexican border at $15 a month. It will scarcely buy their tobacco. It is true they are serving just north of the river. What for? To repel the marauding expeditions of Mr. Villa and other banditti. If they were just south of the river they would be doing identically the same thing, only at a point a few miles farther south. If they were just south of the river, under the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee they would get the extra pay. If they are just north of the river they do not get it. Their hardships, their expense, their danger in one place is substantially the same as it is in the other place.

Mr. President, I shall take but a minute, but I want to say this: If we want to build up an army in the United States, if we want to keep the service in our Army from becoming so obnoxious, so oppressive, that no young man will enter it, then we must start upon a new policy, or a modified policy. You can not get the live and energetic young men of this country to go into an army at starvation wages. If you mistreat the National Guard, now that it has been called forth and has by a ready response rendered a splendid service to the country, you will find the evil result of that mistreatment following you for many years.

Let us see what happened. We had some trouble with the Mexican authorities, or with the alleged Mexican authorities. We found that our border was being invaded. We found that the soldiers of Mexico were recklessly firing across the line. We protested, yet the outrages continued. The President of the United States exercised the patience and faith of the saints, but at last a condition arose that made it necessary for us to make a display of force. We sent all of the Regular troops we could muster into Mexico or along the border.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. In a moment. There were 1,500 miles of border to protect. It was found that the Regular force was too small, although we denuded all parts of the country in order to make as large a force as possible, whereupon the President called on the National Guard. Who were they? They were young men engaged in every avocation in life. There were lawyers, there were physicians, there were mechanics, there were laborers, there were farmers. They were living in their quiet homes, surrounded by their families, and were engaged in occupations that enabled them to make good livings. Within a few hours' time after the order was issued these young men abandoned their avocations and their homes and met at the places appointed for mobilization. They responded on the instant. In my State nearly the entire number were in their various armories within six hours after the order was issued; and I do not claim that Missouri did any better than other States. They arrived at the border as quickly as the War Department could prepare to move them. The delays incident to their movements, if there were delays, are chargeable to the Regular Army organization and not to the volunteers. Some of them could not be moved at once.

I am informed that when a New Jersey regiment went to get its guns it was discovered that the Regular Army officers had sent the guns to Plattsburg. I am informed that shoes could not be furnished in some instances. Such conditions can not be charged to the National Guard. It must be charged to those officers of the Army whose business it was to have on hand the necessary supplies to move troops.

These young men went down into the Mexican country or along the border. Their families, their dependents, they themselves were deprived of the ordinary wage and income which had been received. Whenever you say to the young men of this country that under circumstances of that kind our Government will exact from them great sacrifices, and that it will in no way respond to the call of humanity or to the voice of equity, you will make it impossible to maintain such an organization as the National Guard. You will be relegated for your support in the hour of emergency to the Regular Army of the United States, service in which is already so obnoxious to our people that it has been found impossible, in something like three or four months' time, to get 20,000 recruits. You can not maintain an army by such policies. You men who vote away millions of the people's money for cannon, for fortresses, for ships, for rifles, and for munitions, will, if you continue to pursue this narrow and archaic policy that has been abandoned by every civilized country on earth toward our men, find yourselves with guns but without men ready to handle them, with cannon but without men prepared to use them, you will have fortresses empty of men.

The Senator from California rose a little while ago. Does he desire to interrogate me?

Mr. WORKS. It seems that for the present, at least, the war in Mexico is over. Peace has been declared. I wanted to ask the Senator whether he does not think it would be far better, in the interest of the country and of these militiamen as well, that they should be allowed to return to their homes and their business?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course that question is entirely aside from the one I am discussing, and it invites me into a very broad field.

Mr. WORKS. Notwithstanding that, I should like to have the Senator's views upon that subject.

Mr. REED. The point of the question now under consideration is that these men are now engaged in this service. The length of time they may be engaged in the service is indefinite. The question I am discussing is how we should treat these men while thus engaged in the service.

Mr. WORKS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. REED. Just a moment. I am not discussing the question how long they ought to be kept there, nor am I discussing the general Mexican policy of the administration. But since the Senator has asked me this question, I answer him that I am unable to answer the question, as I think the Senator is unable to answer it, as I think every other man in the Senate is unable to answer it, because in the nature of things we do not know and can not have up-to-date information with reference to just what is transpiring in Mexico.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. REED. Let me finish this answer to make plain what I have said. To my mind this is apparent: That our Mexican neighbor, involved as it was and still is in the turmoil of war, rapine, murder, and anarchy, nevertheless had cultivated an idea that it was big enough and potential enough to set at defiance the Government and people of the United States. Our President did not want to go to Mexico and slaughter its people, as he could have slaughtered them; neither did he want to sow the seeds of that hatred which springs from war and from conquest. Perhaps there were many other evils he desired to avoid. But in order to prevent a continuance of the outrages being perpetrated and to bring Mexico to its senses he made a show of force, and with the further thought undoubtedly that if Mexico did not come to its senses, and if worst had to come to worst, we would be prepared to strike with promptness and deadly effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri now yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. No; I will not yield until I have finished, and then I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All right.

Mr. REED. What has been the result of the President's rigorous action? Mexico has shown a disposition to yield. It looks as though Mexico is coming to its senses. Nevertheless it may be necessary to keep our troops along the border for some time in order that we may complete our negotiations, and it may be advisable even beyond the period of negotiations to keep our troops in Mexico or in proximity to the Mexican line, so that our negotiations will bear the fruitage of action and consummation. My own private judgment—I have spoken thus far solely my own personal views—but even in a more confined sense expressing my own private opinion, I think that it may very likely be necessary to keep troops along the Mexican border for some little time in the future. What will transpire in that country I can not tell, but if I were myself charged with this responsibility I would not withdraw a man or a gun until I was satisfied that we were substantially through with the Mexican trouble.

But, Mr. President, that is all aside from the question. The men are there. It is the settled policy of this country to pay our men in foreign service a 20 per cent increase. This bill provides for it. All that I am asking is that the man who is just north of the Mexican border, guarding our people, their property, and their homes, shall be treated as though he were just south of the Mexican line. The Regular Army officers and the Regular Army men who are south of the Mexican line are doing just the same kind of service that the militia officers and the militiamen are doing just north of the line. Neither are engaged in actual war. Each and all are engaged in the protection of our country against the marauding expeditions and the unlawful acts of the Mexican people. Both of these classes of our soldiers have been taken from their homes or from their barracks. They have an additional expense imposed upon them, and the fact ought to be recognized and some slight recompense made.

Mr. President, I have here the regulations of the Canadian Government for the payment of its troops. I also have tables showing the pay of the British troops going from Great Britain. The first thing you find is that in Canada they pay their men more than we pay our soldiers. I read a letter, so that I may get the figures correct. It is signed by the Lieutenant colonel commanding the One hundred and eightieth Battalion of Canadian troops:

I have your note of the 25th instant, and inclose you memorandum of pay and allowance regulations of the Canadian Army, which explains itself.

In addition to the pay and allowance set out herein, allowance to the various branches is as follows:

	Per month.
Lieutenant colonel.....	$60
Major.....	50
Captain.....	40
Lieutenant.....	30
Sergeant.....	25
Private.....	20

In the case of a married man or where a man is the sole support of mother, the above rates apply, so that a private soldier in the field would receive $1 per day, 10 cents field allowance per day, and $20 per month to his wife or mother, if he is sole support.

In addition, the country has been organized into various districts, in a patriotic fund, where the citizens have donated funds for needy soldiers' families, based approximately on $3 for each child up to 18 years of age. This is outside of the Government, however, although it is universal.

Yours, very truly,

R. H. GREER,
Lieutenant Colonel Commanding
One hundred and eightieth O. S. Battalion.

Now, here is the table:

Regimental rates, Canadian forces.

	Pay.	Field allowance.	Separation allowance.	Per month.
Colonel.....	$6.00	$1.50		$60.00
Lieutenant colonel.....	5.00	1.25		60.00
Major.....	4.00	1.00		50.00
Captains.....	3.00	.75		40.00
Lieutenants.....	2.00	.60		30.00
Command pay (in addition to rank).....	1.00
Adjutants (in addition to rank).....	.50
Paymasters.....	3.00	.75		40.00
Quartermasters.....	3.00	.75		40.00
Chaplains, medical officers, and veterinary officers (pay of rank as above).....
Nursing sisters.....	2.00	.60
Warrant officers.....	2.00	.30
Quartermaster sergeants.....	1.80	.20	25.00
Orderly-room clerks.....	1.50	.20
Pay sergeants.....	1.50	.20	25.00
Battalion sergeant majors.....	1.85	.20	25.00
Company sergeant majors.....	1.60	.20	25.00
Company quartermaster sergeants.....	1.50	.20	25.00
Sergeants.....	1.35	.15	25.00
Corporals.....	1.10	.10	20.00
Privates.....	1.00	.10	20.00

Mr. President, that is what is being done in Canada. For the information of the Members of the Senate who are here considering this bill I have here a table showing the pay of the British Government for English soldiers, which I will insert. I also insert table showing the additional pay granted Australian and New Zealand troops.

A table showing the average weekly allowance made by the British Government to the families of all classes of English soldiers in active service is given below. These figures represent the allowance to families not living in public quarters. The families who do live in public quarters receive approximately one-half as much:

	Per week.
Wife only.....	$4.27
Wife and one child.....	5.49
Wife and two children.....	6.32
Wife and three children.....	6.76
Wife and four children.....	7.27
Each additional child.....	.24
Each motherless child.....	1.20
CANADA.
Wife only.....	3.47
Wife and one child.....	4.62
Wife and two children.....	5.37
Wife and three children.....	6.33
Wife and four children.....	7.05
NEW ZEALAND.
Wife only.....	3.05

In addition to the extra pay and special allowances above shown, Mr. President, the British Government by an act of Parliament has created what is known as the statutory committee of the Royal Patriotic Fund Corporation. This organization has branches or is empowered to establish branches in all parts of the Empire, or at least of England proper. Very briefly, the commission is directed to make inquiry into the condition of the families of all the soldiers, and out of the public funds as well as out of private subscriptions and donations to take care of these families according to their necessities.

What I am asking now is a very small thing. It is that the volunteer soldier serving on the Mexican line and just north of that line shall receive the same pay that he would if he were just south of the line. He is, in fact, engaged in the foreign service, for he is, in fact, defending us against a foreign people; but his service happens to be limited to patrolling the northern side of the Rio Grande. It seems to me the question is not open to dispute; the justice and equity of the proposition ought to commend it to all men.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to a case in Topeka, Kans., where the family of a soldier are living on one meal a day. Corpl. Walter F. Beltz, who has always been regarded as a steady young man and was employed by the Santa Fe Railroad Co. for a salary of something like $75 or $80 a month, is in camp at Eagle Pass, Tex. His wife recently wrote to him as follows:

I don't know what we will do if you can not get away and come home, for everything goes wrong. Virginia is crying. I only get one meal a day. Jess and I eat bread and coffee; Virginia and Leroy [the two children] an egg. We can not get things to eat. No money coming, and I can not get work. I tried laundries and restaurants, but this town is full of help. Next week maybe I can get work. I hate to leave the kids, but will have to. The laundries pay 90 cents a day and dinner.

The Topeka Capital, commenting on the young man, says that—

Corpl. Beltz is regarded as one of the steadiest young men in the organization. He said this morning he had been working at the Santa Fe shops regularly for seven years before the guard was called out. He and his wife have been paying for a small home at 109 East Florence Avenue, rural route 27. The payments were $25.25 a month. Beltz's salary from the Government is $30 a month. He figures he can send most of it home.

He said in an interview relative to his situation:

I want to see this thing through, but now the building and loan association has notified my wife that if the payments are not made promptly we will lose our home, and one meal a day. If this goes on, I don't know what I will do. They told me in Topeka before we came here that Topeka would take care of my wife and children.

But, Mr. President, the home communities should not be required to take care of soldiers' families. The Government should do this, and not permit them to be left as objects of charity. We have a chance in a small way now to relieve the distress which exists in many communities by a slight increase in the salaries of soldiers. The young man I have mentioned is an officer receiving $30 per month, while the privates receive only half this amount, which is less than Canada and England are now paying, when we can well afford to pay more.

In my heart I feel that we ought to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri as a matter of simple justice, not only to the soldier serving in the field, but to the family at home. I therefore hope that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from Missouri a very simple question, whether it would not be better, as the war seems to be over in Mexico and peace has been declared, to return these militiamen to their homes and their business? The Senator declared that he could not answer that question, neither could any Member of this body. I think that is precisely true. I do not believe anybody can give any reason why these men should be maintained where they are now. I do not believe anybody can give any good reason why 16,000 or more of the regular troops are kept in Mexico under existing conditions.

I maintained when the reorganization bill was under consideration that the whole scheme of federalizing the National Guard and compelling them to take an additional oath of allegiance to the Federal Government was in violation of the express terms of the Constitution. I have not changed my mind on that subject.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri that if these men are to be maintained in the service they should be better paid and their families should be cared for.

It is no fault of theirs that they are where they are to-day, in a service that, I think, is unnecessary and a burden of expense to the Government.

I have seen so much of politics in the Executive Department of the Government and in the Congress of the United States that

I am afraid that I have become oversuspicious of any movement that is made like the one that is going on in the Mexican situation. I am firmly convinced that the Regular soldiers are kept in Mexico and that the militia have been called to the border for political reasons. I hope, Mr. President, I am mistaken.

We have witnessed something here this morning that leads me to that same conclusion. We have been talking here off and on about the child-labor bill. That bill has been hanging on here during all the present session of Congress and I believe at previous sessions. Suddenly, and just near the close of the session, the President of the United States comes down to the Capitol and demands, we are told, that that bill shall be taken up by the Congress and passed. And it is a bill that the President of the United States has in the most solemn way declared to be unconstitutional legislation. Why is action upon it demanded at the present time?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator has—

Mr. WORKS. I decline to yield to the Senator for the moment, as he was not willing to extend that courtesy to me. I will yield in a moment, however.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WORKS. Why this haste in calling for this particular bill that has been before the Senate for so long, and just at a time when both the President and Members of Congress are anxious that this session should close? There can be but one answer to that question. Everybody knows on both sides of the Chamber what the object of it is. It is well understood that that sort of legislation is demanded by public sentiment and that the passage of the bill will be popular with the voters of this country.

I am not saying this, Mr. President, in any sense of opposition to the child-labor bill. I have very grave doubts myself as to the constitutionality of that kind of legislation. I am very much in favor of the principle involved in it, and it is a question which may be legitimately submitted to the courts of the country and left to their decision. I have felt all along disposed to support it and leave the courts to determine whether it is constitutional or unconstitutional. If I were clear in my own mind, if I were perfectly satisfied, that this was unconstitutional legislation I should feel that it was my duty to oppose it and vote against it, and I think every Member of this body who sincerely believes that that sort of legislation is unconstitutional should do his duty as a Member of the Senate and cast his vote against it, whatever might be the consequences.

I am sorry to say that I have not given the matter that careful study and consideration that I think every Senator should give it in order that I may be able to satisfy my own mind as to whether it can be sustained in the courts or not.

Mr. President, we are going to great lengths not only in the use of the Army—a part of which I think belongs to the States—but we are piling up an enormous debt and an expense that the taxpayers of this country will have to meet, and somebody, sooner or later, will be called upon to answer for it. Perhaps the chairman of the committee, who must be in the confidence of the Executive Department, and who, I have no doubt, knows more about the necessities of the case than I or any other Member of the Senate, could answer the question that I have asked the Senator from Missouri, who has declared his inability to answer it, as to whether it would not be better for the country and for the members of the militia that they should be allowed to return to their homes and to their business? Can the Senator from Oregon answer the question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I do not think any Senator, as the Senator from Missouri has stated, can answer, nor do I think the President himself can answer, whether it would be necessary to call the troops home, or proper to call them home, for no man in the Senate, I conceive, knows exactly the situation there and the delicacy of the situation. I doubt very much if the President himself could say that it would be proper at this time to bring the troops away. Personally I should be glad to see them come away to-morrow.

Mr. WORKS. I have no doubt of that, Mr. President. Does the Senator from Oregon know why and for what purpose the large regular force is still kept in Mexico?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am only advised about it, as is the Senator from California, by what the newspapers say.

Mr. WORKS. Well, Mr. President, we are legislating here with respect to the enormous expenses that are created by just that thing—the keeping of the regular soldiers in Mexico and the necessity growing out of it, the guarding of the border by the militia. It seems to me that the Senator from Oregon, who is urging this legislation and these large appropriations, should have some idea as to why and for what purpose these appropriations have become necessary and why they should be continued.

Now, if the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] desires to submit any questions, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose. [A pause.] Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is otherwise engaged, and I have said nearly all I desire to say at present on this subject.

I am feeling the situation pretty strongly myself. My mind revolts against some of the things we are doing. I think we have gone beyond all reason in the appropriations that we are about to make. I do not think this Congress will ever be able to justify itself for these appropriations in the minds of the people of this country. I think Members of Congress can hardly justify themselves in their own judgment and conscience. There is a force behind them, pressing for legislation of this kind; a force that I think is illegitimate, based upon false grounds and false reasons that I think ought not to control the action of Congress; but I am certain that it does.

I suggested a moment ago that I should be glad to submit to any question which the Senator from Missouri desired to ask.

Mr. REED. My question is a very simple one. Before I ask it, however, I want to say to the Senator from California that I hope he did not misunderstand my declining to yield to him at a particular moment as a discourtesy. It was not so meant. There was a certain thing which I was saying, and I only wanted to conclude it. I yielded to the Senator as soon as I was through with that particular statement. I am sure the Senator from California will understand that it was not out of a failure to have a proper regard for him that I declined to yield on the instant.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has always been courteous to me. I have no reason to complain of his failure to yield at the time to which he refers.

Mr. REED. The only question I desired to ask the Senator from California was, whether, when he made the statement that the President had declared the child-labor bill to be unconstitutional, he referred to the statement which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] had put into the RECORD on July 21 of this year.

Mr. WORKS. I have not read the statement as it was placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Idaho, but I read what was stated by the President in his book, and I presume it is the same, though I do not know.

Mr. REED. Very well. That was all I desired to ask.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, what is the matter now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have an amendment to offer, but there being an amendment pending, I shall withhold my amendment for the present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong this debate, yet I can not allow to go unnoticed the statement of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] that soldiers are being kept in Mexico for political reasons only. That is an ungenerous statement. It is one that I should not have been surprised to have heard from some sources, but I am surprised to hear it from the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I said that I hoped I was mistaken. If the Senator from Missouri can now convince me that I am mistaken, I shall be glad to correct any statement that I have made; but I understood the Senator to say that he was not able to answer the question with respect to what was going on down in Mexico.

Mr. REED. When I said I could not tell what the present conditions were I referred to the negotiations that are going on. I was dealing with the particular present situation and to the attitude of the Mexican authorities. As to those matters I said I was not informed. That, however, did not imply that I was utterly ignorant of some plain and bald facts.

The Senator from California states that he will change his opinion, as he expressed it a few moments ago, if he is convinced. I do not undertake to convince the Senator, but I do undertake to demonstrate that the charge that the troops were sent to the Mexican border for political purposes is an unfair charge.

What was the situation? For months the Mexican leaders had been showing a constantly increasing disregard of the rights of this country.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. WORKS. As the Senator from Missouri is attempting to prove that I have been unfair, he certainly should be fair himself in stating the proposition. I did not refer to the sending of the troops to the border at a time when it might have been fairly stated that it was necessary. I was talking about the present condition of maintaining them on the border.

Mr. REED. So that the Senator now agrees—and therefore I omit what I was going to say on that point—that there was a necessity for sending the troops to the border; that that was a patriotic act, for, if the necessity existed, the act must have been patriotic.

Mr. WORKS. Now, Mr. President—

Mr. REED. And it was a just act, for if the necessity existed, then it was just to send them. And it was a wise act, for if the necessity existed, then it was wise to meet that necessity.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I insist upon it that the Senator from Missouri shall be fair about this matter. I made no admission; I have not agreed that it was necessary to send the troops there in the beginning. My remarks applied to another and a different time. I have not said anything about the necessity of sending them there.

Mr. REED. Then, Mr. President, if the Senator from California does not admit that it was necessary to send the troops there in the first instance, I shall have to try to show that it was. I was engaged in doing so when the Senator from California rose and made the statement which led me to conclude that he made the admission.

Beginning just where I left off, this constantly increasing menace from Mexico culminated in an invasion of our country by a Mexican force and in the firing upon United States troops and the killing of women and children. This occurred at Columbus, N. Mex., at Big Bend, Tex., and at many other places circumstances of the most aggravating nature transpired. I do not propose to argue that, under such conditions, it was right and proper for the President to send a sufficient force of men to protect our border. Opinions may differ as to how far he ought to have gone beyond the border, or as to whether war should have been declared or not; but opinions among patriotic American people can not differ as to his right and duty to protect the border.

I come to the other question. If these troops are not immediately called back, the Senator from California suspects that politics are being played. Why should they be called back? That is a question that a man ought to be ready to answer before he charges a base motive to the President of the United States. Are conditions in Mexico those of established peace and order? Have the banditti of that country been yet suppressed? Are Villa and his rappers and burners and murderers yet annihilated or captured? Is there a living man who can guarantee that, if the forces of the United States were withdrawn to-night, by to-morrow morning Mexican marauders might not be ravishing American women and burning American property and murdering American men? And until some Senator can stand on this floor and demonstrate that those conditions will not obtain, it ill becomes him to charge the President with playing politics merely because he keeps a force along the Mexican border.

The Senator further charges that the President is playing politics because a few days ago he suggested to the Democratic leaders the wisdom and desirability of passing at this session of Congress a child-labor bill. That was not made for the first time the President expressed himself in favor of the child-labor bill. It is well known that the President has for many months, if not for a longer period, been urging the passage of a child-labor bill. It is also well known and understood that the majority on this side have been in favor of the enactment of a child-labor bill; but that there were many other measures which some of the Senators thought of equal importance and therefore desired to get through before this session of Congress should come to a close. Accordingly it had been tentatively agreed between some of the Senators on each side that the child-labor bill and the immigration bill should go over until early in the next session and be set down for action upon a day certain, and this not because of any lack of interest in the child-labor bill, for the action that was contemplated would have insured a speedy result. Yet so anxious was the President for action upon the bill that he did substantially what he has done on other bills—he came here and said, "If you can possibly do it, include this bill in your budget for this term."

Now, this strange thing happens. The Senator from California, if he can be catalogued politically, would be classed as a Progressive; he would be included with that great number, more than 4,000,000, who repudiated the old party standard and who marched out under a new banner, which was to lead to the heights of legislative achievement and reform. The protection of children was one of the avowed principles of the Progressive element of the Republican Party, now unhappily innocuous, dead, and almost forgotten. The President has been for child-labor legislation ever since he was convinced that it could be constitutionally enacted. Other men who had doubts as to its constitutionality have been studying the question and changing their minds. It would seem to me that an earnest champion of child-labor legislation, one whose heart bleeds over the wrongs of children, one whose tender soul is wrought with agony because of the oppression and the crushing of the young lives of children, would welcome the earnest advocacy and support of the President and would be willing to ascribe to him the same high motives, the same earnest desire to aid the children of the land, as have inspired those who belonged to the Progressive element of the Republican Party. We would hardly expect such an act in such a cause to be charged to the base motive of politics, yet the Senator from California makes it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Record shows that the Chair had announced that this amendment was agreed to. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harding	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Husting	Overman	Smoot
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Sterling
Broussard	Jones	Page	Taggart
Bryan	Kenyon	Penrose	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kern	Pol Dexter	Thompson
Chilton	La Follette	Reed	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Robinson	Wadsworth
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Walsh
Curtis	Lippitt	Sherman	Warren
du Pont	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Weeks
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.	Works

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the temporary absence from the Chamber of my colleague [Mr. TAGGART] on official business.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] on account of death in his family.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce the temporary absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] on official business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senate has now assembled, and if its Members will bear with me one minute I will state the amendment we are about to vote upon, and I shall not take the minute.

The law as it now stands provides extra pay of 20 per cent to soldiers engaged in foreign service. Under that law those of our troops, Regular or militia, who are south of the Mexican border will get a 20 per cent increase. Those who are guarding the Mexican border, but happen to be north of the line, will not. My amendment puts them all on the same basis and gives them the 20 per cent additional pay while serving under the orders of the President along the Mexican border.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, on a division.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in reference to the vote just taken, I hope the Senate will increase the appropriation so as to cover it, because there is absolutely not enough money to meet the increased charge.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee if he can suggest to the Senate how much that proposition will increase the expenditures of the Government?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say that in the estimates which were made by the department to cover the Regular Army, before the National Guard was mustered into the service, the pay of officers on foreign service was estimated at $300,000. That was sufficient to pay the Regular Army officers the 10 per cent increase granted by law when engaged in foreign service. Subsequently, when the National Guard was called into the service, a revised estimate was sent up, on the assumption that the National Guard officers and the enlisted men, too, would be called into service in Mexico. That estimate was $1,000,000 for the Regular Army, assuming that all of the Regular Army officers would be called out, and for the National Guard officers—practically double the number of the Regular Army officers—$2,178,240. So that if we are going to do as the amendment proposes, pay them on the border just as if they were in foreign service, the amount contained in the bill is entirely insufficient.

I have addressed myself so far only to the officers. Now, with reference to the enlisted men, the estimate made for the enlisted personnel of the Army engaged in foreign service on the basis of the Regular Army, before the National Guard was called into service, was $800,000. That was the amount fixed by the department. Then, later on a revised estimate was made when the National Guard were Federalized, and it was assumed that they would be put into the foreign service. The revised estimate for the Regular Army was $3,000,000—it was increased, you see—and for the National Guard, $11,469,024. Now, changes have been made in these figures, because the National Guard have not been sent across the border, so that if they are going to be paid for service on the border just as if they were called over the border increases will have to be made in the appropriation, or there will be no money with which to meet the increased expenditure.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator, if he has considered that matter, whether the amount would not have to be about quadrupled, or more?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. For the enlisted men it would have to be increased to $14,469,024.

Mr. WARREN. And how much for the officers, if the Senator has it there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It would be $3,178,240.

Mr. WARREN. I think it ought to have been apparent to anybody that the carrying of this amendment greatly increased the expenses of the Army; and, of course, if we make a law that this allowance be paid we must appropriate the amount to meet the requirements of that law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is not any question about that, Mr. President. The National Guard is larger, of course, than the Regular Army; and if we are going to give those at home foreign-service pay, in the very nature of things it must follow that there must be an increase in the appropriation.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I have no objection to this legislation. I do not care personally. I have simply followed the law, and so has the committee, in undertaking to make these appropriations, just exactly as it exists to-day; that is, that there was to be an increase for foreign-service pay both for the officers and for the enlisted men. Now, if we change that and allow men in the continental United States foreign-service pay, it must follow that the appropriation will have to be increased. I am only suggesting to the Senate that in view of the action of the Senate just now we ought, in order to be just to these men, to increase the appropriation to meet the requirements.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think it is the duty of the chairman, in behalf of the committee, to enlarge the appropriation sufficiently to cover the legislation which precedes it. Doubtless the chairman will offer an amendment to cover this. We have now on Mexican soil perhaps nine or ten thousand men, and we have on the border on this side probably 180,000 or 140,000 or perhaps 150,000 men all told.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if we are to give added pay to the National Guard who are on American soil on the border, I will ask the chairman of the committee whether or not there will be a clamor for added pay from the National Guard who are in mobilization camps throughout the country? They have left their gainful occupations and are mobilized. The climate in which they are may be a little more healthful or it may not be as desirable. It seems to me that this will be a discrimination against the National Guard in the mobilization camps that will cause a fresh agitation. I should like the chairman's opinion on that point.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not any question but that requests will be made to Congress to grant it, Mr. President.

If I may do so in this connection, I think it is proper for me to say very briefly that as an economic proposition there is not any question but that there is very much of force and reason in the insistence that the National Guard ought to be paid more; but in making provision for extra pay for the National Guard we ought to bear in mind the fact that unless we make the same provision for the Regular Army, in the very nature of things we can not have a Regular Army. That is a fundamental proposition. I admit the small pay of these guardsmen. I admit the hardship that is perpetrated against their families because of their absence. It has been sought to alleviate that hardship by allowing those who have dependents to go home. Now, Mr. President, I appeal to such a distinguished soldier as George Washington to establish the fact that it is absolutely unwise and uneconomic to treat one branch of the service differently from any other branch of the service. If you treat the National Guard on better terms than you treat the Regular Army, you must abandon the Regular Army, because no man will enlist in it. On the other hand, if you treat the Regular Army better than you do the National Guard, the National Guard will go out of existence, because it has been said by abler men than I that a country can not defend itself on its patriotism. The patriotism of a people will not defend the people.

I am not protesting against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I cheerfully accept the proposition of the Senator; but I appeal to the Senate that it should treat all branches of the service upon terms of exact equality and justice.

Mr. President, I did not expect to have to refer to it, but I am going to refer to the statement of Washington on that subject and the difficulties which he encountered because of the fact that different branches of the service were being treated differently.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator claims that the amendment as now drawn will not apply to the Regular Army man serving on the Mexican border the same as it does to the militiaman serving on the Mexican border?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not the amendment before me, but I understood the amendment applied to the National Guard.

Mr. REED. I think it applies to all of them. I simply inserted in the language of the Senator's own amendment certain words which would include in the extra-pay premium those soldiers who are serving along the Mexican border under the orders of the President. I think he is discussing a question out of the record.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I am discussing out of the record, I have not departed very far from the example of my illustrious predecessor.

Mr. REED. I know that is true; I seldom keep in the record, but the chairman of the committee always keeps in the record.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I try to do so.

Mr. REED. Therefore I thought I was doing him a kindness if I asked him if the language—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it, and I will try to keep within the record. I hope the Senator will, too.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator's amendment is:

For additional 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service—

Mr. REED. That is your amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was trying to read it with the Senator's included. Here is your amendment:

or under the call of the President engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether serving within or without the United States, including enlisted men of the Organized Militia or National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States.

It seems to me that that is limited to the National Guard.

Mr. REED. If the chairman please, the purpose of the amendment that you offered was to furnish the additional pay for Regulars serving in the foreign service and for the National Guard sent into the foreign service. The Regulars already get it. You propose to include the Militia or the National Guard.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So that they will get it.

Mr. REED. Now, all my amendment does is, in substance, to say that anyone serving along the Mexican border shall be treated as in the foreign service.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Whether Regular or National Guardsman.

Mr. REED. I did not mean to limit the amendment so that it would cut out a Regular serving either north or south of the line, and I am perfectly willing to submit to any amendment the chairman may suggest that will clear that difficulty.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is barely possible that I am mistaken in the point I made that the Senator's amendment only applied to the National Guard. If it is the purpose of the Senator to include the Regular Army, I am not going to make any protest, but I think an increased appropriation will have to be made. I will suggest that later.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the chairman to tell us how much we need.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will.

Mr. REED. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 74, after line 5, I move to insert:

For the acquisition of land near or adjoining Fort Taylor at Key West, Fla., $150,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of War may deem necessary.

This was recommended. First an appropriation was made for additional land at Fort Taylor in 1906. At that time the department recommended $200,000, and $100,000 was appropriated. Since then for the fiscal year 1910 an estimate for an additional $150,000 was submitted and a recommendation was made, but no appropriation was made.

I have a letter from the Secretary of War to the effect that the acquisition of this land is necessary for military purposes, and it is estimated that the sum of $150,000 will be required to procure the land needed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. FLETCHER. The date of the letter is January 7, 1916.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator read the letter?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I will have it read.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator if that estimate was made through the Treasury Department in the regular way?

Mr. FLETCHER. It was not estimated for the year 1917, but it was estimated before and the department required this appropriation. I will state that Key West is a very important point. It is a tactical point. If an enemy should occupy Key West he would have complete control of the Gulf and it would be right close to Guantanamo and almost in the immediate vicinity of the Panama Canal. The department feels and has felt the necessity of this appropriation ever since 1906. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WARREN. The reason why I asked the Senator was, not along the lines he is pursuing, but in the division of the work of the Senate committees. When the military appropriation supply bill was taken from the Appropriations Committee and turned over to the Military Committee that committee retained, under Senate rules, for itself the consideration of all the enlargements and the extension of posts, except for shooting galleries and matters of drill of that kind. I wanted to see what this particular addition was for. It should have gone to the Committee on Appropriations for the sundry civil bill, but it is too late to put it there now.

I wish to know whether this is an emergency or if there is any reason why it should go in the bill this year.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do think it is. The people there think so and the department has thought that it is needed, and that it is a very important matter. I suppose myself that perhaps it belongs in the fortifications bill or the sundry civil bill, but it was not proposed in either of those bills, and not having been taken care of there I have offered it now. I find that the last appropriation for some additional land at Fort Taylor was in the act of March 2, 1907, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908. So it has appeared heretofore in this bill and I am following that precedent in offering the amendment at this time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator what is the extent of the work at that point. How large a garrison have we there, how much land have we, and what is the purpose in obtaining the land to be acquired?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is shown especially on a drawing which I have and which I am unable to describe in detail but I will hand it to the Senator. The area indicated in this map by the red is the present land owned there and the land intended to be covered by the amendment is that included in the red lines.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What I wanted to get at was the size of the post. What is the size of the post?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have a small garrison there now because they have not room and quarters for more. They need more.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. For an enlargement of the garrison?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the claim. There are strips of land between the present holdings that ought to be owned by the Government so as to make it a solid holding.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is a little curious to me, in view of the importance the Senator attaches to it, that this has not been taken care of before. I have understood that there is a very small garrison there that did not require very much room.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that in former days there were always two batteries of Artillery stationed there, and I do not believe they have quarters for a much larger force.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; and one of them has been withdrawn on account of the lack of facilities.

Mr. DU PONT. It was withdrawn for service on the Canal Zone, which has swept the Atlantic coast of its garrisons. So that the size of the garrison is no indicator of the importance of the post.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to read into the Record just one paragraph of the letter of the War Department which has been cited by the Senator from Florida giving the reason why an estimate was not furnished and, to my mind, a reason why, if this appropriation is made, it should go elsewhere:

In view of the impracticability of covering all military needs in the estimates submitted for a single fiscal year, and of the existence of other and more urgent necessities than the acquisition of additional land at Fort Taylor, no estimate for that purpose was submitted to Congress for the fiscal year 1915. It may be said, however, that the acquisition of this land is necessary for military purposes, and that it is estimated that the sum of $150,000 will be required to procure the additional land needed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to have the letter read or printed in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will ask for a division. I will first ask to have the letter read which I sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 7, 1916.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your letter of December 24, 1915, relative to the plans of the department as to the acquisition of additional land at Fort Taylor, Fla., I beg to inform you that for a number of years past it has been the view of the department that additional land should be acquired at that fort in order to permit the erection thereon of accommodations for the Artillery garrison for the coast fortifications at Key West.

As you are aware, the hurricane of 1909 destroyed so many of the buildings at Key West Barracks that it was necessary to reduce the garrison to one company, which is practically only a care-taking detachment for the armament. Under the adopted policy of the War Department, 6 of the 10 companies required to provide one manning detail for the fortifications at Fort Taylor should be composed of regular Coast Artillery troops and the remaining four companies of militia Coast Artillery troops. Because of the nature of the site at Fort Taylor and of the location of the batteries, it is impracticable to build a post on the present reservation at Fort Taylor, with due regard to its ultimate development for the complete regular garrison required.

Under date of December 15, 1906, an estimate was submitted for $200,000 for the purchase of land adjacent to Fort Taylor upon which to erect buildings for a Coast Artillery post. The amount appropriated, however, was but $100,000, which was found sufficient to acquire only the land shown in solid red on the accompanying tracing. To acquire the additional land needed, which is that outlined in red on the accompanying tracing, an estimate for an additional $150,000 was submitted for the fiscal year 1910, but no appropriation was made by Congress at that time or subsequently.

In view of the impracticability of covering all military needs in the estimates submitted for a single fiscal year, and of the existence of other and more urgent necessities than the acquisition of additional land at Fort Taylor, no estimate for that purpose was submitted to Congress for the fiscal year 1917. It may be said, however, that the acquisition of this land is necessary for military purposes, and that it is estimated that the sum of $150,000 will be required to procure the additional land needed.

Very sincerely,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. DU PONT. I desire to say that the conditions which existed then are very different from the conditions which exist to-day, and it seems to me important that this land should be purchased, because—

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator allow a question? What particular difference is there in the conditions now and when the letter was written?

Mr. DU PONT. When the letter was written the general feeling of lack of preparation, commonly known as "preparedness," had not made itself fully felt in the country.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator did not fail to notice the date of the letter.

Mr. DU PONT. The 7th of January.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The 7th of last January. Not such a great length of time has passed.

Mr. DU PONT. Not a great length of time, but the feeling had not reached its apogee at that date. I think a letter written to-day probably would be a little more earnest. Be this as it may, the fact remains that we have the fortifications; we have the guns mounted and no garrison to serve them, and no room to make proper accommodations for the quartering of the necessary troops. It seems to me to be a most unwise course to spend enormous sums for coast fortifications and then make no provision to meet the needs of those who are to garrison them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War stated in this letter that this additional land is needed there, that it is important it should be provided for, and that an estimate of $150,000 has been made for that purpose. I hope the Senate will allow it to go into conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the area? How many acres of land?

Mr. FLETCHER. I am unable to state the precise area. The drawing attached to the letter of the Secretary of War which I have here shows the situation. The present holding is in the shape of a small area disconnected by private holdings, and they wish to connect up the reservation so that it will be one solid body, and that they may utilize it as such.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator know how the Government happened to get into the possession of land situated in that way, with private holdings between the Government property?

Mr. FLETCHER. I really do not know how that happened. The department recommended an appropriation of $200,000 away back in 1906. Congress allowed only $100,000, and I presume they bought to that extent and had to quit. I do not know what else it was, but Congress allowed only $100,000, and the department has since recommended $150,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. It occurs to me that if the men who made that purchase were as wise as men ordinarily are they would have purchased a compact piece of land and not gone scattering around and purchased pieces disconnected with each other. I know nothing about it, however.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume they expected that an appropriation would be provided later so as to complete their plans, but it has never been done up to this time, and that is the object of the amendment I now offer. They recommended it in 1910, as I said, and they have since stated that it is necessary for their requirements there.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me a rather peculiar circumstance that we propose to appropriate $150,000 to buy land and do not know how much land we are going to buy.

Mr. FLETCHER. They know.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may be that is the way the Government does business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want the Senator to imagine that the department is as ignorant on that subject as I am. I can not state how much land they intend to buy. They furnished a diagram showing precisely what the land is, but I can not figure from that diagram the precise number of acres.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would not a telephone message to the department get us that information?

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly precisely what the area is that they require can be ascertained. Then, another thing. It may be that when they go to purchase this land if, as this amendment will allow them to do, they can procure what they need for less than $150,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, we do not expect that they will do that if we make an appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. If they find that they can get more for $150,000 than they at present contemplate, they will not use the additional amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. We need not anticipate that. We simply pay $150,000 for whatever land is mapped out on this chart.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am sure I can not say as to that; but they estimate that $150,000 will purchase the land which they need there. That is all I know about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have on several occasions tried to keep the deficit from becoming so large that it would swamp the Government, but I have not had great success in my former efforts, and I will content myself with what I have said on this matter. Of course, the amendment is subject to a point of order. I am not going to make it if the Senators having charge of the bill do not choose to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected after a division.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have had my clerk make an estimate as to the amount of increase necessary, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that while this change is being made in the law there is no reason why it should not apply to officers as well as the enlisted personnel. I am going to suggest an amendment applying the rule he has adopted with reference to enlisted men to the officers as well.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to the Senator putting that in now or putting it in in conference.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know whether we could do it in conference, because it changes the law. I think it had better be done here. I offer as an amendment what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it the same amendment that was agreed to?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; this applies to officers. I ask to have reconsidered the vote by which the former amendment was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out on page 27, lines 21 to 24, inclusive, and insert:

For additional 10 per cent increase of pay of officers on foreign service or under the call of the President engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether serving within or without the United States, including officers of the Organized Militia or National Guard, when called or drafted into the service of the United States, $3,178,240.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will state that I followed the exact language the Senator used in reference to the enlisted men, and that raised the appropriation from $500,000 to $3,158,240. That covers the official arm of the National Guard.

Mr. REED. The officers and men. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask a question of the chairman of the committee? Is it his interpretation of that language that it will give to the National Guard officers whether or not they are on the border foreign-service pay?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it covers them all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion that has gone on this morning. My impression was in the midst of that discussion that it was the object of the Senator from Missouri to give foreign-service pay to Regulars and National Guardsmen who were engaged in protecting the border.

Mr. REED. That was my purpose, and I think that is the language employed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am in entire accord with the purpose of the Senator from Missouri, but my impression is that this language will give foreign-service pay to National Guard officers and enlisted men who are still in their State camps.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am inclined to think so myself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think that was the object of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The amendment I prepared will not do it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me read it to the Senator. Here is the way the original amendment I suggested reads:

For additional 20 per cent increase of pay of officers on foreign service, including enlisted men of the Organized Militia or National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States.

That is the original amendment.

The Senator proposes to amend that so that it would read as follows:

For additional 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service or under the call of the President engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether serving within or without the United States, including enlisted men of the Organized Militia or National Guard when called or drafted into the service of the United States.

I think it covers all, Mr. President. I hardly thought that was the purpose of the Senator, but it does that.

Mr. REED. It was not my purpose to include all. I prepared the amendment in some haste, because the Senate will remember that the chairman of the committee had sent up an amendment written, I think, in pencil. I got hold of it and undertook to amend it by interlineation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We can probably fix it in conference.

Mr. REED. My sole purpose was to cover the members and officers of the National Guard who are actually called into the service along the Mexican border or in Mexico.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I suggest to the Senator instead of using the language "when called or drafted into the service of the United States" in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri we strike out those words and say "when engaged in such service along the border."

Mr. REED. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think Congress ought to make appropriations for these men, because all of them, even those who are in camp in their States, may be called to the border, and we ought to be prepared to meet their pay as well as if they are called to the border for service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true, and we probably ought to have the money ready if the troops that are still held back in the States are ordered to the border. I understood the purpose of the Senator from Missouri was to give foreign-service pay to National Guardsmen who are actually engaged in protecting the border. Will the chairman of the committee accept that amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Missouri accept an amendment to that effect?

Mr. REED. If I understand the amendment I accept it. There was some confusion and I could not quite hear the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If it is in order at this time, Mr. President, I move to strike out from the amendment as perfected by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri this language, "when called or drafted into the service of the United States," and to substitute therefor "when engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether within or without the United States."

The rest is a duplication of the language of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I think that is satisfactory. If it is not it can be remedied in conference. We both have the same object in view.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Missouri accepts this amendment, and that the Senator from New York offers it, because the more inclusive provision should be left in the bill.

There is no question that the men who are in camp in response to the call of the President are just as much taken away from their usual avocations and their capacity to earn money for themselves and their families as though they were on the Mexican border. There is not the slightest difference in the condition of those men, except that the men in the State camps have perhaps a little better climate. They have their home climate, and in some cases it is better and in some cases it is worse. While I understand the climate on the Rio Grande is hot in the afternoon, it is a dry heat and the men do not feel it as we perhaps feel the sultry conditions here in Washington.

But, however that may be, when a man answers the call of the President and gives up his business and suffers all the losses that are thereby incurred, so far as recompense is concerned, he ought to be liberally taken care of. I can not see the line of differentiation that is proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

While I am on my feet I want to challenge a statement made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] just now. He stated that any differentiation between services would kill one or the other service. Well, Mr. President, I do not know where he is quoting from Gen. Washington, because I know Gen. Washington has been misrepresented a great deal in reference to the militia question; but differentiation between services has not killed the National Guard of the United States, because they have been differentiated against more completely and more absolutely than has any other service that can be named. While every other service was paid, they were not paid. The passage of the new law of June 3, taking the place of the Dick bill, will hereafter give the guard for ordinary service a small pay. If you could possibly kill a service by not paying it, while you do pay other similar service, the Organized Militia would have been dead long ago. But if an institution or service has vitality in it; if it is American, it will live, and this service of citizen soldiery for the protection of this country is an American institution, and so has lived.

Senators on the other side talk about Americanism, and yet are they not opposing the most thoroughly American institution that we have, namely, that of an organized and disciplined militia, when they refuse to compensate that militia, or did so through the past years; and is not the committee opposing an American institution, standing as it does in opposition, wherever it gets a chance, to any compensation for these troops of a commensurate sort, and that in the face of the sacrifices these men are making?

Mr. President, I have here a copy of a bill which was introduced and passed in the other House, and which went to the Military Committee of the Senate on the 3d of July, providing for some support for the dependents of the National Guardsmen who have made all these sacrifices for the country. Whatever there may be that is awkward in this proposed amendment—leaving out the guard in the camps and putting in other members of the guard—it is all due to the committee refusing to act on that House bill.

The House bill was passed on the 1st of July, and, I believe, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate on the 3d of July. It is a well-balanced measure; it excludes all sort of extreme liberality, and it is limited to less money than Canada gives her soldiers; and yet the Committee on Military Affairs has seen fit to lock up that bill from that day to the present. That is where the real trouble is, Mr. President. Giving these men this 20 per cent increase is simply an attempt on the part of the Senate to get around the obstructions of the committee. The Senate does not necessarily want to increase the pay of the officers; it may be well to do so; but that is not the real object.

The real object is to do something—even if you only give to the enlisted man $5 more a month—to enable him to support his dependents at home.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did the House pass the bill?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It passed it overwhelmingly, and it has been locked up in the committee here since the 3d of July.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The House passed the bill by only two dissenting votes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. There were only two dissenting votes in the House of Representatives on this subject. It does not lie in the mouth of the committee or of its chairman to complain about any little irregularity in the action of this amendment, because the Senate has to catch at this legislation as it passes by, and, in amending it, may not be able to do the thing as completely and as smoothly as it was done in the House bill in providing for taking care of these dependents. So, Mr. President, I certainly hope that at an early date the committee will be liberal enough to give the Senate a chance to vote on that bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Maryland will permit me before he sits down, I desire to say that I have pending here an amendment to be voted on by the Senate which will provide for exactly what the House bill provides for, which bill was sent to the Committee on Military Affairs on the 3d of July. I propose to offer that proposition at an opportune time, when the Senate can have a chance to straighten out that very question.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I hope the Senator will secure the support of two-thirds of the Senate for that amendment. I believe that there is a very rapid improvement going on in the minds of Senators as to that subject.

Attention is proper, in this connection, to one other feature, Mr. President. Whenever you have a great citizen army or a great army of any kind, you have got to provide for the dependents when you call that army out. That is the universal experience in Europe, and it is inevitable. Of course, if you can have a small professional army, recruited from special classes, as is the Regular Army of the United States recruited; men of such relations in life that they have no dependents, there are no dependents to provide for when such men go to war. But that class is an extremely limited class in a prosperous country like the United States. That is why in our present military system the Regular Army can only go ahead 1,000 men a month. That is the reason why our present military system, so far as the Regular Army is concerned, is practically breaking down, except for the support it gets from the National Guard. Little by little it is coming home to the understanding of the American people that the great difference between a professional soldier, of whom we can get very few, and a citizen soldier, of whom we can get a many as we want, is that when you call the citizen soldier into the service of the country you have got to take care of his people at home. It is recognized by the General Staff of this country; it is recognized by everybody who knows anything about military economy; it is recognized in the law of every country of the world except the United States and Mexico, as I showed yesterday. Our neighbors on the north, the Canadians, are now paying their enlisted men $1.10 a day on the average, with an additional allowance of $20 a month for the maintenance of their dependent families.

Mr. WARREN. What is the regular pay of the Canadian soldier?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am not able to inform the Senator further than as shown in the report, which is in the RECORD, to which I referred yesterday, as having been received from our consul general at Ottawa.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think those soldiers are receiving the same pay or higher pay or lower pay than are the American soldiers?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The average enlisted man in the Canadian Army receives $1.10 a day, with an additional allowance of $20 a month for his dependents.

Mr. WARREN. Does he receive that in money? Does he receive it in cash, aside from his subsistence?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. This report does not specify how he receives it, but I presume the $1.10 and the $20 are received in cash. Of course, in addition to that, his complete equipment and maintenance are furnished by the Government, as is the case with all soldiers.

Mr. WARREN. I have not the matter before me to which the Senator refers, but I think the Senator will find upon investigation that that statement is not exactly accurate.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am absolutely certain, Mr. President, that that statement is correct.

Mr. WARREN. For instance, the amount which the French Government gives its soldiers for use of their dependent families is $6 a month, with a few pennies more for each minor child.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Of course, the Senator knows that the standards of living in Europe are different from what they are in Canada and the United States. That is exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. WARREN. Canada is under the same Government as England, and matters in Canada differ from matters in the United States quite a bit.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Well, if the Canadian standard of living is lower than that in the United States, it would imply that our soldiers should get even better pay than the Canadians. All I am asking or suggesting, and all that the bill which passed the House, in which the Military Committee of the Senate, of which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is so distinguished a member, have locked up since the 3d of July, provides for is only $50 a month.

Mr. WARREN. Well, the figure of speech of "locking up the bill" is entirely unnecessary. The bill is in committee, as are hundreds of other bills. Has the Senator from Maryland figured what paying $50 a month would amount to, and how long $1,000,000 would last? The bill comes over here with $2,000,000 in it, and it is stated that that sum possibly might last 30 days, and it might last for a shorter time than that.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I read here yesterday an interview, which purported to come from Gen. Funston, in which he stated 3,000 as being the number of men who may soon be excused by him from service by reason of having dependents; but I do not know that that is accurate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. REED. I wanted to answer the question as I understood it, though I could not hear very accurately what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] asked. As I understood, it was whether the pay of the soldiers included their subsistence. I have here the regulations of the British Army, from which I read this:

The soldier will himself be rationed in kind, or will draw the usual ration allowance, now 1 shilling and 9 pence a day.

In respect to his family he will draw the same allowance at the rate shown for separate allowance, without allotment in Table A, paragraph 2.

I have already put into the Record this morning the pay that is given to the families; and in the case of Canada the pay given the men is $20 a month, an additional allowance for service in the field, and, in addition to that, a stipend for the wife and an additional stipend for each child. I have not the figures in my mind, but they run approximately from $4 to $6.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator from Missouri the basic pay of a private which is paid in cash in addition to all of his allowances?

Mr. REED. I put in the Record this morning a letter from a Canadian officer in reference to that matter. I think there is no doubt in the world—

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Missouri remember what it was? If he stated it, I might have been out of the Chamber.

Mr. REED. Twenty dollars a month was the basic pay. Then, in addition to that, were these other sums. I do not think there can be any error about it. I am not one of the cocksure men when dealing with information which I get in that way.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be glad to look the matter up in the Record, as the Senator has put it in.

Mr. REED. I shall be glad to hand the Senator, if he desires me to do so, this book of regulations.

Mr. WARREN. I will say while on my feet, responding to a statement made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] in regard to my being on the Military Committee—the committee having locked the bill up, and so forth—that I have always felt in legislation, as in private business, that if you are going to purchase a bill of goods you should provide the method of paying for it, and if you are inaugurating a rule or law to create a certain expense you should provide for that expense.

A few moments ago, following the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, I asked the chairman to take notice of the necessity for an increase of the appropriation because of the change in the law as to the pay and as to officers and that he offer an amendment increasing the appropriation for extra pay for officers, as he will undoubtedly do concerning the pay of the men, the appropriation for which may probably have to be increased to perhaps $15,000,000.

In regard to the House bill to which the Senator referred, when that bill came to the Senate providing an allowance of $50 a month to the dependent families of soldiers called into service—which, of course, is more than any other country ever thought of paying—it only provided a total appropriation of $2,000,000 for that purpose. The sum was utterly inadequate. That was one difficulty with that bill.

Then came the order of the War Department—sent to all the generals, I understand—that soldiers with families should be excused from service. The committee thought it was necessary to find what the effect of that order would be and whether all of the soldiers with families would retire to their homes, leaving in the service only single soldiers, or whether a certain number of soldiers with dependents would remain in the service; but the facts have to be ascertained in order that when the measure may come up a sufficient appropriation can be provided to carry out the purposes in view.

We could not do it offhand in the way the matter came from the House. The Senator will realize that if he will reflect a moment. We have to know as nearly as we can what percentage of soldiers with dependent families are going to remain in the service. We have been getting information along that line. I myself have been in correspondence with several responsible authorities about it. On the other hand, as I have said, the House bill only provided an appropriation of $2,000,000, when the actual amount required would be nearer $200,000,000. I do not give that, of course, as the exact sum, but it would be nearer that than it would be $2,000,000.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the communication from our consul general at Ottawa, Canada, to the State Department, which is found in yesterday's Record, at page 13229, showing a payment of $1.10 per diem to the privates, including, of course, clothing, equipment, and maintenance, and in addition a separation allowance of $20 a month to the dependent families of the soldiers.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to ask what pensions are paid in case of the death of the soldier, or whether there are any such pensions provided?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not know, and that is something that we are not interested in now. We are dealing with conditions that create an army during a war. We are looking to making a force for a purpose, and we are not dealing with the question of national gratitude after the war is over. That is entirely a different proposition.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, I had always supposed before this discussion arose that patriotism counted for something in the matter of enlistment in the Army. It seems now from the discussion that enlistment is entirely a matter of dollars and cents. I protest against any such view as that.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I desire to place as large a negative as I can possibly express against the statement of the Senator from Minnesota. He served four years in the Civil War, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] has just suggested to me aside, and he is entitled to the grateful congratulations of his countrymen for that service; but, Mr. President, when he comes here and says a man's duty to his country in a comparatively insignificant trouble involves his leaving his family at home without support, then he is putting himself up against the ties of the human heart, the ties of manly duty and obligation in a way that places the Senator for the moment outside of the class in which he generally stands.

Mr. President, as I said a little while ago—I believe before the Senator from Minnesota entered the Chamber—in dealing with questions affecting the citizen soldiery or large armies, we have got to make provision for the dependents at home. Wars nowadays can not be fought as they used to be by boys and tramps. War is a wholesale procedure under modern conditions, and for that reason it is necessary to make preparation upon a wholesale basis.

The bill to which the Senator from Wyoming has referred, which passed the House and came over here and went to the Committee on Military Affairs on the 3d of July—and if the Senator does not like my using the expression "locked up," I will withdraw that and say "unacted upon," so far as the Record discloses. That bill was an emergency measure; that bill called for immediate consideration by the Senate committee; it was a bill which the experience of all the military nations of the world approved; it was a bill that should have commended itself to the Military Affairs Committee in the interest of preserving the discipline of the National Guard on our frontier. The committee must well recognize that to have this man and that man excused from duty on an allegation that he can present himself is not good discipline for any force; and the United States, having enlisted these men, having accepted them after examination, having placed them in camps, having mustered them into the Federal service, having permitted them to take the new oath as militiamen, having sent them to the border, and paid the expense of that trip, the Committee on Military Affairs and the United States Senate are in no position to say that those men can be economically, properly, or in any military sense rightfully sent home, providing, of course, their families and dependent ones are taken care of.

The Senator from Wyoming has questioned the adequacy of the amount provided in the House bill. Gen. Funston's figures indicate that from three to six thousand men would probably have to be sent home under the order releasing men with dependent families; but suppose we allow 10 per cent of the members of the guard now on the Mexican border—and I imagine that would be ample—and granting the full allowance made by the House bill in each case of $50 a month, the total amount required would be only $500,000 a month, or $1,500,000 for three months, which is well within the limit provided for by the House bill. Obviously this matter has not received the attention at the hands of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs which as an emergency bill it should have received.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OWEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs is a somewhat ancient committee of this body, and has generally been credited with doing its duty as well as other committees do theirs. It considered its duty in this instance to be thoroughly acquainted with the conditions—I am speaking for myself, but I know others felt the same way about it—and when the bill, or a joint resolution, came over to the Senate—for if I remember correctly it was a joint resolution—appropriating $2,000,000, we had no information then as to what amount of money it would take for the purposes covered by the proposed legislation. We have been seeking information since. That measure has neither been locked up nor pigeonholed, but the question is under examination, and information is being sought. We will know better after the pending bill is passed what it is necessary to do with that bill.

Of course, Gen. Funston does not give the number of married men in the guard as 10 per cent, as the Senator puts it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Much less than that; he does not make it more than 3 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. I think the number is very much greater than that. Not only that, but many changes have occurred. For instance, the National Guard organizations now in camp are filling up to war strength, and only single men are taken; they are excusing the married men and reducing in that way, and properly so, the dependent families who might be calling for help.

Nobody was starving, and there was no reason why we should, between 6 o'clock and half past 6, seize that resolution providing an appropriation of $2,000,000—which would last only a half a month or a month, or possibly two months—and pass it at once. I could see no reason for that, and I doubt if the Senator can give us any.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator from Wyoming can refer to the present enlistments, which are not made up of men with dependents, as relieving the committee of the responsibility of bringing in a bill which the House had so overwhelmingly passed for the relief of the men with dependents who had been previously enlisted and sent to the border. The matter is one that nobody can estimate, Mr. President, because there are no records, so far as I have been able to ascertain, in the War Department or anywhere else, showing the number of enlisted men in the National Guard who have dependent families. There is no way of getting at this thing, except to make inquiry in given commands and to try to ascertain upon inquiry here and there what percentage of the men have dependent families.

I believe, Mr. President, as I have already stated the fact on the floor, that I am probably the only man in this body who has made any such inquiry or attempted to make any such inquiry. I found that it ran somewhere along about 10 or 15 or 20 per cent, varying according to the different commands. In some commands there were practically no men with dependent families, while in others there were a great many men with dependents; and one of the remarkable features of it was the large number of noncommissioned officers—who are the backbone of any company or regiment—who have dependent families. This is a matter which ought to have been attended to by the committee promptly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator gives himself credit—and I do not object to that—that he is the only man who has done certain things.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have tried to do them.

Mr. WARREN. The committee had been seeking that information, and are probably as well advised as is the Senator. The Senator is so well advised that he can only give the percentage as varying somewhere between 10 and 20 per cent.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Precisely; but when you have an emergency proposition like this, if you are opposed to doing something, you will sit down and wonder about the percentages; but if you want to do something, you will put through the bill that the House put through and let the future take care of itself.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is no question of emergency about it. It is with regard to the pay of the Army. You might call this whole bill an emergency measure. However, the Senator sees an emergency in everything that does not agree with his particular idea. He ought to be liberal enough to recognize that different Senators might have different minds about the same subject.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I will submit to this body whether the question of excusing from 10 to 20 per cent of the enlisted force of an army on a frontier and telling them that they can go home with honorable discharges under present circumstances is not one of the most extraordinary propositions that has ever been advanced with reference to an army in the field, and whether when such an extraordinary proposition is pending it is not an emergency question to be handled promptly by the military authorities of the country and the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate?

Mr. President, I have averred, without the slightest fear of responsible contradiction, that the returning home of these men, as so many of them have had to return home, for domestic reasons, because of the pull upon their hearts, due to the condition of their families, has had a demoralizing and must have a very demoralizing effect upon the discipline of the commands which were involved. That difficulty should have been provided for promptly; that situation should have been grappled with; and I regret very much that the committee has seen fit to keep back the House bill for this length of time without reporting it to the Senate one way or the other and giving the Senate a chance to act upon it.

I believe, Mr. President, that the public sentiment of this country is being aroused on this subject, and it is a great, fundamental one. It is not only a question of attending to the needs of the National Guard on the frontier to-day but it is a great, fundamental question that will go right down through our history: Are you going to have any citizen soldiery or not? If you do not want a citizen soldiery, of course, then you will naturally say to every American with any obligations that he can not be a soldier, because you will not take care of his family when he is ordered into the field. Failing to provide for these dependents is not only a blow at the National Guard and its discipline but it is a blow at the whole system of citizen soldiery, upon which this Republic should now and hereafter depend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to give notice that I reserve this amendment for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, has the increased appropriation been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The $3,000,000 appropriation has been.

The SECRETARY. Three million one hundred and seventy-eight thousand two hundred and forty dollars.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is for the officers. Now, turning to the appropriation for the enlisted personnel, on page 28, from lines 1 to 4, I desire to have that language modified by inserting the language just adopted on motion of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment having been adopted by the Senate heretofore, without objection, it will be reconsidered and, without objection, will be agreed to as modified.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The appropriation there now is $1,000,000. That contemplated the 20 per cent increase of pay of enlisted men while on foreign service. In view of the amendment which has been adopted, that amount will be wholly insufficient to meet the requirements; and I desire to move to reconsider that and to offer as an amendment the insertion of "$1,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000"; and where the words appear above, "called or drafted into the service of the United States," it is proposed to insert "when engaged in protecting the Mexican border, whether within or without the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the item will be reconsidered and agreed to as proposed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to say, in reference to this, that I doubt very much the wisdom of the proposition; but the Senate has seen fit to adopt these amendments, and for that reason I am suggesting these increases of appropriation, because without the increases the provisions which have been adopted by the Senate could not be carried out. That is my purpose in proposing an increase in these appropriations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I spoke to the Senator from Oregon, in charge of the bill, in regard to cases in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army. There are some cases where members of the Medical Reserve who hold Government positions are ordered out, and I think they ought to have the same protection which is extended to members of the National Guard who hold Government positions, as provided on page 13 by the House bill. All I wanted to ask, the Senator having kindly said that he would be willing to take it into conference and consider it, is to insert on line 8, page 13, after the words "National Guard," the words "and of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 8, after the words "National Guard," it is proposed to insert "and of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the committee amendment as amended and agreed to, on page 9, lines 17 to 23, following the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to add the following paragraph:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for the United States of America, the land formerly leased to the United States for aviation purposes at College Park, Md., and such other land adjacent thereto as in the discretion of the Secretary of War may be necessary for use by the United States for aviation maneuvers and other military purposes; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for said purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, this was a proposition offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to its going in and being given consideration in conference.

This property has been leased by the Government for aviation purposes. It is considered, by those who know it, as one of the most desirable tracts for that purpose; and this amendment only asks that it be looked into and acquired by condemnation or by purchase. It is within 30 minutes of Washington, where the demonstrations can be seen by Members of the House and of the Senate; and I think it is a matter that should receive the serious consideration of the conference committee. I hope it will not be objected to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether the department has recommended an appropriation for the purchase of this land?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; there has been no recommendation of the kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Has it been considered by the committee at all?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not this particular tract; no.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the Senator from Maryland if he does not think that, if the department wanted to purchase this land, they would have called it to the attention of the committee and would have made an estimate for it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has been called to the attention of the committee, and, as I understand—I will not say positively—I think the department, or at least some members of the department, have favored it. I do not know. The conference committee can look into it and find out. It has been leased by the Government for that purpose, and I feel that it is a matter that should be considered by the conference committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it leased at the present time by the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know whether it is or not. It has been leased for quite a while by the Government. I do not know whether they have it now or not; but it has been leased by the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Maryland simply asks that it go to conference. From the statement made, I do not think the conference committee will agree to leave it in. If I did think so, I would make a point of order against it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Let them consider it.

Mr. SMOOT. But at the request of the Senator I will not make the point of order against it, although I am quite sure it ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I spoke to the chairman of the committee about a proposed amendment, to which I think there is no objection. Yesterday provision was made for paying the transportation of soldiers who had gone to the front and there had been mustered out. I think we ought to make the same provision for those members of the militia who have been sent to the front and then were mustered out after the order was made by the War Department to the effect that married men or men who had families dependent upon them could be mustered out. I think those men should also have their transportation home paid. Where they have dependent families and the families are in need, the cases are quite numerous where these men have not money to pay their transportation home. For that purpose I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I think probably should go at the end, after the word "War," in line 6, on page 39.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 6, after the word "War," and before the semicolon, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following words:

Provided further, That when members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States have been discharged under the order of the War Department which provides that members of the National Guard with dependent families may be mustered out, transportation from their position on the Mexican border to their homes may be authorized by the Secretary of War.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know whether that is just the place where it ought to go or whether it ought to follow one of the amendments of yesterday, which I have not been able to find; but the conference committee can arrange that as it sees proper.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 23, and after the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint and place on the retired list of the Army, with the rank of major general, any officer on the retired list who served not less than one year in the regular or volunteer forces of the United States during the Civil War prior to April 9, 1865, and who was honorably discharged therefrom, who has since served not less than 40 years as a commissioned officer of the Regular Army and who was the last Civil War veteran on the active list of the Army for over two years before retirement and had ranked every general officer on the active list in length of service when he retired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

All qualified voters of the United States who shall be in actual military service of the United States, as part of the Organized Militia or Volunteer Army, on the days duly appointed by law for the choice of electors of President and Vice President of the United States and for Members of Congress of the United States, shall be entitled to exercise the right of suffrage for said officers at the several posts, camps, and places where the regiment, battery, or artillery, or part of a regiment not less than one company, or part of a company under a separate command, may be, on said days, as fully as if such voters were present at the places in their respective States where such elections may be held and where such person would be entitled to vote; any provisions of law now in force to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That this section shall not extend to or include any person in the Regular or Standing Army of the United States.

To carry into effect the provisions of this section, elections may be held at the several posts, camps, or places in said section mentioned in the manner following: The vote shall be taken by companies. The three ranking officers in each company, troop of Cavalry, or battery of Artillery shall act as judges of election to preside at the elections held under the provisions of this act. In case of the absence, inability, or refusal to act of any of said officers, their duties as such judges shall be performed by the officers next in rank. The officer highest in rank so acting in such company, troop, or battery shall be chairman of the board of judges and shall act as moderator at the election. Said judges shall appoint a qualified voter of the company to act as clerk. The judges of election of each company shall make a canvass and statement of the result in writing of the votes cast by such company, troop, or battery as hereinafter provided. The regimental and staff officers of each regiment shall be entitled to vote at the polls opened in any company of the regiment in which they belong.

Previous to receiving any ballots said judges and clerks shall severally take an oath or affirmation that they will support the Constitution of the United States and that they will perform their duties according to the law and will studiously endeavor to prevent all fraud, deceit, or abuse in conducting the election. This oath or affirmation shall be subscribed by the person taking the same, and may be administered by either of said judges, and shall be returned with the result of the election as hereinafter provided.

The polls of the election shall be open at such an hour as the judges of election, or a majority of them, shall determine, and shall be closed at an hour determined upon by majority vote of the voters present, provided that time shall be given for all voters in the company, troop, or battery to vote, and that notice of the time of closing the polls shall be given at least one hour before the closing of the same.

Each ballot cast at the election held under the provisions of this act shall have upon the same the name of the person voting and the name of the town, ward, precinct, and State and county in which he is entitled to vote; and the judges shall refuse to receive any ballot not thus prepared. Each ballot shall also have printed or written upon it the person or persons voted for, with a pertinent designation of the office which he or they may be intended to fill. The ballot thus prepared shall be upon one piece, and all the ballots of one company, troop, or battery shall be deposited in one box, and it shall be the duty of the judges to be satisfied that each person offering to vote would be entitled to vote in the town, ward, precinct, county, and State which is shown upon the ballot. It shall also be the duty of each of said judges, and the privilege of each voter, to object to the right of any person offering to vote when he shall know or have reason to suspect or believe that such person is not a qualified voter; and to every person whose right is thus objected to one of the judges shall administer an oath that he will true and full answer make to all questions touching his residence and qualifications as a voter, and such questions shall be put and proceedings had as may be deemed advisable by said judges, and the case of each person shall be decided by a majority of the judges. It shall be the duty of said judges to provide suitable places or booths wherein such voter may prepare his vote in private; before entering such booth the voter shall be supplied with a ballot of each political party containing the names of the presidential electors and candidates for Senator and Representative in the Congress to be voted upon in his respective district; immediately upon receipt of such ballots such voter shall enter the booth provided, and as soon as he has prepared his ballot shall deposit it in the box provided for such purpose, the ballots not used by him shall be returned to the judges of election. The Secretary of the Senate of the United States shall seasonably prepare and have printed all necessary blank forms to carry out the provisions of this act and furnish the same to the commanding officers of each company, troop, or battery.

The clerk shall keep correct lists containing the names of the voters and their respective places of residence, which lists shall be certified by the judges, or a majority of them, and by the clerk to be correct. After the polls are closed the judges shall canvass the ballots cast and shall make a statement of the result in writing. A copy of such canvass and statement duly certified to be correct by the judges or a majority of them, and by the clerk, shall be transmitted as soon as practicable to the governor of the State wherein such company is entitled to vote, a copy shall also be transmitted to the secretary of such State, a copy shall also be transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and a copy shall be transmitted to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States. The said judges shall also cause all the ballots cast to be sealed up and duly transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate of the United States. The aforesaid statements, lists, and ballots shall be examined and the votes counted as if duly cast within the respective precincts, wards, towns, counties, and States of the voters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I make the point of order against the proposed amendment, first, that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. REED. I think the point is well taken. I spoke to the chairman of the committee about this amendment, and I had hoped that he would let this go to conference. It puts no burden upon the Government. It takes no money from the Government. It is the only chance to give these men an opportunity to vote.

I say frankly to the chairman of the committee that I have not had time to make that exhaustive examination which I should like to make to determine whether the law can be made effective without the aid of State statutes. Such examination as I have been able to make leads me to the conclusion that it is within the power of Congress to pass the act. I hope the chairman will let the amendment go in and go before the conference committee, and I shall then submit to the conferees a brief on the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator is speaking on the amendment to grant the right of suffrage to the guardsmen at the front?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a great interest in that, Mr. President. I took up the matter with myself some weeks ago, but, not having a knowledge of law, I consulted some of my associates on this side of the Chamber and asked them to work it out for me, which they promised to do, but they did not do it. I was greatly delighted to see that the Senator from Missouri had undertaken that task and had prepared what, I apprehend, is a provision that will meet the requirements of the case.

These young men ought to be permitted to vote at the front if they can not go to their homes. The Northern States legislated during the Civil War, giving the soldiers the right to vote for State officers, and it was exercised, and no harm came to anyone. I hope the amendment may be allowed to go to conference.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Missouri that I told him when he mentioned this matter to me that the general proposition involved in his amendment met with my approval, and I hoped that we might even go further a little later on and arrange so that Senators and Representatives and traveling men who have fixed homes and families might have the law so framed that they might all be able to vote without going two or three thousand miles. But the vice of this thing—and what I object to about it—is that it is injecting into the bill that same discrimination against the Regular Army. I am willing to let this amendment go in if the Senator will eliminate that part of it, but I am absolutely opposed upon principle to consenting to any discrimination against the Regular Army.

Let me call the Senator's attention to this fact: I know the son of a Senator of the United States who is serving in the United States Army as an enlisted man. I know half a dozen young men in my own State who were not able to go to West Point, and the ambition of their lives was to win a commission in the Army, and they enlisted in the Army. Why should those young men be discriminated against, Mr. President. That is the reason why I oppose this.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope that the chairman of the committee will not deny these citizens who are temporarily absent from their homes the right to vote because the right is not conferred upon the soldier of the Regular Army. Now, let me point to two things very briefly.

First, I question whether the soldier in the Regular Army has any residence except in the Army. He enters the Army for a given period of time. He understands when he goes in that he takes himself out of civil life. I think you would arouse in this country a great deal of fear if you proposed to give the ballot to the professional soldier.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator mean to contend that the officers and men of the Regular Army are disfranchised by being in the Army?

Mr. REED. I did, in effect, make that statement, but the Senator is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course the right of suffrage is procured from the several States, and if an enlisted man or an officer in the Army comes within the qualifications prescribed by the law of his own State he is a voter in his State, and if he can get to the polls on election day he can vote. He has the voting privilege; he is not disfranchised because he entered the service.

Mr. REED. To all practical effects and purposes he is disfranchised because he is away and not at home.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, in practice, in the Navy particularly, the officers and men have not the capacity of voting, because they are not in the places where they have the right to vote, but there are men—I know of cases—stationed in my State both in the Army and Navy who have been there long enough to get a residence or perhaps were residents of the State before and who have exercised the franchise. I am sure they are not disfranchised anywhere; that is, if they comply with the qualifications of the voters in the States of which they are residents. Many of them do not have those qualifications.

Mr. REED. They very seldom vote.

Mr. LODGE. Very seldom.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They are in exactly the same position as the National Guard down in Texas. The Senator wants to correct the inability in the case of the National Guard. I think it ought to be corrected in the case of the Regular Army soldier also.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture a suggestion, and I will withdraw it if it does not appeal to the Senator from Missouri or other Senators. It is that the proviso should read:

Provided, That this section shall not extend to or include any person in the Regular Standing Army of the United States unless the name of such person is on the voting list of his place of legal residence.

Most of these soldiers have no legal residence, they do not claim to have, and they never have asked the privilege of having their names placed on what we call in the North the check list; it may pass by some other name in other parts of the country; but if they have a legal residence they ought certainly to be permitted to vote.

Mr. REED. What does the Senator suggest?

Mr. GALLINGER. My suggestion is that the proviso should read:

This section shall not extend to or include any person in the Regular Standing Army of the United States unless the name of such person is on the voting list of his place of legal residence.

Mr. REED. I accept that amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Pardon me a moment. I respectfully suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that that amendment is not necessary under the first line of the amendment, because it provides "that all qualified voters of the United States who shall be in the actual military service of the United States," and so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very likely that does cover it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So if that provision were eliminated entirely it places all in the same line, and that is all we want to do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that is the fact, I cordially withdraw the amendment I suggested.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I should like to make a statement and then I will yield. My attention has just been called to section 10190 of the General Code which provides that—

Nothing therein shall be construed to prevent any officer, soldier, sailors, or marine from exercising the right of suffrage in any election district to which he may belong, if otherwise qualified according to the laws of the State in which he offers to vote.

That, of course, makes it perfectly clear.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then withdraw the proviso.

Mr. REED. I withdraw the proviso from this amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me suggest to the Senator, in this connection, that his amendment is limited to the Organized Militia or the Volunteer Army of the United States. If the Senator would make it consistent he should strike out the words "as part of the Organized Militia or Volunteer Army."

Mr. GALLINGER. By striking out the words "as part of the Organized Militia or Volunteer Army" it would include all qualified voters of the United States who shall be in the actual military service.

Mr. REED. I will ask the clerks at the desk to strike out those words.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," in line 2, page 1, strike out the comma and the words "as part of the Organized Militia or Volunteer Army," and the colon, so as to read:

All qualified voters of the several States of the United States who shall be in actual military service of the United States on the days duly appointed by law for the choice of electors, etc.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to suggest this to the Senator from Missouri: What is a qualified voter of the United States?

Mr. REED. He would be a man who would be qualified under the laws of the State in which he proposes to vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think that is proper language to describe that status. It seems to me it should read "all qualified electors of the several States."

Mr. REED. If the Senator suggests that as an amendment to the amendment, I have no objection to it. It conveys my idea.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the word "voters," in line 1, and insert the words "electors of the several States," so as to read "all qualified electors of the several States of the United States who shall be in actual military service," and so on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the point of order is withdrawn. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as modified.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to say that while I am perfectly willing to let this go to conference if it be the wish of the Senator from Missouri, I think that there are many things left in it that are undetermined and ambiguous. I think it is very hastily drawn, but if the conference committee are going to give it their attention and consult with the Judge Advocate General of the Army about it and then submit some modification of it, well and good. I should not want to give my consent to it as it stands, but I do not wish to waste time now to call attention to quite a number of ambiguities and defects in the amendment. It does not provide for the furnishing of ballot boxes. It does not—

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will not object, but let it go through, and if there are some things necessary to perfect it he will suggest them to the conferees.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I may not be admitted to the conference between the two Houses. I may not have a chance to suggest them to the conferees. I simply want to say there are quite a number of defects in the amendment. It does not provide as to the type of ballots, or what names shall be printed on the ballots, or whether they shall be of uniform type or of different kinds. It leaves to the voters themselves at the voting places the decision by a majority vote as to how long the polls shall be kept open. It is defective in the provision for the swearing in of election officials. There are 20 suggestions that I would want to make if the Senate were passing it in a final state, but I am willing to let it go to conference as it is, without making a point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. On page 36, after line 12, I move to insert:

Provided, That $250,000 of the appropriation provided for in this paragraph shall be expended in the purchase of material and the construction of tent floors, framing for screens, and screens, to be added to the equipment of the tents now being used by the National Guard on the Mexican border.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator if that increases the appropriation?

Mr. WEEKS. The appropriation should be increased, and I will suggest that the figures be changed so as to cover the amount expended for this purpose. The regular troops serving on the border have tent floors which they purchased out of their company funds, but one of the greatest troubles that men on the border have is due to the fact that they sleep on the ground and there are a good many insects that are troublesome might be avoided if they had floors; and it would be very much cleaner, their clothing could be kept cleaner. There are no screens to prevent flies and mosquitoes from troubling them which would be the case in many places.

This is not a large appropriation. I have had an estimate made by the Quartermaster's Department that for 100,000 men the flooring, framing, and screening could be provided by expending $242,000. It seems to me that this will add sufficiently to the comfort of those men to well warrant the expenditure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And to the sanitation.

Mr. WEEKS. And to the sanitation as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I move that the figures on page 35, line 11, be increased $250,000.

The SECRETARY. Change the total sum "$12,000,000" so as to read "$12,250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, my attention has been called to the situation which arises by the discharge of the men in the National Guard. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether there is any provision in the bill for an appropriation which can be used for paying the expenses back home of the men who are discharged because they have dependents?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; there was an amendment adopted this morning for that purpose. Then there was another amendment adopted yesterday providing pay for the transportation of men who have been discharged on the border for physical unfitness.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And those who are invalided and sent home?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. My attention has been drawn to the fact that the funds provided in the fortification appropriation act are available until expended. Last year's fortification bill did not contain this prohibition affecting the Taylor system, over which we had a little contention yesterday. This year's fortification bill, which was approved by the President on July 6, did contain this language. The Chief of Ordnance is still operating the very features of the system at the Watertown Arsenal prohibited by the language.

It seems to me that it is manifestly unjust and it is vitiating and destroying the act of Congress. In order to prevent this possibility, I desire, on page 90, line 21, after the word "act," to insert "or any other act shall be hereafter available."

And then, on page 91, line 2, after the word "this," to insert "or any other act be hereafter available."

My point is that the money that the Secretary of War may have as an unexpended balance shall not be used to vitiate or violate the principle we followed in abolishing the Taylor system.

Mr. GALLINGER. How much is the unexpended balance, I will ask the Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not state that, but evidently the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] knows.

He cited the Watertown Arsenal. There is no doubt the Taylor system was there in vogue, and it has been kept in vogue.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. OWEN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that on page 90, line 21, he is dealing with an amendment which appears to have been stricken from the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; but the Senate yesterday corrected that. The Senate committee amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand the Senator—and I will, by way of parenthesis, suggest that this unexpended balance can not be very large—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not say, for I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. No great harm would come from allowing that to stand; but I understand the Senator now proposes to amend an act already passed.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I took the act as it now reads:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made in this act or any other act shall be hereafter available.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment changes the existing law, and it goes out on a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment. On page 14, after line 5, I move to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the proportion of privates of first class to privates in the Signal Corps and in the Medical Department may be the same as the proportion of privates first class to privates now authorized by law in the Quartermaster Corps.

I see no reason why in the Medical Service or the Signal Service that might not be done. At all events, I think the conference committee might with propriety consider it so as to give a uniform right to the different corps in regard to the employment of first-class privates as compared to privates.

I should like to have inserted in the RECORD for the information of the conference committee a table showing the relative ratios in the Signal Corps, the Quartermaster Corps, and the Medical Corps.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The amendment changes the act of June 3, 1916, and I do not think it ought to be inserted here without having been called particularly to the attention of the committee. Offhand, I will say that it would increase the force of the Medical Corps from 25 to 45 per cent of the privates of the first class. I do not think that ought to be done. I will state to the Senator that the Medical Corps has been more generously provided for than almost any other corps in the service, and I do not think this ought to be done without very thorough and careful attention.

Mr. OWEN. Might I ask the chairman of the committee why the Quartermaster's Department is permitted to have 45 per cent of first-class privates as compared with the employees in the corps, and why the medical service should be denied that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Quartermaster Corps is a very much more active corps than the Medical Corps. I do not recall now what animated the committee in making the difference in apportionment as to these different corps, but we went over it very carefully. We went over it after hearing each of the different corps, and the results of our deliberations were embodied in the act of June 3, 1916.

If this change is going to be made on the floor of the Senate, I think it would be a mistake. I think it ought to go to the committee and let the committee have an opportunity to consider the whole matter in conjunction with the other corps.

Mr. OWEN. I only thought, Mr. President, that the matter might be considered by the conferees, and if it did have merit, they might dispose of it in accordance with what would seem to be the best policy of the service. I do not personally know what the argument is which justifies 45 per cent for the Quartermaster Corps and a very much smaller sum for the Medical Corps. I had thought that the service in the medical department a more important service, as it deals with the health of the soldiers than merely the Quartermaster Corps, which deals with material substances that are not quite as important as the health of the men.

There must be some reason for it that I do not know about, or perhaps there may be no reason for it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to let it go in and be considered in conference.

Mr. OWEN. I thought that course might be well, and if it is not well founded let it go out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the matter indicated by the Senator from Oklahoma will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Signal Corps.

[Par. 13, p. 12, act June 3, 1916.]

Per cent.

Master signal electricians	2
Sergeants, first class	7
Sergeants	10
Corporals	20

The number of privates, first class, shall not exceed 25 per cent of the number of privates.

Privates, first class	15
Privates	46

Quartermaster Corps.

[Sec. 9, p. 6, act June 3, 1916.]

Per cent.

Quartermaster sergeants, senior grade	0.5
Quartermaster sergeants	6
Sergeants, first class	2.5
Sergeants	25
Corporals	10
Privates, first class	9
Privates	45
Cooks	2

Total 100

Medical Corps.

[Sec. 10, p. 8, act June 3, 1916.]

Per cent.

Master hospital sergeants	0.5
Hospital sergeants	7.5
Sergeants, first class	7
Sergeants	11
Corporals	5
Cooks	6

Total (without privates) 30

100—30 equals 70 per cent to be filled by privates.
Provided further, That in said department the number of privates, first class, shall not exceed 25 per cent of the number of privates.

This, then, makes the table read as follows:

Per cent.

Master hospital sergeants	0.5
Hospital sergeants	7.5
Sergeants, first class	7
Sergeants	11
Corporals	5
Cooks	6
Privates, first class	18
Privates	52

Total 100

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 9, line 23, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept for the United States from any person such tract or tracts of land suitable and desirable, in his judgment, for permanent mobilization, training, and supply stations; and he is directed to investigate and report to Congress as soon as practicable what additional tracts are necessary for said purposes for use by the National Guard and by the Regular Army and the probable cost of the same.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, we are considering a very important measure. I think we ought to have a better attendance. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Gronna	Owen	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Jones	Page	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Penrose	Smoot
Chilton	La Follette	Poinceter	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Ransdell	Taggart
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Reed	Thompson
Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Tillman
Dillingham	Newlands	Sheppard	Walsh
du Pont	Norris	Sherman	Weeks
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Shields	Williams
Gallinger	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. HARDING, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. BRADY, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. STONE, Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. BORAH answered to their names.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] are detained from the Chamber on account of important business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that amendment only authorizes the Secretary of War to accept donations to the United States in the way of land for maneuver purposes. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 58, it is proposed to insert the following:

To provide for the necessities and comfort of those in the military and naval forces in time of war or when war, in the opinion of the President, is imminent, $500,000. This appropriation shall, in whole or in part, as the President may determine, be transferred to the American Red Cross to be expended under its direction. A report in detail of the expenditures of this appropriation shall be made to Congress on or before December 1 annually.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that appropriations have been made under each of these heads that would cover the very item proposed to be covered by this amendment. In addition to that, the Senator proposes to extend this appropriation to uses for purposes of the Army to uses for purposes of the Navy. I should like to understand why the appropriations carried in this bill are not sufficient to cover this matter?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the reason I have proposed this appropriation is this: The Red Cross is all the time doing very much work and expending considerable amounts of money in matters which are purely military or purely naval and which should be appropriated for by the Government. For instance, there was brought to my attention this morning a circular which is being distributed in Massachusetts, being an appeal for money to build a base hospital, the money to be turned over to the Red Cross—something like $200,000 for that purpose. It does not seem to me that citizens ought to be assessed in that kind of irregular way for money to be expended for matters which should be appropriated for by the Government. If this half million dollars is set aside for the purposes which the amendment stipulates, it does seem to me as if it could provide for many things which are strictly within military lines or within naval lines. I am willing to strike out the reference to the naval forces if the Senator so desires, but this expenditure should be made by the Government instead of by individual citizens.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts who is to expend this money? Is the matter to be determined by the officials of the Red Cross or by a proper and responsible officer of the Government?

Mr. WEEKS. The President is to determine when the money is to be turned over and in what amounts; then it is to be expended under the direction of the Red Cross.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to make a point of order against this amendment, but it does seem to me that the Senate has been extremely liberal in making ample provision for every necessity and for every emergency that can arise in such cases.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, let me call the attention of the Senator to a letter which I have in my hand. This is an appeal for money to a citizen of Massachusetts. It reads:

The story is this: The authorities in Washington have asked this State—to provide for four base hospitals. Senator Murray Crane is taking care of one in the western portion of the State. The eastern portion of the State is asked to collect $200,000 to supply the equipment for three base hospitals, three ambulance corps, the equipment for hospital trains, and possibly a naval hospital.

That is, Massachusetts—

I have been told—though I have not checked it up—that New York is to supply seven base hospitals, and Chicago has raised $250,000 to provide for probably four others.

Then the letter goes on to describe the necessity for these base hospitals. If there is a necessity for them, certainly they should be provided for by the Government instead of by individual citizens, and this is being done at the request of the authorities in Washington.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President another objection which I have to this proposition is that it is charged in part against the Army appropriations. The Army appropriation bill has usually been loaded down with matters that do not affect the Army. If the Senator from Massachusetts will separate it, if possible, as the naval appropriation bill is still before the committee of conference—

Mr. WEEKS. I am quite willing to strike out the words "and naval," so that it will apply only to the military forces. I think the word "naval" inadvertently and improperly put in.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will do that, I shall not make any objection to the amendment; and then we may let it go to conference if the Senate accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as he has modified it.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senate by a very decisive vote refused to strike out a provision on page 90 of the bill relating to the so-called Taylor system. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in rather lurid language denounced that system as being inhuman and in every way unjust to the laboring people of the country; and the Senate, as I say, by a very decisive vote refused to strike that provision from the bill.

It has seemed to me that the prejudice against this system has been largely because of the fact that the stop watch is used as a part of it. Possibly that prejudice is well founded, and I shall not stop to discuss it; but it has occurred to me that to refuse to allow the Government factories, as it is allowed in private factories, the right to pay premiums or bonuses or cash rewards to employees who have done superior work is going beyond reason. The provision in the bill not only makes a declaration against the use of the stop watch, but likewise goes to the extent of saying that no premium or bonus or cash reward shall be paid to any employee who, in the judgment of those in charge of the establishment, is deserving of that recognition.

Mr. President, I feel that it will be wise to amend that provision of the House bill by striking the part of the proviso from the bill which is covered by my amendment. I do not think I shall call for the yeas and nays, unless some other Senator desires to have them, although I should like very much to get a record vote on the amendment I am about to offer, if Senators could be informed about it; but, as was suggested yesterday, Senators are now absent from the Chamber, as they were on yesterday, and when they come in they will have no knowledge of what has been transpiring, and they will vote as other Senators make suggestions to them. Beyond a doubt the vote under those circumstances will be adverse to my motion.

I move, on page 91, line 1, after the word "work," to strike out the remainder of the proviso; and I will ask the Secretary to read the words which I propose to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, in the first line, after the word "work," it is proposed to strike out the following:

Nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the truth is, that a great many of these employees are getting additional pay to which, in the judgment of those having charge of the factories, they are entitled. If this language remains in the bill they will be deprived of that additional pay which they think they have earned and which those in charge of the establishments feel that they have properly earned. I do not see that any harm can possibly come to anybody by striking that language from the bill and allowing those in charge of the Government factories—the arsenals and other workshops of the Government—to continue that part of the system. The amendment, if agreed to, will go to conference and receive the consideration of the conferees on the part of both Houses, and I hope that the Senate will agree to strike that language from the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist on that amendment. The laborer is worthy of his hire; there is no doubt about that. There is in every organization, in every plant, some man who, by special genius or because of a spurt of strength, may accomplish a fraction more than the man who stands beside him at the bench. There may be some disadvantages under which a man who works beside him labors.

It seems to me that this proposition would tend to make discontent and dissatisfaction. On yesterday I quoted from a report—I can not now recall just what report—the statement that the bonus system and the stop-watch system tended to create discontent.

God knows the struggle for bread and butter and for labor is hard enough. Do not burden it with anything more. I am satisfied, and the department generally is satisfied, that these men are working earnestly and honestly; that the Government is getting a full day's work for all the Government pays. Why press down harder on labor?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from New Jersey that the laborer is worthy of his hire; and that is exactly the point I am trying to enforce. I have no disposition to press down either hard or harder on labor. What I want to do is to help labor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator is trying to give some man—

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator must not interrupt me without my permission. That is the point I am trying to enforce—that the man who earns the additional compensation ought to be given it. That does not affect the man who does not earn it; in other words, there is no reason why the incompetent or the unskillful or the man who has not acquired the habits of industry which the man standing beside him has acquired, should be given the same consideration. I do not see that any injustice will be done to either the man who gets a little additional money because of greater efficiency, and which he has earned, or the man who does not get it because he has not earned it.

However, Mr. President, I have no disposition to discuss the matter. As I said a moment ago, unless some other Senator calls for the yeas and nays, I shall not do so, but shall content myself with a division of the Senate on the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust that the amendment will not prevail. It is not that one man is more industrious than another—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have yielded the floor. The Senator now can have the floor in his own right.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will not further occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that, unless this amendment prevails, there will be taken from 321 operatives at the Watertown Arsenal an average of about eight dollars and a quarter a piece weekly, and that would amount to something like a total of $2,500 each week, which those men now make in bonuses and premiums which they have received for the last two or three or four years. Any possibility of their receiving that money will be taken from them unless the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted.

The Senator from New Jersey talks about bread and butter. This will give these employees $3,500 a week's worth of bread and butter, which will be taken from them unless the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It may give bread and butter to one or two, Mr. President, or a comparatively small number, out of a great number of employees; it may give a small number an excess; but it tends to create discontent and dissatisfaction; it makes a class among the laboring men. These employees are working just as industriously and just as earnestly at their toil as some other man who may accomplish a fraction more.

Mr. WEEKS. There are 321 men working under the bonus system at that arsenal, and all of those men, with one exception, receive a bonus; so that it is not the case of one or two men; it is the case of practically every man who is working under the system.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. How many men are employed at the Watertown Arsenal?

Mr. WEEKS. There are about 600 men, and about half of them are working under the bonus system.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the vice of the proposed system is not found, in my judgment, in the matters that have been suggested. The vice of the proposed amendment is that it involves the laying out to each man of a specified amount of work for each day and the payment of a bonus when he exceeds that amount of work, and I presume that involves the right to impose a penalty if he does not perform the task within the allotted time. That involves, first, that somebody shall lay out the work and specify the amount; second, that the men shall be paid a premium who complete the work in a shorter time; and, third, that men shall suffer a penalty who do not complete the task within the prescribed time. Given those three elements, and you have the Taylor system. That is substantially all there is to it.

After we have once fought out the battle and after the Senate voted to keep in the whole section as it came from the House, and by keeping it in to abolish the Taylor system—because that is what it means—the Senator now proposes to keep the heart and soul of the proposition in and to only have taken out certain phraseology which contains no vice except for the part the Senator from New Hampshire now seeks to keep in the bill.

If you keep the scheme, if you keep the system, there is no use legislating about stop watches, because if a man is working on piecework and getting bonuses if he does the work in less time, of course you have to time him in order to know how much bonus is to be paid. So the part of the section which remains would prohibit the use of a stop watch, but of course it would mean that there would be some other kind of watch used or some other method devised in order to determine the bonus. All there is to it is that our friends who want to perpetuate the Taylor system, and who have a right to their views, having been once defeated, now propose to save all they lost in the fight of yesterday except some immaterial matters, which are not necessary at all to the carrying out of the Taylor system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. WEEKS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senate on yesterday, by a decisive vote of 15 to 36, as I remember, decided against the Taylor system. The proposition submitted in the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is to retain enough of the Senate provision to enable the conferees to fight for the insertion of the entire Taylor system.

It does not make a particle of difference, Mr. President, whether you eliminate the words "stop watch" from the proposition or not, for, as so well suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], wherever the bonus system exists there must be a measure of the amount of work that can be performed by men within a given period. A bonus system is based upon what can be done within that period, whether a stop watch be held on the man or whether you say that he shall do so much in a given period and forbid the use of the stop watch.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is exactly the same proposition whether the stop watch is eliminated or whether the task is fixed by hours or by a day's work.

Mr. President, it is nothing but a "sweating system." It drives men to perform a given number of motions within a fixed time. It offers a premium to men who can do that thing; it subjects men who are by nature differently organized mentally, physically, and nervously to a strain under which they are broken down.

It has been enunciated by Mr. Taylor, as a basic principle of his system, that they take into account only the men who can perform a certain given number of motions within a limited space of time, and the system has no concern whatever for the 80 per cent of men who can not come within that limitation. Mr. President, the fixing of the task imposes precisely the same stimulus, precisely the same exaction, precisely the same taxation upon nervous and physical ability without the stop watch that it does if a stop watch is held over the men.

I have no doubt that there are some workmen who desire that this system shall be established. Human nature is just the same, whether it be among United States Senators, men engaged in industrial and commercial enterprises, men who work at the bench or at the forge, or men who run engines. It makes no difference. You will always find a certain number of men who are more or less selfish and who, by reason of their temperamental organization, are able in any contest to win a higher wage, a bonus for themselves. They take no account of the 80 per cent of men who can not come up to that standard.

I remember well, Mr. President, when I stood some years ago upon this floor appealing to Members of this body to pass a bill fixing 16 hours as the limit of time that men engaged in conducting the train service of the country should be permitted to work without interruption, there were engineers and conductors and other trainmen who objected to having any limitation put upon the number of hours that they might be permitted to operate a train, because there were a comparatively few who could run a train 36 hours, 40 hours, 50 hours, perhaps 72 hours, and keep awake, keep their faculties concentrated upon their work, and earn a larger sum each month. They did not want any limitation put upon the number of hours that they should be permitted to operate trains; but, Mr. President, the public has some rights in these matters; it has some rights in every question which involves labor generally.

It had in that particular case some rights in addition to that; it had some rights as to the safety of interstate transportation. Against the wishes of some of the engineers and conductors and trainmen of the country, I remember I, with some others upon this floor, stood here and fought for a limitation upon the hours of service of the men operating the trains of the country. The great body of the trainmen were in favor of a limitation. The great body of the trainmen to-day are in favor of a much greater limitation than the 16-hour limitation which, after a long struggle, we succeeded in putting upon the hours of train-service men.

Mr. President, it is like all other questions that affect labor. It is like the limitation of hours which the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained upon the length of time that women can be compelled to serve in any of the industries of the country. The public is interested in conserving the labor of this country and in protecting it, not only with regard to the work hours of women but with regard to the hours of labor of men; not only with regard to the hours of labor but with regard to the strain, the tension, the ordeal, the tax to which men and women shall be subjected in performing their daily occupations.

It has been demonstrated, sir, in investigations which the Supreme Court accepted, that, as the hours of labor are increased, the strain and tension upon the men who serve in the great industrial life of this country is intensified, there results not only the earlier breaking down of these employees but all the concomitant evils that go with such a breakdown that before the crash actually occurs.

For instance, sir, it has been found, as a result of a carefully systematized investigation of accidents, that in the afterpart of the day, from 3 or 4 o'clock on, when this ordeal of concentration has been sustained for a considerable period of time, when the ability to concentrate is lessened, when the nerve wear and the muscle wear begin to tell upon the individual operatives, accidents increase; that is the time when there is the largest loss of fingers and arms. In the late hours of the day the accident death rate is always the highest.

Mr. President, in these times it behooves us to conserve the industrial vitality of this country. We have had a demonstration of one of the great powers of Europe that has made the first consideration in its program of preparedness that it shall look out for the upbuilding of the industrial life of the people who serve and toil; that it shall protect them upon every possible side; that it shall give them every protection with which legislation can hedge them about, to the end that their powers of production and the length of their service may be maintained during all their active years so that the number of them that may be maimed or killed shall be reduced to the lowest point. To all those things, that great Government of Germany has given special attention.

We are rushing madly here, as it seems to me, along with a program of preparedness—I want to speak with entire propriety—without giving to it sufficient consideration. Germany's preparation did not consist simply in the building up of a military and a naval force. Germany's preliminary preparation consisted in conserving, economically and in every other way, humanely, all of the vital forces of the people who labor in her industries. And, Mr. President, because she laid her foundations broad and strong, because she cared for the men who toiled in her industries, she has an industrial system underlying all of her military preparation superior to anything of the kind in the world. And, sir, permit me to say that it has its other side. It appeals to the patriotism and the loyalty of the German citizen. Germany did not find it necessary because of the prevalence of an industrial system which ground the life out of the employed, to lower the standards of enlistment, the number of inches that a man must stand in order to go into the military service, his weight, and the other physical conditions, as in England, which has an industrial system somewhat like that which some men would impose upon the people of this country. But, sir, Germany is able to call to the service of her standards men who come up to the old measurements. Their industrial life has not been shriveled up as in Great Britain; and, furthermore, they are willing and responsive.

Mr. President, it behooves us not to stand for any of the exactions upon labor which would grind the last ounce of work out of the toilers of this country by any process of sweating. I care not what may be used, whether the stop watch be held over the operative or whether men who have the coordination of mental, nervous, and muscular organization to enable them to win are tempted by a bonus system to strive for the prizes and drive their competitors, their fellow workmen, to the breaking-down point.

Mr. President, I understand the author of the Taylor system, in his book, says that he takes no account of the 80 per cent who can not come up to the high standards. Those who install this system say to a manufacturer or business man, "Permit us to install our system. For $100 a day our experts will teach it to your operatives and to your managers. By adopting this system, which takes account of every movement a man makes and exacts of him the highest possible speed, you will be able to reduce the unit cost of the output of your product 20 per cent." Capital seizes upon that, sir. Capital takes no account of what may happen to the men who are thrown out of employment because they can not make the given number of motions within the limited period.

Mr. President, let us, as we did on yesterday, by a decisive vote hold to the position taken and say to the House of Representatives, "We agree with you. There shall be nothing left in disagreement between the Senate and the House upon this proposition."

We will not permit to be put into this bill a line, a word, or a syllable that will give the conferees the opportunity to work out some legislation that shall be framed up by six men and shall come in here in the conference report in a form that has to be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. President, one of the iniquities of our legislative system is that we turn over to conferees almost, if not quite, the absolute power to make legislation. I am going to call to the attention of the Senate later this afternoon an example of that sort, an instance of the radical change of a legislative policy that had been pursued by this Government for generations, made in a conference report, and put through the Senate without a suggestion to the Senate as to its awful import.

Mr. President, I hope that we shall early adopt a rule that conference reports shall be open to consideration in their items and be open to amendment on the floor. Mr. President, a system of rules giving into the hands of a conference committee the power to make legislation is destructive of democracy. Why, sir, the Senate is practically powerless when considering a conference report. It has to consider and accept or reject the report as a whole. Legislation about which there is a wide difference of opinion between this legislative body and the one at the other end of the Capitol goes to conference, and out of the conference committee will come a proposition that has almost no relation to the opinion expressed by the other House or the opinion expressed by the Senate when the original measure was under consideration.

This new proposition may be embodied in a report covering scores of pages. Every Senator knows that when a conference report comes in, particularly in the latter days of a session, its details receive no consideration. It is passed without discussion of each of the many subjects it may cover. Maybe one single item in a conference report will be taken up and discussed; but, Mr. President, the Senate knows from long experience that when such a report comes in it is a hopeless proposition to undertake to deal with it in detail; and so, I say, it lies with the conferees to make our legislation.

I recall, sir, that when the emergency currency bill was pending in the Senate in 1908 I offered many amendments to it. The then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, rose in his place and accepted those amendments one after another. I had some reason to believe, therefore, and the Senate had some reason to believe, that those amendments were to go into the bill. One I recall with distinctness, and there is not a Senator on this floor who at this moment will not say that it was of vital importance.

We had just gone through the great so-called panic of 1907—a panic which I have always considered was artificial. In that panic the reserves of the local banks had been drawn from these banks to New York City, Chicago, and one or two other centers of speculative finance. When the strain of that panic came upon the country New York had the money of the country banks. New York was using it for speculative purposes. Interest rates increased.

Local demands called for the return of the reserves to the country banks. The great centralized banking institutions refused to respond to the legitimate demands of the local bankers and return these reserves to meet the commercial demands of the different localities. Time was of the essence of that situation. Legally, they were bound to return them; but legal processes are well understood. The law's delay prevents them from resorting, in a situation like that, to legal redress. Week after week those demands were repeated by the local banks that were being driven to the wall. So that when we came to consider financial legislation in 1908 to correct these evils and to protect the reserves, the keeping of the reserves in the local banks was one of the burning questions.

Mr. President, I offered an amendment to compel the retaining of a certain measure of those reserves in the local banks. The Senator from Rhode Island, in charge of the bill, rose and said: "That is a very proper amendment, and I accept it." He did that with many amendments that I offered. Mr. President, that bill passed with that and other vitally important amendments in it, one of them being that the officers of a national bank should not be permitted to speculate with the funds of the depositors of that bank. The acceptance of the amendments shortened debate. That is a process sometimes resorted to by gentlemen in charge of bills.

Mr. President, one of the things that I had contended for from the time I came into the Senate was that there was an uncertainty about the value of these railroad bonds; that they had been issued at the will of the men who built the railroads; that the only restraint or limitation upon it was the market which they could find for the bonds; and I contended, sir, that there should be a railroad valuation, so that the people of the country might know what was behind the railroad bonds and stocks. Now, that bill contained a provision that railroad bonds—mark the scope of it—should be accepted by the Treasury Department as a basis for issuing emergency currency. No standard was prescribed as to what was back of the bonds—that is, no vital, thorough-going, economic standard. There was a standard imposed with regard to what the railroads had been able to exact from the public as a dividend on the stocks; but, Mr. President, you can see that that was an India-rubber proposition. The railroads could exact enough, regardless of the money value back of the bonds and the stocks, to pay interest on the bonds and dividends on the stocks; and that was to be the only guide of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I made very careful preparation to argue to the Senate whether or not railroad bonds should be bedded into the currency system of this country.

Well, Mr. President, I made weeks and months of preparation to discuss that bond proposition in the Senate; and 20 minutes before I rose on the floor to make my attack upon it, the Senator from Rhode Island took the wind all out of my sails and out of my preparation by announcing the withdrawal of that proposition from the bill. I took the floor. I argued the bond proposition just the same, and predicted that when the conference report came in the railroad bonds would be in the bill as a basis of currency issue. And, sir, let me tell you what occurred when that bill came back into the Senate in the form of a conference report; it not only made railroad bonds but railroad stocks a basis for currency issue.

The history of the struggle between the conferees in that matter is interesting. The bill went into conference some six to eight weeks before the probable time of adjournment. The conferees met. A campaign had been made over this country extending over a period of years such as we have seen in regard to few pieces of legislation. A commission had taken testimony in this country and Europe, and had printed the results of its investigations in 42 volumes that nobody ever read. Organizations all over the country, bankers' organizations, commercial organizations, boards of trade, had been organized behind the legislation that Senator Aldrich and his commission and his committee proposed to put through.

But, sir, the conference committee met and the public was informed there was a wide difference between the House and the Senate and that no agreement would be effected.

Mr. President, that was repeated day after day, until the Members of this body and of the other body, thrown off guard, came to understand that after the weeks and months and years of agitation and campaigning this piece of legislation was to come to naught because of this difference between the two bodies.

We were near the time of adjournment. The date had not been set, but Senators know that we are sometimes nearly ready to adjourn before the resolution for adjournment is agreed upon by the two Houses. It was pretty well understood that the adjournment of the session was at hand.

Mr. WEEKS rose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator from Massachusetts wish to interrupt me?

Mr. WEEKS. If the Senator has reached the point where he wishes to be interrupted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me go on for a while, if you will, until I conclude this thought.

I wonder if Senators can recall the large correspondence that they had during the year or so preceding the culmination of that legislation. I wonder if they did not, as I know I did, write to hundreds, and I think thousands, of business men in Wisconsin and elsewhere who addressed me upon the subject. The papers announced that there would be no legislation upon this subject. I wrote the bankers and the business men in Wisconsin: "We are told in the press, and it is the understanding in both bodies, that there will be no legislation at all." The House had passed one bill and the Senate passed a wholly different bill, and these were in conference and no agreement could be reached.

If Senators will go back to the files of the papers of that time, they will find headlines, and news articles sustaining the headlines, to the effect that "all financial legislation for this session is out of the range of possibility."

Not more than four days before we adjourned I was startled by a morning-paper announcement that the conferees had agreed on that bill.

Mr. President, as an humble Member of this body I had some interest in that legislation. I got that conference report as quickly as I could. What do you think I found? Not only railroad bonds were back in the bill, but railroad stocks, warehouse receipts, every conceivable thing was back in the bill. It was an infinitely worse proposition from a financial and economic standpoint than was the bill as it was reported to the Senate. Propositions which when tested by debate were promptly withdrawn were restored in the conference bill.

The amendment which I had offered to require local banks to hold their reserves up to a certain point was wiped out. It had been accepted on the floor.

The provision with respect to the officials of the bank using the money of the depositors was gone out of the bill.

Senators, I got a bad reputation in this body and all over the country for talking interminably because of the righteous indignation which that report aroused in me. I determined that it should not pass this body if I could help it, and to stop it I spoke for 19 consecutive hours. It would have failed, because the adjournment was so imminent that many Senators had made their arrangements to leave, and the Senate and the House would be without a quorum, but for a legislative trick resorted to on this floor—so reprehensible, Mr. President, that the revered Senator from Georgia, Senator Bacon, rose in his place the day after it had been perpetrated and said that he wished to go on record as repudiating the methods by which the bill had passed.

Mr. President, the RECORD of the Senate was changed in order that I might be taken off the floor. I photographed the RECORD of the congressional proceedings of that night, and I have preserved the photograph and have published it. A RECORD was changed. It is not necessary for me to say who changed it now, because the mutations of time have put it beyond the power of some of the men engaged in it to answer, but I printed in the American Magazine in connection with the articles running as a part of my autobiography the changed RECORD in photograph, and it can be seen there if Members are interested enough to look at it.

The bill was passed. The conference report was put through.

Now, Mr. President, I have spent more time than I intended. I did not intend to speak of it at all. I had not thought of it for years until the suggestion of what happens so often in conference came to me as I considered the effort to write the proposition of the pending amendment into this bill. If adopted, this amendment would be the ground upon which the conferees could stand and write into the bill the Taylor system rejected in the other House and yesterday rejected by a decisive vote in the Senate.

If the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] would like to interrupt me, I will yield to him.

Mr. WEEKS. No; I will take the floor after the Senator gets through.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has the first call for the floor. He rose to interrupt me and forbore in order to let me go on. It was very kind of him.

Now, Mr. President, I come back to this. I do hope that as a Member of this body I shall live to see the rules with respect to conference reports so changed that it will not be possible for two or three men to dictate and put through legislation. This is a democracy, sir. We are supposed to be the representatives of the people.

Our work upon this floor and the work of our associates at the other end of the Capitol is supposed to represent public opinion and the interests of the great masses of this country. But I need not say to the Senators what everybody knows, that very often the public will is defeated, that public interest is perverted, and democracy is shackled in legislation as we enact it.

I long to see the time, Mr. President, when this body shall become thoroughly democratized, when our system of committee appointments shall be wholly changed, when our system of legislation by the dictation of party conferences and party caucuses shall be wholly changed.

Mr. President, not a day scarcely passes but we have evidences here in the Senate of the control of legislation by a small body of men upon a committee.

While I am on the subject, sir, I do not know but that I can serve public interest by taking just a few minutes to describe it.

At the beginning of every Congress a party conference or caucus is called. Under precedents which have come to be accepted, the senior in service, whatever may be his associations or his relation to the great questions of the day, calls that caucus or that conference to order. Some one moves that he be chosen chairman. He is chosen chairman. Some one moves that he be authorized to appoint a committee on committees. By long usage and custom, through which reformers would find it impossible to break, the motion prevails.

Now what happens? One man selects the men who make up the committee. The committees are made up pursuant to the rule of seniority and the selection of the chairman. They are submitted to the committee, but the chairman of that committee, reflecting the views of the chairman who has presided at the conference, practically controls under custom as it has prevailed here, and our committees thus may centralize the control of legislation in the hands of very few men.

I see Senators turning to the list of the committees to see how I may have fared under that system. I have been here going on 11 years, Mr. President, and there comes a time when a man is given service here by the same system that makes the senior Senator the controlling force in the selection of the committee on committees. Seniority ultimately gives to a man some recognition upon committees.

When I came here in the beginning the committee of which I was made chairman was the Committee on Potomac River Front. I was chairman of that committee for a long time. I had spent a good many years on the question of railroad transportation, first in the House of Representatives, next in the State of Wisconsin, and I asked for a place upon the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I got it, Mr. President, but I am the last Republican on the list. I am at the foot of the whole list. There are plenty of men who came in here after I did who precede me upon the committee.

There is not a divinity that shapes our ends, but there is a power that shapes our ends with regard to legislation and to committees.

Now, Mr. President, I have wandered some distance afield, but after all it bears upon this matter that is before the Senate. The Senate yesterday by a very decisive vote declared that it would have none of this sweating system that drives men to the breaking point. The Senate said it did not want a system that throws men who by their nature can not make a certain number of motions within a given space of time on the labor scrap heap to go out and wrestle as best they may—discarded men to support their families.

Here is a proposition made by the Senator from New Hampshire which is exactly the same thing. It is not the stop watch. Mr. President, the term is somewhat offensive. That is left out of the proposed amendment, but in effect it is precisely the same thing. It is the bonus system, which can only be applied when men, driven to the very highest pressure, shall perform a given number of motions within a given space of time and turn out a finished product.

Mr. President, I must say economic propositions have some attractions for me. They have always had; and when this Taylor system, this scientific management system, was first proposed it made a very strong appeal to me. It took hold of my imagination. I said, "Here is an economy."

When a bricklayer takes the brick as they come from the hod of the carrier ordinarily the process is that he stoops to the level of his feet. The brick are deposited upon the platform upon which he works. He stoops down and picks up a brick. Any of you who ever watched the processes of the bricklayer noticed that almost always he tosses the brick in the air. It makes a revolution. He catches it as it comes down. To the eye of a novice the ends of a brick may appear the same; to the expert they are different. The bricklayer knows that he should hold that brick in his hand as he lays it in the wall with one end of it turned from him and the other end of it turned to him. The ends are not alike. He tosses the brick in the air. He seizes it as it comes down. He lays it in the wall. He bends again perhaps to the level of his feet, and in each of these motions he has lifted the entire weight of his body.

Now, Mr. President, it appealed to me that if those motions could be obviated, if they could be eliminated, or if any of the wear and strain of the weight of that man's body could be gotten rid of, it was economy in physical wear and tear and in the cost of production of the thing upon which he was working.

I saw at once that if this scientific-management system provided a movable platform that rose with the wall as he built it, so that he did not have to bend his body at all, and so that he took the brick right off the platform at the level of his waist, it would be a saving. I saw, too, that if the hod carrier down on the ground was instructed when he put the bricks into the hod to place them in a certain way in the hod, so that when he dumped the hod on the platform he could save the operation of tossing the brick into the air to bring it right-end-to for the bricklayer who was to lay it on the wall. It all appealed to me very strongly, Mr. President; but when I came to see the effect of it upon the great mass of toilers in this country I saw the viciousness of the system. While it does make for profit for the man who has the capital invested in the enterprise, and while he may by some equitable arrangement give the men who work under him, by a bonus or other system, some share in the profits which he can make, yet, when he gives it to them by bonus, that is turning the screws down harder and harder.

Not satisfied with eliminating the waste motions, on top of that, after they have eliminated the waste motions, most of these gentlemen who are striving for profits in their business will offer a bonus to a man who can strive with his associates. By the quickness of his eye, by the curious thing that is called a coordination of hand and brain, he can make certain motions quicker than can somebody else, and he pushes out of employment altogether somewhere from 60 to 80 per cent of the men who are slower in their motions as a result of this difference of attuning the whole system by nature to the acme of speed which the most proficient can attain.

Then, Mr. President, when I came to see those things and the result of them and came to investigate the matter further I became convinced that whatever the economies may be we must not adopt them unripened and undeveloped. If they can be ultimately so controlled as to protect the great body of the toilers of this country, to make the saving that comes from the elimination of waste motion and at the same time not destroy the lives of the men engaged in the business and insure to them their fair share of the saving in which it all results, then we may be able to accept it; but, Mr. President, that is remote, that is not here now. We must not be lured by theoretical arguments with respect to the saving resulting in the destruction or in the deterioration of the vital forces of the great body of the toilers of this country.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I merely wish to say regarding the Watertown Arsenal—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should prefer to listen to the Senator from New Jersey after I conclude. I never talk very long.

Mr. President, when I submitted the pending amendment I had no idea that it would provoke a discussion such as has ensued. The Senator from New Jersey, my genial friend, who wants again to get into the argument, immediately, before "high heaven" declaimed against this as an outrage on the workingman, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], in picturesque language, has followed in the same channel.

Mr. President, this system—which will be modified if my amendment prevails—is in vogue in hundreds and hundreds of workshops in the United States; it is in vogue in my own State; and I never have heard that any outrage has been committed upon an employee as a result of it. I never have heard that they have been crushed and outraged and persecuted as has been represented in this Chamber. I do not quite understand why Senators should indulge in language of that kind, in view of conditions which exist in workshops and factories all over our country.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], in discussing the matter, suggested that while the stop watch had been eliminated, other similar devices could be employed, and that the laboring man would not have his condition ameliorated in any way whatever because of words left in the bill.

Mr. President, if the Senator had read what is left in the bill, he would have seen that other devices of similar nature are prohibited, and that they could not possibly be employed under the law as it will stand if the amendment which I have offered shall be agreed to.

The Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. President, has truly wandered afield—that is his privilege under the rules of the Senate—but I confess that I have looked upon the Senator from Wisconsin heretofore as a man who lived in the present and the future rather than in the past. He has, however, gone back to the year 1908, and he has given us a page in the history of the Senate which is entirely new to me. I confess that I never heard it stated before—though possibly I would have found it in the printed record had I read the Senator's biography, which, I presume, I ought to have done—that there was any change in the proceedings of the Senate made by any employee or any Senator, whoever it may have been, on that memorable occasion, which we all remember, because we listened to the Senator at as great length, I believe, as any Senator has spoken in the Senate during the time of my somewhat protracted membership.

The Senator, Mr. President, has told us about the wonderful achievements of the German people, not only in military matters but industrial matters as well, and he called attention to the fact that that great people have accomplished such results because they have conserved human energy and human life.

Mr. President, sometimes I have thought I was the only man in the Senate who was truly neutral as between the contending forces in Europe to-day. I have tried to keep myself neutral; I have tried to think as well of one nation as I have of another; but I have been in Germany and I have seen the German people, I have been in France and I have seen the French people, I have been in England and I have seen the English people, and I confess that I have failed to discover that the German people are any more careful in conserving human energy and human life than are the other nations of the world. Why, Mr. President, take the women of Germany. I have seen them mixing mortar and carrying it up the ladder to the men who were laying bricks, a process which the Senator from Wisconsin has aptly described. I have seen them in the hay fields and in the wheat fields, performing labor that men ought to perform; I have seen them, Mr. President, drawing carts on the streets hitched to dogs, a sight that I have never seen in any other country on the face of the earth. And if Germany in treating its women in that way is conserving human energy and human life I fail to understand what conservation of human energy and human life means.

Mr. President, Germany has a wonderful military system, and her soldiers are among the best in the world; but if I am reading current history aright Germany has found her match in the French nation in this great struggle; and I think she is finding her match in the English nation as well on the battle field.

I think the soldiers from Canada, the soldiers from Australia, and the soldiers from that little Isle, which we all admire so much because of its wonderful progress in art, in literature, in science, and in every other department of human endeavor, are proving to be a match for the wonderful German people, with whom I sympathize, because there is a trace of German blood in my veins. So I think, Mr. President, we should not be swept off our feet by the picturesque and eloquent language of the Senator from Wisconsin touching this question.

The Senator, Mr. President, I think very wisely, has called attention to our methods of legislation so far as conference reports are concerned. I do not think the Senator will ever live to see them reformed along the lines he has advocated to-day; but I do think that we ought to have the right, under our rules, to make a point of order against any provision that appears in a conference report that has not been considered by either House of Congress. I advocate that change, and hope that at some time it may be made; but whether we ought to have the right to object to any particular paragraph in a conference report is quite another matter which ought to receive very careful consideration before being adopted.

Mr. President, I feel that my amendment was hardly of sufficient importance to detain the Senate so long as the Senate has been detained in debating the question. Let me suggest what it means. I have moved, Mr. President, to strike from the bill these words:

Nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

That is all.

I stood beside a man for three long years who earned 25 per cent more than I did doing the same kind of work. I never found fault with the fact that he was more expert than was I in performing that labor, and the fact that he received a higher reward than I did never impressed me with the feeling that I was being oppressed or being wronged in any way because of the fact that I did not get as much money as did he.

Mr. President, there are hundreds and hundreds of workshops in this country where bonuses are given to employees, where cash rewards are given to employees, for performing more and better work than some others who are engaged in the same workshop; and I can not for the life of me understand why anybody should object to that. I can not for the life of me see what harm it does to the man who is not as efficient as another and who can not in the very nature of things earn as much money as another.

If my amendment should prevail, what remains in the bill? Why, Mr. President, this provision would remain:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work.

It seems to me that that is sufficient to meet the views of the most radical Senator on this question. It absolutely prohibits the very things that have been complained of heretofore, but it does allow the men who are in charge of the Government workshops the right to compensate to a larger extent the efficient man than the inefficient man, the man who accomplishes more than the man who accomplishes less; and I have heretofore been of the opinion, Mr. President—and I am to-day equally as earnest in that view—that we ought not to legislate so that the most incompetent, so that the least efficient man shall set the standard of work for the men in any workshop in the United States, whether it be a private workshop or a Government workshop.

Mr. President, I am not rash enough to expect that my amendment will be accepted by the Senate; I am not rash enough to believe that Congress has yet reached the point where it will refuse any demands the labor unions of this country shall make upon it, and inasmuch as the labor unions have declared their purpose that legislation prohibiting the bonus system shall be enacted, I do not expect to see it eliminated by a vote of the Senate of the United States; but while I do not entertain the belief that it will be eliminated, I still hold to the conviction that it is an injustice to the workingmen to deny them the privilege of earning a little more additional money because of increased efficiency and increased power to accomplish more work than the men who may stand beside them in the same workshop.

Let us, Mr. President, encourage, rather than discourage, efficiency in Government as in private work, and let us not shut the door of encouragement to men to qualify themselves for better work, whether it be in workshops, in mills, in factories, or in the home by legislation such as is incorporated in this bill, and which, unfortunately, has been incorporated in other bills which have passed during the present session of Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I thought on yesterday this whole question had been settled, but it seems not to have been. The idea seems to prevail that the bonus system is different from the time-clock system. The time-clock system first came in vogue and then the bonus system followed. I find here in Gen. Crozier's report a statement that they have a process of rewards to the foremen of the men. They give a foreman a bonus to drive the men to the limit. On page 20 of the same report Gen. Crozier says, and his statement shows that there is justification for opposition to the proposal advanced by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire:

Perhaps something can be said on both sides of the question of stimulation by high rewards. There are in all walks of life men who wear themselves out in their effort at great accomplishment, and there are more such in a new country, where the rewards are great, than in old countries, where the more settled conditions imposed narrower limitations upon what may be accomplished by strenuous and intelligent effort.

I insist that a process that shall tend to wear out human lives is not good economy for a nation to pursue.

It is said that the time-clock system, the sweatshop, and the bonus system are all one and the same thing. The Senator from New Hampshire adopts the other view; but Gen. Crozier, referring to the Watertown Arsenal, on page 20 of the same document, uses these words:

The question remains to be answered how the process at the Watertown Arsenal differs in kind from the class known as "speeding-up," or "sweatshop," or "slave-driving" processes, so called. I take it that the essential difference lies in the character of the stimulation which is applied to increase the output. In the reprehensible methods the output of a very rapid workman is taken as the standard, and the rate set is such that this output must be reached in order to make ordinary wages. The task and the compensation are so fixed that unless the employee puts himself under a great strain all the time he is either discharged or fails to earn a living wage. In other words, the highest possible output is demanded for what is at best no more than the current rate of wages.

I insist that that verifies our position that there is no difference, or only a difference of words, between the sweatshop, the speeding-up, the slave-driving—I am using Gen. Crozier's words—and the time-watch system. I feel that it could do nothing to advance the welfare of the operatives; neither do I believe it would advance the welfare of the Nation.

As I suggested yesterday or this morning, whenever it was, we can not prevent this in private shops; but in God's name do not let the Government of the United States adopt a system that shall drive the last strain and string of a man's tendons and muscles to their utmost tension, or the last drop of blood, upon which to build our prosperous arts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRYAN. Has the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BRYAN. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA. I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DU PONT. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who has not voted. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WARREN. I withdraw my vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on public business, and is paired with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], and that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. OVERMAN entered the Chamber and voted "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Brandegee	Harding	Penrose	Wadsworth
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Sherman	Weeks
Dillingham	McCumber	Smoot	Works

NAYS—40.

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to give notice that when the bill gets into the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote on the amendments of the committee, beginning on page 54 and going to page 58, inclusive.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can not let the occasion pass without congratulating the Senate on the fact that there has been a gain of two votes, since the vote on yesterday, for the beneficial amendment that I submitted to the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on page 11, at the end of line 20. I do not think the chairman of the committee will have any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, at the end of line 20, after the word "occurred," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following words:

Provided, That the relative rank of all general officers of the line shall be determined by the date of their respective commissions, seniors taking precedence over juniors.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I should like some explanation of that amendment. That is the law now, as I understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only purpose of that is to secure the relative rank of general officers in the line; that is all. In other words, when the Congress passed a bill some time ago to promote certain officers on the Canal Zone for distinguished service, by some misunderstanding or some misconstruction of the law it was held—or will be held, if opportunity arises, so I am informed—that graduates from Annapolis or West Point who graduated five years or any other number of years after the officers who were promoted under that act will take rank over and above them, and the purpose of this is simply to correct it. I hope the Senate will let it go to conference.

Mr. WARREN. I assume the Senator means this to relieve one man alone, does he not, or perhaps three or four men?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no. There are three or four of them. It relieves all those that were promoted by special act of Congress for distinguished service on the Canal Zone. If I am mistaken about that, there will be no trouble in correcting it. If it goes to conference and it is found not to be necessary in order to correct that injustice, the conferees can take it out.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I do not know about the conference, but I assume that he means to change the law which provided that those men who were elevated from lieutenant colonels and colonels to brigadier and major generals should stand at the foot of the list, as this was an honorary place. He wishes those to be advanced up to where their original date of commission from West Point would put them?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I do not think that is the purpose of the amendment at all.

Mr. WARREN. The reason why I ask is because there has been of necessity, when we provided for detached officers, some legislation, and we have undertaken to correct it in this law. I thought the Senator was making this entirely too general. If he would apply it alone to those that were elevated on account of their meritorious work at the Canal Zone, that would cover what he wants.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That section 27 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be amended so as to read:

"Sec. 27. Enlistments in the Regular Army: On and after the 1st day of November, 1916, all enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for a term of seven years, the first three years to be in active service with the organizations of which those enlisted form a part and, except as otherwise provided herein, the last four years in the Regular Army Reserve hereinafter provided for: Provided, That at the expiration of three years' continuous service with such organizations, either under a first or any subsequent enlistment, any soldier may be reenlisted for another period of seven years, as above provided for, in which event he shall receive his final discharge from his prior enlistment: Provided further, That after the expiration of one year's honorable service any enlisted man serving within the continental limits of the United States whose company, troop, battery, or detachment commander shall report him as proficient and sufficiently trained may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be furloughed to the Regular Army Reserve under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, but no man furloughed to the reserve shall be eligible to reenlist in the service until the expiration of his term of seven years: Provided further, That in all enlistments hereafter accomplished under the provisions of this act three years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay: Provided further, That any noncommissioned officer discharged with an excellent character shall be permitted, at the expiration of three years in the active service, to reenlist in the organization from which discharged with the rank and grade held by him at the time of his discharge if he reenlists within 20 days after the date of such discharge: Provided further, That no person under the age of 21 years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians: Provided, however, That such minor has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody and control, and this proviso shall be applicable to all minors enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States on and after June 3, 1916: And provided further, That the President is authorized in his discretion to utilize the services of postmasters of the second, third, and fourth classes in procuring the enlistment of recruits for the Army, and for each recruit accepted for enlistment in the Army the postmaster procuring his enlistment shall receive the sum of $5.

"In addition to military training, soldiers while in the active service shall hereafter be given the opportunity to study and receive instruction upon educational lines of such character as to increase their military efficiency and enable them to return to civil life better equipped for industrial, commercial, and general business occupations. Civilian teachers may be employed to aid the Army officers in giving such instruction, and part of this instruction may consist of vocational education either in agriculture or the mechanic arts. The Secretary of War, with the approval of the President, shall prescribe rules and regulations for conducting the instruction herein provided for, and the Secretary of War shall have the power at all times to suspend, increase, or decrease the amount of such instruction offered as may, in his judgment, be consistent with the requirements of military instruction and service of the soldiers."

SEC. — That section 58 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 58. Composition of the National Guard: The National Guard shall consist of the regularly enlisted militia between the ages of 18 and 45 years, organized, armed, and equipped as hereinafter provided, and of commissioned officers between the ages of 21 and 64 years: Provided, That no person under the age of 21 years shall be enlisted or mustered into the military service of the United States without the written consent of his parents or guardians: Provided, That such minor has such parents or guardians entitled to his custody and control, and this provision shall be applicable to all minors mustered into the military service of the United States on and after June 3, 1916."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know whether there is to be opposition to this proposed amendment. It is very important. While it is a long amendment and provides for reenacting of two sections of the act which passed June 3, known as the reorganization of the Army act, I propose its reenactment only to change one provision in each of those two sections. The provision which is changed by my amendment, if it is adopted, restores to the parent the right to withhold consent to the enlistment of a boy in the Regular Army or the National Guard if he is below 21 years of age. Prior to the enactment of the law of June 3 the consent of a parent or guardian was necessary to the lawful enlistment of a boy under 21 years of age and over 18 years of age.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In the Regular Army?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In the Regular Army. That law was changed by the act known as the reorganization of the Army act.

I say without any hesitation that the amendment which I have offered is subject to a point of order, and I have guarded myself against that point of order by giving notice of a motion to suspend the rule, and I do not believe that a member of the committee or a Member of the Senate will make a point of order against this amendment, and therefore I do not believe that it will be necessary for me to precede the offer of the amendment with a motion to suspend the rule. Consequently, until there is some manifestation of a desire on the part of some Member of the Senate to raise that point of order I shall simply content myself to offer the amendment.

Mr. President, permit me to say this: I have before me on my desk the bill H. R. 12766, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States," as it passed the House of Representatives on the 23d day of March, 1916. I have before me the bill H. R. 12766, the same bill, as it passed the Senate on the calendar day, April 18, 1916.

Mr. BORAH. It is a long amendment and I do not know that I understood the Senator as to the precise correction which he desires to make in that act. It refers to requiring the consent of the parent or guardian?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is to restore to the law the provision which requires that the consent of the parent or guardian should be had before a boy could be enlisted in the Regular Army if he is under 21 years of age.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that is a very wise proposition. We have in our office now two cases which come under the law as it exists because of the passage of the act of the 3d of June, 1916.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no doubt of that, Mr. President. I had in my office many cases within a few days after the order came to muster the National Guard into the military service of the United States. Within a day or two following that more than 500 cases of appeal from parents were made to the War Department for the relief of boys over 18 and under 21 years of age. In many cases these boys were necessary to the support of families where there were widowed mothers.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho will readily see that not only were the boys affected who might be enlisted in the Regular Army, but boys had been enlisted in the National Guard all over the country; in some cases where they were only 18 years of age they were taken out of schools and drafted into the Regular Army. All over the land appeals have come from parents to the War Department and to the commanders of the different regiments and companies for the relief of those children.

It is true the law provided for the enlistment of boys of this tender age in the Navy, and the excuse that is made for changing this law is that it was to make it conform to the law regarding enlistment in the Navy. But, Mr. President, because enlistment in the Navy has been by law at that age wrongfully, and, as I believe, against the best interest of the Navy, and against the best interest of the country, it furnishes no excuse whatever for making this change with regard to enlistments in the Regular Army and the National Guard.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator about that. I was going to ask him would we not be up against the same trouble when we come to muster the Naval Militia into the service, if we ever do? The Senators' amendment does not propose to correct that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I did not include that because I knew it would not be germane to this bill. I do propose to correct that provision in the law, but I have to do it in another way, as the Senator will understand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly. Will the Senator answer this question in addition: Did the Army reorganization bill, which passed a few weeks ago, change the age at which a boy could enlist in the Army?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It did.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It lowered it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It lowered it; that is, without the consent of the parents.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I mean.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It lowered it from 21 to 18 years of age. That provision was not in the bill as it passed the House; that provision was not in the bill as it passed the Senate. It was incorporated in the conference report. I have searched the Record, and there was not a word of discussion concerning that matter in the Senate. It passed, I know, without my knowledge, and I am certain that it passed—and I do not say it in criticism—without the Members of the Senate being acquainted with the fact that it was there.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that it has always been the law with respect to the National Guard that they could enlist between 18 and 21 years of age.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; and I have something to say about that, Mr. President.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a moment. I wish to call the Senator's attention—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was aware of the fact, but, Mr. President, boys who enlist in the National Guard do not enlist in the Regular Army. It is not in contemplation of service in the Regular Army that boys enlist in the National Guard; it is not in contemplation of service in the Regular Army that the parents consent to boys enlisting in the National Guard. There have been but two times in 51 years when the National Guard has been called upon to serve otherwise than in the National Guard at home.

Mr. President, I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate for one moment here this afternoon longer than is necessary. I want to secure the correction that ought to be made in this provision, and I submit it with this statement, that the people of this country will revolt upon this proposition, Mr. President. It is pushing this preparedness proposition too far.

Mr. WARREN. Of course there is a little different aspect now than there was a couple of months ago. Of course when we had the Civil War the age of enlistment was 17. At the time these matters were considered it looked more like war conditions than it does now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That may furnish the reason for the action of the conferees, although I think while it is the action of Congress now, had the attention of the Senate been directed to it at that time it would have been ample reason for rejecting the conference report. I do not think there is anything in the provisions of either of the two bills that warranted the incorporation of that provision in the conference report.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I know the Senator does not want to do an injustice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not want to do an injustice to anybody.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But the bill as it passed the Senate provided that the Militia of the United States shall consist of all able-bodied male citizens, and so forth, who are more than 16 years of age and not more than 45 years of age—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, Mr. President, that is true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Pardon me, just a moment. Then, when the bill had passed the Senate that way the House provision was 18 and 45.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So as the bill passed the Senate it provided for drafting these young men into the service.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But that was not the provision in regard to enlisted men in the Regular Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There was no provision whatever that touched that section of the statute in either of the two bills, and strictly the conferees were unwarranted in changing the law in that respect. I do not mean to imply any improper motives, but I do say, Mr. President, that fact might be taken into account by the Senate in considering this matter at this time.

Now, Mr. President, without taking another moment of the Senate's time, unless there is opposition to this provision I shall offer no further reasons for its passage. If there is, then I shall have something further to say.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I ask the Senator if he proposes by this amendment to affect the present status of the men who have been enlisted or mustered in?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do. The language of the amendment affects the present status. I drew it purposely in that respect. It enables the parent in every case where the boy is under 21 years of age to object to his continued service. I think it should be so. This thing came upon him unawares, and there is no reason why there should be any different rule for the boys now in the service and for others who may enlist in the future. Many of these boys were taken from school.

Mr. President, consider just for a moment the time of life of these young men. It is the formative period of their characters. We may be willing to give up our boys to the service of the country in a time of great danger, but there is no such stress upon us now as to require that boys should be taken out of the high schools and taken out of the colleges of the country and pushed into the Regular Army, as it can be done and has been done under these two provisions.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I agree fully with the Senator, if the law is to apply in the future there is no reason why it should not apply now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We can pass an act lowering the age limit if the time should ever come when this service is required of the youth of the country.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will say to the Senator I will raise no objection to this amendment if he will make it apply hereafter, but I do not see that it ought to be made applicable to the period of discipline which is now prevailing for the National Guard of the country. There are thousands of men probably in the National Guard at the front to-day, and this disruptive proposition of sending out and bringing men home for one reason or another is not good discipline. It is not consistent legislation. If the Senator will make this apply to the future—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will not change it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Then I raise the objection that it is legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I move to suspend the rules for the passage of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is under compulsion, of course, to sustain the point of order that it is general legislation. The Senator from Wisconsin has given notice for the suspension of the rules, and on that, of course, the roll must be called, because it takes a two-thirds vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I make the point of no quorum in order that we may get Senators here. I want to discuss the matter then with my friend from Maryland.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Md.
Brandeggee	James	Norris	Sterling
Broussard	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Swanson
Bryan	Jones	Page	Underwood
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Phelan	Wadsworth
Chilton	La Follette	Pittman	Warren
Clapp	Lane	Pomerene	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Lee, Md.	Reed	Works
Culberson	Lippitt	Saulsbury
Dillingham	Lodge	Sheppard
du Pont	Martin, Va.	Sherman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. STONE, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. THOMAS answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to suspend clause 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of introducing an amendment to the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, to Senators who were not in the Chamber when I offered this amendment I merely wish to explain its purpose very briefly.

When the Army reorganization bill passed in June, without the knowledge of any Senator on this floor, outside of the members of the conference committee, the law was changed so that boys who were under 21 and over 18 years of age could be enlisted in the Regular Army or transferred from the National Guard into the Regular Army by draft without the consent of their parents. Within a few days after the time that law was applied here in the city of Washington there were 500 cases of parents who applied to the War Department to get their boys back—boys between the ages of 18 and 21 years—and to take them out of that service.

The proposition was never discussed upon the floor of the Senate. If it had been, I do not believe that it could have been passed. There was very little discussion of the conference report, as Senators will remember. The bill as it passed the House of Representatives did not contain the provision with regard to lowering the age limit under which a boy might enlist in the Regular Army from 21 to 18 years in defiance of the will of his parents or guardian.

No provision of that sort was put in the bill while it was pending before the Senate. I have on my desk the bill as it passed the House; I have on my desk the bill as it passed the Senate, the only copy obtainable, withdrawn from the files of the document room by permission of the official in charge, to be returned there. I have examined them carefully; I have examined the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There was no discussion of this subject before the Senate when the bill was pending; there was no discussion of this subject when the conference report came in. There was very little debate upon the conference report. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] made a speech concerning the conference report, and there was a running discussion upon several features of it, but this provision never was touched. I think if anybody had called attention to it it would have been held by the Senate that the conferees could not put that provision into the bill in conference; but, even waiving that, if the proposition had come originally before the Senate when the bill was pending it would, in my opinion, have been defeated here. I do not believe that the Senate nor the Congress of the United States could go back and face the parents of this country with a proposition that they had written into the law that the home might be invaded and the boy taken against the consent of the parent at 18 years of age and put into the Regular Army.

Mr. President, if there is ever a time when a boy needs the influence of the home, it is then, for that is the formative period of his character. There have been occasions in the history of this country, as there have been in the history of all countries, when the people of this country, when the homes of the country, have been ready to give up even boys of tenderer age than this to the defense of the country; but there is no man in favor of preparedness so enthusiastic in his support of it, I think, that he would be prepared to say at this time, or would dare to say at this time, to the parents of this country, "We are ready now to draft your boys into the service of the Regular Army against your consent."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Pardon me for a moment. And the very fact that a boy might willfully wish to enlist at that time is the best evidence in the world that that boy needs the influence of the home.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I unfortunately have been detained from the Chamber for a while and have not heard the earlier part of this discussion. Do I understand that under the law preceding the passage of the Army reorganization act the consent of the parent was required in the case of a draft by the Government?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, under the law as it previously stood no boy, without the consent of his parent or guardian, unless he was over 21 years of age, could be enlisted in the Regular Army. If he was over 18 years of age and under 21 years of age, with the consent in writing of the parent or guardian—

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator is now speaking of enlistments. I was referring to a draft.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am speaking of both enlistments and of drafting the youth of this country from the National Guard. There are two proposals which have been made to the Senate for changes in the law; one that the age limit for enlistments in the Regular Army shall be as it was in the statute before the act of last June, known as the Army reorganization act, was passed, so that no boy between the ages of 18 and 21 shall be enlisted without the consent of his parents or guardian, if he has parents or guardian. The other amendment is that boys can not be taken from the National Guard into the Regular Army by draft or otherwise if they are between those ages without the consent of the parents or guardians.

Mr. President, I doubt if you will find any parents in this country who would not consent to their boys enlisting in the National Guard even though they were below the age of 18, even though they were 16 years of age or 15 years of age, because in the contemplation of the parent of the boy who enlists it does not mean anything but service in the National Guard. There has been no reason why the contract should mean more than that.

In the life of two generations in this country the National Guard has never been but twice drafted into the Regular Army—once during the Spanish-American War and again here within the last few weeks. So all the enlistments that have been made in the National Guard have been made in contemplation of nightly or weekly drills in the armories, and of three or four weeks spent at an encampment within the State, tending to build up a boy in a physical way, something that would appeal to parents; but if the parent contemplated at the time that it meant that a boy 18 years old should be drafted into the Regular Army for a three-year period, I undertake to say, Mr. President, that there are very few parents who would have consented.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I have not been in the Senate during the afternoon, having been engaged on Senate business elsewhere, but I rise to ask just in what form this amendment is, and is it intended to change the act of June 3, 1916?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is intended to change the act of June 3, 1916, and restore the conditions that prevailed before that act was passed.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not just at this moment. To answer the Senator from Missouri a little more fully, the motion that is now pending before the Senate is a motion to suspend the rules. I was constrained, Mr. President, because this amendment changed existing law, to give notice to the Senate that I would ask for the opportunity to suspend the rules and put this amendment upon its passage. I had no opposition from any member of the Committee on Military Affairs to that motion, and therefore, just immediately preceding the call of the Senate, I had offered the amendment without making the preliminary motion to suspend the rules, because I was advised in advance that no member of the committee would raise the question of its being obnoxious to the rule, and that I might have a vote upon its merits directly, and that a majority vote would carry it; but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] raised the question of its being obnoxious to the rule, which necessitates, first, my making a motion to suspend the rule, as I understand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I thought the Senator had concluded. I just want, if the Senator will permit me a moment, to say that it is true, as he said, that prior to the act of June 3, 1916, between the ages of 18 and 21 those enlisting in the Regular Army were required to have the consent of the parents or guardian. That was the law prior to June 3, 1916. The question of enlistment in the Regular Army was not discussed in the Senate, as the Senator very correctly says, when the reorganization act was passed; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there was in the reorganization bill when it passed the Senate a provision which did fix the age of enlistment between 16 and 45 in the National Guard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true, Mr. President. Prior to that time there had been no national law upon that subject. The States had regulated the age.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What I am calling the attention of the Senator to particularly is the fact that this was before the Senate. Now, when that provision was put into the bill the ages were 16 and 45 for the National Guard. That was before the Senate with the reorganization act; and then in connection with that was section 114 of the bill, which authorized the President to call these young men of the National Guard into the service.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true, Mr. President; but no Senator called attention to the fact that under the drafting authority given to the President boys of 16 might be drafted into the Regular Army, and no line in the Record can be found where that was brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not differing with the Senator as to that. What I am calling the Senator's attention to is that the provision was not formulated in the conference committee, but it was before the Senate, although not discussed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But let me say to the Senator from Oregon that the provision to which he now calls attention, with respect to the National Guard, was not in the statute which fixed the age of enlisted men in the Regular Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it was not. It was in the Dick law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There was no amendment in this bill, as it passed the Senate and as it passed the House, changing the law with respect to enlistment in the Regular Army.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And the Senate conferees and the House conferees went entirely outside of both bills and put a provision in here changing the law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question? As his amendment is drawn, will it involve disorganizing the forces which have already gone to the front?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As the amendment is drawn, it will release the boys that are under the age fixed in this amendment and under the age as it stood in the law before this act passed Congress without its having information as to what it was doing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be wise to modify the provision, then, so as simply to apply to the future? I am very cordially with him against allowing any boy under 21 to enlist in the Army without his parents' consent; but if these troops have already gone down to the front, and have been organized on the basis of their present forces, it might cause a very serious interference with existing conditions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, all that it would do would be to release those boys. Now, the Senator must bear in mind that under the provisions of the bill as it passed the Senate with regard to releasing the heads of families, the commanding officer has the right to do that where the evidence before him is convincing as to the need of the family; so it is no more a demoralization of the company or the regiment in that case than it would be in this case. I do submit, Mr. President, with 500 applications made within three days after the mobilization of the National Guard of this city from parents who needed these boys—their mothers, many of them, came to my office, where the boys were the only support of the family, boys under 21 years of age and those above 18, and other Senators interrupted here on the floor to say that they had in their offices, as I had in mine, applications from different States to have these boys restored to their families—I think it ought to be done now.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, in justice to these boys who have been forced into the Army—for that is what it means—and their parents, it should be borne in mind that we have by law changed the contract or the enlistment of these boys by making them subject to service in the Regular Army, practically speaking; and I think we owe it to them to relieve them from that obligation. I made that point when the bill was up—that we were forcing these men into a service for which they had not enlisted at all, and, as I thought, in violation of the Constitution.

It seems to me that this provision ought to apply to the boys who have been forced into the Army in that way just as well as to the future. I think, as a simple act of justice, we should release these boys from that obligation by the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have not the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin before me; so I will ask him for the information, which I will get quicker than I could by reading it, probably.

As I understand from his statement, the effect of the amendment, if agreed to, would be to release all of these boys between 16 and 21 who may now be in the militia—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Between 18 and 21.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Between 18 and 21, without having—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; between 16 and 21.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Without having had the consent of their parents. I was going to ask the Senator whether his amendment was so drafted that if these boys should now obtain the consent of their parents to their service they would not have to be discharged. In other words, I think probably many of these boys who enlisted would like to stay. Now, unless this amendment provides for the contingency, they would all have to be discharged and have to enlist over again, and I should think it would be easy enough if that is not provided for to provide for it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It just restores the statute, and provides that excepting with the consent of the parent or guardian, if they have a parent or guardian, they shall not be held to the service.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wonder whether the proposed statute, providing consent of the parent as a prerequisite to a lawful enlistment, if passed to-day would be considered to relate back to the enlistment of these boys which may have taken place a year ago. I do not see myself how it could; but I think the Senator can easily put in a proviso stating that in the case of any boy now in the service contrary to the provisions of the act the act shall not apply to him, provided the consent of his parents is obtained and filed with the department within 30 days.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that is a reasonable suggestion, and I shall be willing to accept it. It can be very easily framed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It can be adjusted in conference, perhaps.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But I did not know but that the Senator's bill, if properly framed now, might not go to conference. It might be agreed to by the House. However, it is an amendment to this appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is an amendment to this appropriation bill, and it will have to go to the House.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will have to go to the House.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; it will have to go to conference.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the greatest difficulty is with regard to the orphans, the young men who have no parents living. I suppose everyone knows, probably, that out of 100 cases of minors ninety-nine times out of one hundred there is no guardian appointed unless there be money left to the children. In that event an appointment is made, and also in certain cases where children are abused or cruelly treated, and somebody applies as next friend to be appointed guardian. But the great majority of minors have no guardian.

This state of affairs, to my knowledge, constitutes one of the difficulties in recruiting for the Regular Army. A young man between 20 and 21 comes and presents himself to the recruiting officer and is asked his age. He replies, "Twenty years and six months." "Have you the consent of your parents or guardian?" "I have no parents and no guardian." "Well, I can not take you unless you have a guardian appointed." That means an expenditure on the part of this young man of $15 or $20 to go to court and get a guardian appointed; and that is the cause of the rejection of hundreds of young men who apply for enlistment in the Regular Army. Now, this condition should be provided for in the Senator's amendment to the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is provided for, if the Senator will permit me, in the amendment as I have framed it. It only applies to minors who have guardians or parents who may make the protest.

Mr. DU PONT. Then the Adjutant General's Department, to protect itself, will simply prohibit any enlistments of minors without written consent, because young men when they have guardians or when they have parents often say they have not, and then the guardian or parent turns up later and there is trouble.

Now, Mr. President, as I am on my feet, I will say that what the defense act did, so far as the Regular Army is concerned, was simply to apply the same rules and regulations that obtained in the Navy. For years the enlistment of any young man over 18 years of age, with or without the consent of his parents or guardian, has been permitted in the Navy. There has been no difficulty under such rules in all those years, no special friction of any kind; and it was thought wise and proper that both branches of the national defense should be on the same footing. Eighteen years is the recognized military age in all European countries, and is also that which is embodied in the Constitution for the militia.

Mr. President, during the Civil War the great majority of the young men on the Union side were under 21 years of age. Of the total enlisted, 2,778,304, less than one-fourth were over 21 years of age. I have here a table showing these facts, from which it appears that of those who fought on the Union side during the Civil War nearly two and a half million were under 21 years of age, and I suppose that on the Confederate side the same proportion existed, or probably an even greater proportion.

Further, Mr. President, if a young man is to go into the service and patriotically contribute to the defense of his country,

I maintain that he had much better do so at 18, when he can be discharged at 22 at the outside, or at 17, when he can be discharged at 21, and then take up his regular avocation in life; and, it is to be observed, that under the provisions of existing law he could be discharged at the option of the Secretary of War after one year's service.

Then there is another provision of existing law. A young man who enlists in the Army and does not like it, or whose parents insist upon his discharge, can be released by purchase, so that the conditions under which he enlists are not nearly so grave as they were in the former days, when there was no opportunity of getting out of the Army, and the enlistment was for five years. Formerly, when a youth enlisted for five years there was no means of getting out, and it seems to me that these conditions should be taken into consideration.

I submit the statement to which I have referred and will ask that it be incorporated in my remarks, if there be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The statement referred to is as follows:

Ages attributed to those who enlisted in the Union Army during the Civil War.

Those 10 years and under	25
Those 11 years and under	38
Those 12 years and under	225
Those 13 years and under	300
Those 14 years and under	1,523
Those 15 years and under	104,987
Those 16 years and under	231,051
Those 17 years and under	844,891
Those 18 years and under	1,151,438
Those 21 years and under	2,159,798
Those 22 years and over	618,511
Those 25 years and over	46,462
Those 44 years and over	16,071

Of the total men enlisted, 2,778,304, less than one-fourth, were over 21 years of age.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I made the objection to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin for two reasons: First, the effect on the Regular Army; and, second, the effect on the National Guard.

The statistics show that the Regular Army is going ahead only at the rate of 1,000 men, net, a month; and since the passage of the Army bill on the 3d of June there has been, of course, an increased enlistment in the Regular Army under the war excitement that was current. Now, a large number of those enlisting were doubtless minors, and enlisted probably without their parents' consent, between the ages of 18 and 21; and those men were lawfully enlisted and have been lawfully sent to the front.

My judgment differs entirely from that of the Senator who offered this amendment. I think the young man who enlists in the Regular Army without the consent of his parents is the very fellow who ought to be there. It is the place for him. It shows that the old people can not handle that boy, and he ought to go where he will get the man handling that will make a man out of him. Instead of spoiling those boys by this sentimental stuff and letting them come home, let them stay where they have put themselves lawfully.

My father went to sea as a midshipman when he was 14 years old in the Regular Navy of the United States, and those were long cruises; but now the Senator from Wisconsin, who represents what was once a hardy frontier State, objects to a young man of 18 serving 90 days in camp away from his parents. There is no reason why a young man who is 18 years old and above can not enlist in the United States Army and serve there successfully and get the discipline of that experience; and if he does it without his parents' consent, he is the very man that ought to be put there, so that they can make him respect constituted authority. He lacks that deference for those to whom he should defer if he acts in that way, and the very action that he takes shows that he ought to be where his nature has put him.

Mr. President, there is another objection, and that is the effect upon the National Guard. The Senator from Wisconsin, at the same moment he objects to a 90-day service for preparedness, says he is willing to sacrifice this young man or any untrained boy of any age, whenever there is a real war, send him to the front, in that event, unprepared, undisciplined, unhardened, food for powder and disease. Why, Mr. President, that is the very acme of unpreparedness. That is not the kind of policy the Senate should follow. Here we have an unequal opportunity for training these thousands of young men who have gone to the Rio Grande. The chairman of the committee says he does not think there is any possibility of their going across that river and of there being real war. It is a contingency, of course, and may turn out one way or the other; but certainly there is now presented a grand opportunity for training and for preparation. As to the risk, as the Senator from Wisconsin himself says, there is no very great risk about it now; and yet, when there is not any risk, he wants to bring them home, and when there is a risk he is willing to send them out.

Mr. President, this is a retroactive proposition. It upsets what has been lawfully done under an act of Congress for a month or more. If the Senate concludes to partly disrupt the discipline of the Regular Army and of the militia alike by drawing all these young men out of the ranks who are lawfully there, it is, to say the least, an eccentric military policy, and it is another illustration of the extraordinary vacillation in legislative management of a military plan.

Mr. President, if you want to change this thing for the future, change it, but do not go back and uproot what has been done, and disrupt the discipline of all these commands, Regular and militia alike, by this sort of short-sighted, emotional, and sentimental legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to suspend the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was going to suggest an amendment to the amendment, but the first question is on the suspension of the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the first question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in explanation of my vote. In conformity with my statements in the past I wish to say that I shall not vote to suspend the rule to place general legislation on an appropriation bill, unless the proposed legislation is vital to the interests of our country. I do not believe the proposed amendment is such. Therefore I shall vote against the suspension of the rule. If the rules are suspended, I will vote for the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the suspension of the rule, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He does not seem to be in the Chamber. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same transfer of my pair that I made on the last vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], but on this question I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRYAN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—44.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion prevails, and the Senate suspends the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The amendment has been read. It has been printed two or three times, and I think the Senate well understands it. It is somewhat long, because I have reenacted sections of the law, but the only change made is with respect to the age limit. I have proposed in perfection of the amendment three or four lines pursuant to the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] which I think meets that suggestion, and I will ask that those lines be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 of the printed amendment, after the words "nineteen hundred and sixteen," insert "and who, within 30 days after the approval of this act, shall not have filed the consent of such parent or guardian."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is so that anyone who is in the Regular Army by virtue of this legislation who files the consent of his parent or guardian remains in the Regular Army.

Mr. DU PONT. Suppose he has no guardian, I ask the Senator?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then he is not affected by the amendment at all one way or the other.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, while I think that this amendment will affect the Regular Army perhaps more than it will the National Guard, nevertheless it looks to me as being a retroactive proposition uprooting the status of men already mustered into the service of the United States and of the National Guard of the several States.

I wish to move three amendments to prevent the retroactive effect of the amendment, namely, in line 1, page 3, after the word "shall," to insert the word "hereafter"; in line 7, to strike out the words "June 3" and insert the words "July 26"; and on page 4, line 16, after the words "shall be" to insert the word "hereafter."

The effect of that will be to suspend the enlistment of men under 21 without the consent of their parents after this date.

I therefore move, on line 1, page 4, that the word "hereafter" shall be inserted after the word "shall."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 1, page 3, after the word "shall," insert the word "hereafter."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I rise to favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin and to oppose the amendment to it offered by the Senator from Maryland. I think if the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is good at all—and I believe it is good—it ought to apply to the boy who has been taken into the Army in the last 30 days just as much as to the boy who goes in in the future.

Mr. President, I believe this great country of ours ought to be reasonably prepared to meet an emergency in the future, prepared to meet war conditions if they arise, and I am willing to vote for a reasonable law to accomplish that purpose and for reasonable appropriations to carry it out. But under the pressure of a public sentiment that I do not believe is entirely real, under the pressure that has been worked up within the last year growing out of the hysterical conditions that arise from a great war across the waters, it seems to me that we are going war mad to some extent. When the Congress of the United States will deliberately in time of profound peace, in a time when no great war threatens our people or our country, say that they favor legislation to invade the sanctity of the homes of this country and destroy the family unit and destroy the family life for the sake of building up a great octopus in the form of an army that may never be used in time of peace, I for one am ready to declare that we should halt.

Military men who see nothing in the life of the Nation except the badge of the soldier, the martial air of the band as it goes down the street, the boom of the great cannon, and the glory of the future, may be able to sacrifice the youth of this country; but I know and you know that some boys of 18 are men, some boys of 18 are children. Some boys of 18 may go into the camp life of the Army and come back home with their moral character and their lives redeemed, and some boys of 18 who are led into the camp life of an army come back home with their moral character destroyed, because they have not the mental and the moral stamina to stand alone when taken away from the family circle, and that unit of the human family is destroyed.

War; yes; in war we should take chances; in war we are ready to sacrifice anything for our country; but in a time of profound peace shall we make the mother and the father of this country sacrifice the boy to make a policeman on a border or a unit in a regiment that may never be used?

I have had letters already in reference to this matter, appealing letters from good men and good women, where the recruiting sergeant met their boy in the streets of the country town and persuaded him in martial glory to go with him to the recruiting camp; and when the father and mother heard of it the shackles of the power of the United States Government were about that boy's wrists, and no power can take him away from the Government for seven long years if the Government seeks to hold him. He may have been the pride of the family, the only child. He may have had a college education and opportunity before him to build up a life that may be useful to the Nation and the country. You tear him away at school age for seven years' enlistment if you put him in the Regular Army—three years with the colors and four years in the reserve, which may be seven years' continuous service. You take him away in the very period of life when he should have the opportunity for a higher education and destroy it. There may be boys who can well go out at that time; there may be boys who can better go than stay at home; but Congress in its great power says that it will stay here and judge of the life of those boys instead of leaving it to the parent and the guardian to determine whether it is better for that boy to lead a life in the Army or whether it is better for him to go to college and pursue the course that the family thinks should be outlined for him.

Mr. JONES. Have we not also provided to pay postmasters $5 for every one of these boys whom they get to enlist in the Army?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly we have. We have put a price on the heads of the youth of this country in dollars and cents to take them away from their homes, their families, and their firesides to make soldiers of them in times of profound peace.

When a man is 21 years of age he may be, in fact, but a boy; but that is recognized by law as the time when he can make his own contracts. Then he must take the chance himself. But by law to reverse the law of this land that has been on the statute books for decades and say that you are going to let a recruiting sergeant invade that home, tear to pieces the tender heart of a mother, destroy the heart's ambition of a father, and possibly destroy the future life of the boy himself, simply because you have made up your minds at any cost to build a great Army machine in this country—if that is where the Congress of the United States is going, if that is where my party is going, then I cry, "Halt!" I am willing to stop the march here, and I will go no farther.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to state one case of which I know. A bright young boy from Georgia, the son of parents in very humble circumstances, the one boy of the family who had shown especially strong mentality. He had won some prizes in the graded schools and had won some prizes in the high school. The whole family, by pinching and saving and economizing, got money enough to send that boy to one of the universities here in the city of Washington. He enlisted with some other boys who associated with him when appealed to by the recruiting officer in the District Guard, never supposing for a moment that he would be drafted into the Regular Army, as he was. When that time came, Mr. President, the pathos of the whole situation as it came to me from that humble home in Georgia was in itself enough to have moved the Senate to strike this provision from the law. There was a family that staked their all on this boy in order that he might have a college education. He was the only one out of the family who had shown a desire for student life, and yet he is drawn into this net by reason of the draft provision which we have here, and all that the family have sacrificed for him is swept aside. I did not intend to take the Senator from Alabama off the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was through.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, not a single soldier has yet been drafted into the service of the United States of whom I have heard; but there has been a call of the President on account of the national emergency, and men have been mustered into the service of the United States under that call.

It is a remarkable situation when two Senators, representing the extreme types of mentality that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] represent, both agree that they are willing to send boys into a war untrained; to kiss them good-by, and to let them go to die of disease or inefficiency from a military standpoint; but they are not willing to let these young men stay in the militia army now for a short while and be made soldiers of when nobody is shooting at them. It is remarkable, indeed, that two such brilliant mentalities should run away from what seems common-sense preparedness, to the extent of this proposition made here this afternoon.

Ruin the boy! Why, the Senator from Wisconsin almost wept here in the aisle about the effect upon that boy whom he has just described in Georgia. Probably the best thing that could ever have happened to that boy in his life would be to get the discipline which he might get in the National Guard in the next three months, and he would go home a better and a stronger boy, a boy more appreciative of his home and of his family. Hard of muscle and clear of eye they would greet in him a real soldier returning. No harm would be done him—not the slightest.

All of this is sentimental imagination, Mr. President. Every one of those young men will be the better for his experience if this wise body will only let them get the experience. The real blow, however, that is being aimed here, Mr. President, is a blow at the Organized Militia of the United States. Every time some Senator gets up here—a soldier being called to the colors—and has a spell of sentimental emotion over the family separation, inside of five days afterwards the Senator from Oregon will give out an interview in the newspapers and describe the action of the Senate as a weakness in the militia system of the United States. That is about what the meaning of this situation is, Mr. President. You have sent these 91,000 or 100,000 men to the front, and you send after them to bring back the ones who have dependents. You will not provide for the dependents, which would be the sensible thing to do and the thing which has been done by every nation of the earth; but you will disrupt these forces and get these men home.

Now comes another line of suggestion of the very same sort, of a young man with dependents—this pathetic family from Georgia, which the Senator from Wisconsin has just described. Why not provide for that family? Why not let that boy stay there and have that experience? He needs it. Why not let some of the young manhood of this country get ready to defend it with some degree of military experience and military skill?

Mr. President, it is absolutely criminal to let this condition of unpreparedness continue. The Senator from Alabama has spoken of the "war craziness" of the country. Mr. President, it is "peace wisdom" to prepare against war. We want to prepare in peace with a reasonable degree of calmness and efficiency against the horrors and possibilities of war, coming as it does these days vastly and suddenly. We do not want to see our boys marching off unprepared, undisciplined, under those banners and those drums which the Senator was just now waving and beating, in which he appeared to glory, as a part of the old-time folly of the miserable military policies that this country has heretofore followed.

No, Mr. President, we have wasted too much life and treasure upon that sort of misapplication of our power in the past. Wars in the future will be nothing like the wars of the past. They will come quickly; they will come hard; they will come fearfully when they do come. It is absolutely essential that the young manhood of this country should now be trained in a way that they will be able to meet these evils and to defend their homes.

Far from sympathizing with the picture which the Senator from Wisconsin has drawn of this home whose members have saved for the education of this boy, and this boy who is going away to a militia camp, as the Senator says, to be destroyed, I look upon it exactly the other way. That boy is going to be made a man, if the Senator will let him stay where he is.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland pardon an interruption?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. How would it do to leave it to that family to say what shall be done with the boy, instead of leaving it to the Senator or to me?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The situation speaks for itself. The boy has shown that he needs the military experience; and if he gets it for 90 days, it will not hurt him, unless he is the greatest milksop in the world.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course, it would be a relief to the family if he comes home in a wooden box, I suppose, according to the Senator's logic.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Quite the contrary. Give him a chance to keep out of that box.

Mr. CLAPP. The family does not seem to be considered here.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Wooden boxes will be filled much more by unpreparedness than by preparedness. It is from not letting boys become manly soldiers that you fill wooden boxes. The incapacity of a country to properly drill, instruct, and marshal its forces is what fills the wooden boxes with dead soldiers. At the time of the Spanish-American War this country had no trained militia to speak of. We owe a great deal to the Dick law, and the organization that took place under it; but the Spanish-American War illustrated how unpreparedness fills the wooden boxes.

Mr. President, the experience in the organization of the militia even under the imperfection of the Dick law has been a wonderful thing for this country. It was a little taste of what we ought to have a great deal more of. I deplore the position of the two distinguished Senators, who are willing to call home a boy because of sentimental emotion, rather than to let that boy be trained and make a man out of him in the service of his country, who say they are patriotically willing to march the boy out with a banner and a drum in the event of actual war and probably to die because wholly unprepared to meet an enemy, but are not willing to let him go into camp for three months and be trained with his fellows, as every able-bodied citizen of Switzerland has to do when he comes of age. Mr. President, that is soft sentimentality, and although the Senate is probably overwhelmed by it and will adopt this procedure, nevertheless it is unwise and in the ultimate analysis both dangerous to the country and hard on all the boys.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 5, in the printed amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the word "hereafter."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is there not another amendment of the Senator from Maryland pending to the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland has been disposed of.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator called attention to several amendments, Mr. President.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I thought the vote on the first would indicate the uselessness of offering the others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on page 42, I move to strike out, beginning with the words "Provided further," in line 7, and all of lines 8, 9, and 10.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, line 7, after the word "subsistence," it is proposed to strike out:

Provided further. That authority is hereby granted the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of, in accordance with law and regulations, the United States Army transports Meade and Crook.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I tried to find out just why the department wanted to sell these transports, but I have not been able to get very much information with reference to it except the statement from the Quartermaster General's office, that they are old and unsuitable for their purposes and ought to be disposed of, because of the fact that possibly with some expenditure they can be made suitable for commercial purposes. The Meade is a vessel of 5,641 gross tons, of 3,375 net tons, and was constructed in 1874. The Crook is a vessel of 4,126 gross tons, 2,703 net tons, and was constructed in 1882. So it appears that the vessels are quite old; and while it is generally stated that a vessel that is 20 years old is ready for the scrap heap, Admiral Benson, before the subcommittee on commerce, considering the shipping bill, my recollection now is, referred to one naval transport that was constructed in 1879, and stated that that vessel was good for 10 years' service yet.

The War Department states that the Crook has been laid up at San Francisco for several years. I can not understand why, with the great necessity that we have had for ships during the last two or three years, one of the Army transports should be laid up during all that time and apparently no effort made to put it into the service and get any good out of it, especially when the Senator from Florida stated the other day that the Government has spent $2,000,000 in transporting nitrate from Chile during the last two or three years.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. There will have to be some legislation before the Quartermaster General's office can put the vessels into regular lines of commercial business outside of the wants of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. JONES. I would not want them to do that.

Mr. WARREN. The sale of these vessels will accomplish exactly what the Senator wants to accomplish, I take it; and that is to increase the shipping facilities of the country. It will take them from a place where they can not be used for the purpose for which he wishes them to be used, and it is hoped that they may be bought and put in order so as to be able to engage in regular commercial business.

Mr. JONES. Well, why do we not use them for transportation purposes, in view of the fact that we are paying high freight rates now to the Philippines, to Hawaii, and to various other places?

Mr. WARREN. We are doing that already with transports which the Government is using.

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; the Government is paying large sums of money all the time now, and has been, for the transportation of its freight.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that the stoppage of the sale of those vessels will simply tie them up that much longer; that is all. They will not be put into service.

Mr. JONES. Why not? Why could they not be repaired and put into service?

Mr. WARREN. Can the Senator from Washington tell me the capacity of these vessels?

Mr. JONES. I have just stated the gross-tonnage figures. The Meade has a gross tonnage of 5,641 and a net tonnage of 3,375, and the Crook has a gross tonnage of 4,126 and a net tonnage of 2,703. So they are pretty good-sized vessels.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Do I understand that those ships have not been used, but have simply been lying at the dock?

Mr. JONES. It is stated in the House hearings that—

The Crook has been laid up out of commission for several years at San Francisco, and the local authorities at that port have stated that it would require a very large expenditure to place this vessel in working condition, with no guaranty that service for any considerable length of time could be obtained, even after the expenditure of a large sum of money. The transport Meade was surveyed by a representative of the Steamboat-Inspection Service at Galveston, Tex., in the fall of 1914, the report indicating that the physical condition of the vessel was such that she was unsafe and unseaworthy. The vessel was therefore sent to Newport News, Va., and placed out of commission.

So that they have been out of commission for several years.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is remarkable that they should have been permitted to lie there when, as the Senator has said, we have such a demand for ships for carrying the Government's freight.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Is the Senator fully satisfied of the fact that those ships under the law could be used for carrying miscellaneous freight for the Government, or does the law which authorized the purchase of ships and making them transports confine the operations of those ships to the movements of and the supplies for the troops?

Mr. JONES. I can not say about that; but if there is any lack of authority, if it had been asked for, it could have been given. I do not know whether there is a limit on the authority for that purpose, but it does seem to me that, if the Army requires nitrates for the different arsenals, for the powder factories, and so on, that we could certainly use the transports for the purpose of bringing the nitrates here, because that is purely an Army supply material. I may be mistaken in that, but I am assuming that the Senator from Florida was informed of what he was saying the other day when he stated that it had cost this Government $2,000,000 in freight charges for the transportation of nitrates for the Government.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senator has raised a very important point, Mr. President, particularly as we will be asked within a week or so to pass the ship-purchase bill. Now, we are asked to sell vessels. It would be better, it seems to me, to pass legislation transferring these vessels to that department of the Government which will have charge of the ship-purchase proposition.

Mr. JONES. I was going to refer to that, and suggest that it might be a good idea for us to hold those two transports, so that we could turn them over to the shipping board as soon as possible; and they would have something to work with, at any rate.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator a final question. Has the Senator been able to get any definite information from the War Department as to why these two vessels were out of commission?

Mr. JONES. Only a general statement that they are unseaworthy, unfit, and so forth. I have a letter from the department—

Mr. PENROSE. In what way unseaworthy? Could they not be repaired?

Mr. JONES. The department say that, if authority is given them, they are going to sell the vessels to some commercial interests, who will repair them and put them in commission; and I take it that if private parties could do that the Government ought to be able to do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if there is any provision in this bill that will prevent the Government buying these ships back when we have passed the ship-purchase bill?

Mr. JONES. Not at all; not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. And pay 100 per cent more.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's motion to strike out the permission to sell those ships does not cover the question. Unless he provides that they may go into some other management or unless he changes the present law, they will not be used for the purposes the Senator mentions.

Mr. JONES. Would the Senator be willing to put a provision of that kind in the law? I am perfectly willing. I think something ought to be done so that these ships can be used. I do not see why any of these ships should be tied up at the docks during the last several years, and especially during the last two years, when we have been paying such high freight rates, when there has been such a demand.

It seems to me that the department has been a little derelict, if it has not had the authority to use these vessels for transporting nitrates, for instance. In not asking for it, if the Government has needed them; and if it was necessary to have them repaired, the department should have come to Congress and asked for such an appropriation or such authority as may have been necessary to repair them and use them in supplying the Government's needs.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the department has asked on other occasions for permission to sell these vessels. They have stated what it would cost to repair them; but they do not believe, for the purpose for which transports are maintained in the Quartermaster Department, that they can make these vessels fit and safe for transporting soldiers—human life. They do not think it is worth while, in the condition they are in, to try to repair them; but they might be repaired and used to perform some other service, and the whole purpose of this provision is to take them out of where they are, doing nothing, and put them into service.

Mr. JONES. And put them in private hands.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly. If the Government sells them, I presume the Senator does not care in what hands they are, if they are doing business.

Mr. JONES. I am inclined to think that when the Government has them it ought to use them, especially for its own transportation.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator had better prepare, then, an amendment that will cover it. What he proposes now simply leaves them tied up.

Mr. JONES. The mere fact that we are prevented from selling them is no reason at all for leaving them tied up.

Mr. OVERMAN. How much wharfage are we paying for them?

Mr. JONES. I do not know. I suppose we are paying possibly hundreds of dollars, or maybe, as a Senator suggests, thousands of dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, more likely thousands of dollars.

Mr. JONES. Yes; probably thousands. I do not expect that these vessels would be used in transporting soldiers. Transports are not used solely for that purpose. There are other things that the Government has to have transported—hay and various products of different kinds.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I understand that the law restricts the use of these vessels absolutely to transporting troops and supplies for troops, and that they could not be used for any other purpose. Is that so?

Mr. JONES. I do not know. If it is, the law certainly ought to be changed.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; if that is the law, it ought to be changed.

Mr. JONES. I can not believe that that is the law.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wyoming probably knows whether it is the law or not.

Mr. JONES. I can not believe that it is.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wyoming says he understands it is the law that when these transports were authorized this limitation of use was put upon them.

Mr. JONES. That is no reason for our authorizing the sale of them here to private parties, unless we think it is better to do that than to change the law and allow them to be used by the Government.

Mr. LODGE. If we can not do that under the law, we had better sell them rather than to have them rot at the wharves.

Mr. JONES. Why, certainly; but we can make the law. We are the lawmakers. We can legislate to meet the situation, and we ought to have done it two or three years ago. If the fact was called to our attention that by reason of the law they could not use these vessels, we are derelict in our duty for not doing it and they were derelict in their duty if they have not called it to our attention.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator has evidently given a good deal of thought to this matter, and, if it does not delay the bill, I would suggest that he offer an amendment to-morrow releasing the limitations on these vessels, so that they may be used to haul nitrates, or anything else, for the Government.

Mr. LODGE. That is the simplest way.

Mr. PENROSE. That is the direct and practical way to get at it—to disagree to this amendment for the sale of these vessels and put in a provision removing the restriction. It is ridiculous for the Government to sell two vessels this week and next week to be authorized to purchase millions of dollars' worth of vessels.

Mr. JONES. I was going to call attention to that fact.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the hearings on this subject? This is not an amendment at all. It is a provision in the House bill.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes. I have moved to strike it out.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will have to be a motion to strike out.

Mr. JONES. That is what I have done. I have made a motion to strike it out.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will look at the hearings—

Mr. PENROSE. I refer to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to strike it out.

Mr. FLETCHER. In one of the hearings this statement was made by Col. Baker:

The transport Meade, 42 years old, and the transport Crook, 34 years old, are in such physical condition at the present time that they can no longer be economically operated as transports, and it is felt that their continuance in service is not justified by any service they can render. The Crook has been laid up out of commission for several years at San Francisco, and the local authorities at that port have stated that it would require a very large expenditure to place this vessel in working condition, with no guarantee that service for any considerable length of time could be obtained, even after the expenditure of a large sum of money. The transport Meade was surveyed by a representative of the Steamboat Inspection Service at Galveston, Tex., in the fall of 1914, the report indicating that the physical condition of the vessel was such that she was unsafe and unseaworthy. The vessel was therefore sent to Newport News, Va., and placed out of commission.

Mr. JONES. Yes; and after that statement the department—

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to ask the Senator from Florida a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the Senator any information as to when the Government bought those ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. One of them is 43 years old.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But when did the Government become possessed of them?

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, there is nothing here to show that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator know what the Government paid for them or the value of the ships?

Mr. FLETCHER. The suggestion is made that it was during the Spanish-American War, in 1898.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In 1898-99.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not a list of them. I have it at some other place, but I have not it here. I am not sure but that those vessels were perhaps obtained at that time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Did the board of survey make any estimate as to the value of the vessels?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think not. I have no figures of that kind. They give the age of the vessel. They say the transport Meade is 42 years old and the Crook is 34 years old, and both are out of condition, and both are unseaworthy.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The transaction is in keeping with many that occurred at the time of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. FLETCHER. They were never cargo carriers or anything of that sort. They were used to transport troops and to carry passengers.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my understanding is, and I get the information from pretty reliable authority, that they were originally cargo carriers, and that they can be very easily fitted up now for cargo-carrying purposes. Of course there were possibly some changes made in their original carrying capacity in order to fit them for use as transports; but, as I understand—I have not had the time to look into this as fully as I would have been glad to do, and get all the facts in regard to it—originally they were not built for transport purposes. These vessels were built in Scotland and for cargo-carrying purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator lives in a State that is largely interested in transportation on the water. Does the Senator really think that a vessel 42 years old is worth repairing?

Mr. JONES. The War Department thinks so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, they think that some private party may patch it up and put it on a river, perhaps, or a pond somewhere.

Mr. JONES. No; these ships could not be put on our rivers. These are foreign-built ships. They will have to go in the foreign trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. But will they have to go in the foreign trade?

Mr. JONES. They will under the present law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Hardly so, I think. They belong to the Government.

Mr. JONES. But if they are sold to private parties they can not go into the coastwise trade or our river trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not quite sure, considering the amendments that have been made to our navigation laws, whether they could get American registry or not. I think they could.

Mr. JONES. There might be something to that; yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. A vessel 42 years old—I know something about that matter—is so obsolete that I wonder that anybody would try to repair it for ocean transportation. It would look to me like a fallacious scheme. Of course, if they were not so old, I would join the Senator very earnestly in preventing the Government from selling them, and make them the nucleus for the shipping board, because the shipping board will not be able to get any new vessels under two or three years, and they can not buy a vessel to-day, foreign or domestic, without paying twice what it is worth. So these vessels would be a nucleus for that grand scheme of spending $500,000,000, I think, on a matter that will never amount to anything, so far as the interests of the Government are concerned.

Mr. JONES. That is one thing I really had in mind. I am hoping to have something for this shipping board to start on and to handle. I have provided in this bill that it shall have authority to repair ships; and I thought probably, if private parties could repair these ships and make them commercially a profitable venture, the shipping board that we are going to get might get some experience by repairing these ships and putting them into commercial trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. I sympathize with the Senator in that, because I am sure that unless they are authorized to buy interned ships they will not be able to buy any ships, foreign or domestic, without paying more than twice what they are worth, and, as I suggested a moment ago, they will not be able to get any ships built in our shipyards under two years at least.

Mr. PENROSE. And then a suggestion might arise to have the shipping bill apply to the Lakes. These vessels might be useful on the shores of the Lakes.

Mr. JONES. Yes. Of course, when they are in the hands of this shipping board they can go in the coastwise trade.

Mr. PENROSE. They might afford a nucleus for ships for the interlake traffic.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in view of the solicitude of our friends on the other side that the new shipping board, if it ever comes into existence, will have nothing to start with, I am willing to leave this matter out, and let either the new shipping board or some subsequent session of Congress dispose of the matter in an appropriate way.

Mr. JONES. Very well. I just want to call attention to what is said by the department here:

The present demand for ships for commercial service is such that if these two vessels could be sold at this time the amount which could be obtained by the Government by such sale would be greatly in excess of the amount that could ordinarily be obtained for these vessels, it being probable that there would be some form of commercial service for which they could be satisfactorily used, although not suitable for the use of this department.

So the department suggests that these vessels that have been so strongly condemned in the statement read by the Senator from Florida, where it is said that they are not safe for passenger traffic or anything else, can be used by private parties with safety and with profit.

They also state here that—

The rate now being paid for the transportation of Government freight on the Pacific is high, approximately $15 per ton.

Then I want to call attention to one suggestion here with reference to conditions on the Pacific:

To the Philippines the only steamship companies operating regular service are the Toyo Kisen Kaisha and the Java-Pacific Lines, both foreign registry, who advise that they have no published tariff in effect at the present time, but that rates are quoted as shipments are offered.

That might be a very valuable suggestion to those who are considering the shipping bill and requiring the publication of rates and all that sort of thing. These foreign companies do not publish any tariff rates at all. They simply make quotations when shipments are offered, and that is what we will be up against in the matter of competition.

They state that shipments of general merchandise are being accepted for July sailings at rate of $20 per ton, weight or measurement.

I will not take the time of the Senate further. I should like to put in the RECORD this letter from the department. I have, in fact, three letters here—two letters from the department and this other statement—which may be considered by the committee of conference. As I understand the chairman is willing to let this go out and consider it in conference, I will not take the further time of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letters referred to by the Senator from Washington will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, July 8, 1916.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of July 6, 1916, addressed to the Secretary of War, and by him referred to this office for reply, you are informed that the reasons why the Army transports Meade and Crook should be sold by the Government are that these vessels are so old and out of repair that they are no longer suitable for satisfactory use as Army transports, and the cost of their maintenance and operation is so great that they can not be efficiently and economically operated for the transportation of the Army and its supplies.

The present demand for ships for commercial service is such that if these two vessels could be sold at this time the amount which could be obtained by the Government by such sale would be greatly in excess of the amount that could ordinarily be obtained for these vessels, it being probable that there would be some form of commercial service for which they could be satisfactorily used, although not suitable for the use of this department.

Although the rate now being paid for the transportation of Government freight on the Pacific is high (approximately $15 per ton from the west coast to the Philippines), the cost of operation of either the Meade or Crook for the quantities of Government freight being transported would be greatly in excess of the total expenditures necessary to transport same by commercial carrier, and the department would not be justified in operating either one of the vessels mentioned for such freight service as is now being accomplished commercially on the Pacific. The exact amount of freight which has been carried on the Pacific for the Army during the past six months, or the exact rates paid for the different shipments, is not as yet fully of record in this office, but telegraphic inquiry has been made of the officers in charge of such shipments on the Pacific coast, and as soon as their replies are received you will be further advised in regard to your inquiry in this respect.

Very respectfully,

HENRY G. SHARPE,
Brigadier General, Quartermaster Corps,
Acting Quartermaster General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, July 15, 1916.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying further to your letter of July 6, 1916, in which you requested rates now being paid by the War Department to private parties for transportation of freight on the Pacific during the last six months, and what amount of freight has been carried for the Army during that period, you are informed that the depot quartermaster, Seattle, reports the following quantities of freight have been shipped from Seattle to Honolulu and Manila at the expense indicated for each:

Kind of freight.	Destination.	Quantity.	Freight rate.	Total.
Hay.....	Honolulu...	86,900 cubic feet.....	5 cents per cubic foot.	$4,345.00
Bran.....	do.....	54,603 pounds.....	$4.50 per ton.....	122.86
Fish and meat.....	do.....	15,800 pounds.....	2 cents per pound.....	316.00
Wharfage.....	do.....	.....	.....	292.00
Oats.....	do.....	2,731,921 pounds.....	$3.50 per ton.....	4,780.86
Oats and hay.....	Manila.....	153,907 cubic feet.....	$15 per cubic ton.....	57,715.13
Total.....	.....	.....	.....	67,571.85

The desired report has not as yet been received from the depot quartermaster, San Francisco, but you will be further advised as soon as the required information has been received.

Respectfully,

HENRY G. SHARPE,
Brigadier General, Quartermaster Corps,
Acting Quartermaster General.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., July 10, 1916.

REPORT OF OVER-SEA SHIPMENTS.

1. In reply to your telegram of the 8th instant the following report of over-sea shipments is submitted:

	Weight.	Measure-ment.	Total cost.
	Pounds.	Cubic feet.
For fiscal year 1916:
To Hawaii.....	15,474,678	678,489	$54,391.41
To Philippines.....	7,732,486	232,750	39,432.44
For period Jan. 1 to June 30, 1916:
To Hawaii.....	7,304,671	299,371	27,044.41
To Philippines.....	None.	.....	.....

2. The rates paid for the transportation of the shipments referred to are as follows:

To Hawaii up to January 12:
General merchandise, $3.50 per ton, weight or measurement; hay, 5 cents per cubic foot; refrigerator cargo, 2 cents per pound.

January 12 and subsequent:
General merchandise, $4 per ton, weight or measurement; hay, 6 cents per cubic foot; refrigerator cargo, 2 cents per pound.

To Philippines:
General merchandise, $12 per ton, weight or measurement; canned goods, $9 per ton, weight; hay, $6 per ton, measurement.

3. The present rates for shipments to Hawaii are as named above for period subsequent to January 12, 1916.

To the Philippines the only steamship companies operating regular service are the Toyo Kisen Kaisha and the Java-Pacific Lines, both foreign registry, who advise that they have no published tariff in effect at the present time, but that rates are quoted as shipments are offered. They state that shipments of general merchandise are being accepted for July sailings at rate of $20 per ton, weight or measurement.

Colonel, Quartermaster Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I want to say that I understand an amendment has been adopted with reference to voting by the soldiers: I want to reserve that amendment, and reserve the right to offer an amendment to it in the Senate.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, there are two items with respect to which I should like to reserve the right to offer amendments in the Senate, namely, on page 68, on the subject of the manufacture of arms, where the committee reduced the House appropriation for rifles from $5,000,000 to $2,500,000; and on page 87, where the committee amendment cut down the amount provided for Field Artillery practice ranges and places for the instruction of troops from $300,000 to $800.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there are no further amendments to be offered, before the bill goes into the Senate, at the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I desire to reserve the amendment on page 18, beginning with line 11, down to and including the word "seventeen" on line 2, page 19.

Mr. LODGE entered the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I observe that the Senator from Massachusetts is here now. I did not know that he was coming in. I have just asked to have reserved the amendment which the Senator mentioned to me.

Mr. LODGE. I am much obliged to the Senator from Utah. The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to which I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee, and I hope he will be willing to accept it and take it into conference. I do not wish to take up time in discussing it, though I think it is important. I will send it to the desk to be read. It is to go at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following words:

Section 122 of the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, shall not apply to persons who have lawfully received their medals of honor in accordance with the terms and conditions of the law or laws relating to medals of honor then existing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts explain the purpose of that?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in the Army act approved in June there was inserted a section numbered 122, concerning investigations with regard to medals of honor. That section was entirely new matter, put in in conference. It never was before the House. It never was before the Senate. It is not connected, so far as I can make out, with anything in the bill. In providing for that investigation it is said:

This with a view to ascertain what medals of honor, if any, have been awarded or issued for any cause other than distinguished conduct by an officer or enlisted man in action involving actual conflict with an enemy by such officer or enlisted man or by troops with which he was serving at the time of such action. And in any case in which said board shall find and report that said medal was issued for any cause other than that hereinbefore specified the name of the recipient of the medal so issued shall be stricken permanently from the official medal-of-honor list.

Under the act of 1862 it is provided that medals should be given for distinguished gallantry in action or other soldierly acts. A second provision in 1863 provided simply gallantry in action. Many medals were granted for soldierly acts properly under that law and were given in accordance with the act of 1862. Now it is proposed to apply rigidly to all those medals a new definition, making it absolutely retroactive. If medals were improperly issued under the terms of the act of 1862 or 1863, it is all very well perhaps to take them away; but if they were properly issued under the acts of 1862 and 1863 they ought not to be taken away by a new definition adopted last June. It is to cure that that I offer this amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I shall have to make that point.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly it is subject to a point of order; I do not dispute that, but I think we are likely to have some very serious cases of injustice to men who received, and justly received, medals of honor in the Civil War and in the Spanish War in accordance with the law at that time. I do not believe myself it can be done or would be done by any board of officers, but I do think that it is a very bad precedent to have a clause that was put into a bill in conference, never before either House of Congress, under which such a wrong might be done.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have no fear whatever that wrong will be done by a board of officers composed of retired Army officers of character.

Mr. LODGE. I will say, Mr. President, this amendment is suggested by the board.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I make the point of order that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to give notice that I reserve the right to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment I offered with reference to Fort Taylor, Key West, was defeated, or to offer that amendment again in the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to make the same reservation with reference to the proposition offered by me in regard to the appointment of inspectors of food products for the Army. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certain amendments have been reserved for a separate vote. The question will be, first, on concurring in all the amendments not reserved for a separate vote. The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the reserved amendments in their order.

The SECRETARY. The first one was reserved by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to insert, on pages 18 and 19—

Mr. LODGE. The two provisos that begin at line 11, page 18, and go down to line 2, on page 19. They provide for a change in the system of details which I believe is a step toward restoring the old abuse of permanent details to Washington.

They also apparently, on the face, permit advancement by the department from one grade to another.

I do not care to argue the amendment. It is general legislation attached to no general legislation furnished by the other House, and I make the point of order that it is general legislation out of order on an appropriation bill. There is no legislation in the bill as it came from the House with which it can be connected.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the only object the committee had in placing this provision in the bill was to put this department for one year on the same basis as the Ordnance Department has been placed, so that it might have the benefit of its experienced men in time of serious stress. The item is, of course, subject to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. By the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], on page 68, line 12. It reads:

Manufacture of arms: For manufacturing, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $2,500,000.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "$5,000,000" and inserted "$2,500,000."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the facts, as I understand them, are these: The rifles used by the men in the Army are made at only two places, both of which are Government arsenals, which have an aggregate capacity of 750 rifles a day, running eight hours. I further understand that there are on hand at the outside 750,000 rifles. Some statements have been made that there are on hand 500,000 rifles.

The committee cuts the House appropriation for rifles from $5,000,000 to $2,500,000. It seems to me that the one thing we most need are rifles to put into the hands of our volunteers if war should be suddenly thrust upon us. In view of the fact that there are only two factories capable at the present time of making these rifles and in view of the fact that a rifle once made can be put in a box and kept for 20 years, and in the view of the fact that if we should have war thrust upon us we will need possibly not 500,000 men but three or four million men, it seems to me unwise to limit the House appropriation. The cheapest and best preparedness, the most necessary preparedness, is to have in the country enough rifles so that we can arm our men.

I hope the House provision will remain. On the vote taken in the Committee of the Whole I think the Senate committee amendment was sustained by a majority of only 2.

I therefore reserved the amendment, and I ask for a further vote upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I assume from what the Senator says and from what other Senators have said that there is no private concern which is engaged in the manufacture of these rifles and perhaps would not be permitted to manufacture them. Is that right?

Mr. REED. I understand there are no private concerns engaged in making them, but whether they would or would not be permitted I can not answer.

Mr. GALLINGER. One other question. These two concerns manufacture a certain number of rifles daily—750, a Senator stated. Is there anything in the law that will prevent them from running two shifts?

Mr. REED. I think not. They could run two or three.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know how that might be.

Mr. REED. But the point is that if we have trouble we will need these rifles at once to put in the hands of our green men in order that we may as soon as possible accustom them to their use.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, we need a surplus stock. Is that it?

Mr. REED. I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I have begged pretty hard to reduce some of the appropriations in this bill, but I have not been very successful. Usually the begging is to increase appropriations rather than to diminish them.

In this particular case, Mr. President, we have, as the Senator has said, making an allowance for the differences of opinion that have been expressed here, from 500,000 to 700,000 rifles in store. These guns cost about $16 apiece, in round numbers; so with $2,500,000, taking 75 per cent of the money as money to be expended for Springfield rifles, we could manufacture 115,300 rifles. That would raise the number in store from 500,000, or at the outside 700,000, to a little over 800,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. According to military estimates, how large a force would that number of rifles properly equip and at the same time provide a necessary reserve of rifles? I understand it is ordinarily estimated that there should be from five to seven rifles per man of those actually engaged in the field. For instance, if we had 500,000 men under arms, we should have at least five times that many rifles.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Of course, there is a difference of opinion amongst military men in that regard.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the Senator's view of it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Personally I know nothing about it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But from the Senator's investigation what does he think?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should say that there ought to be at least from two to three more than the number required for each man.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Is there any military authority that puts the limit as low as that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that Gen. Crozier puts it at five.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Gen. Crozier puts it at five?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, it would require a large number additional to be manufactured and kept in reserve if we should really need them in time of national stress?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I realize the importance of the suggestion of the Senator; but, in round numbers, speaking of the men we now have, there will be more than five rifles per man in reserve for the troops we now have, because, at the outside, we have not over from 225,000 to 250,000 men.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but if we should become engaged in actual hostilities, I presume the Senator is not unconscious of the fact that we would be compelled to increase our armed forces very materially.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We have enough rifles, I suppose, for peace times; but if we should be suddenly confronted by war and should recruit the number of men that we have provided for by the laws already passed, it seems to me that the statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is very moderate and not extreme; and, if that is true, this is one of the most necessary implements of the preparedness which we are seeking to bring about.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. One thing that influenced the Senate committee, I will say to the Senator, is that the Government has the absolute control of the only factories where these rifles are made, and they are working all the time turning out these arms.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly; and that adds further to the necessity of making them as fast as we can. The capacity of these two factories is limited; it can not be readily increased; there are no outside factories from which the Army can secure the standard rifles—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. None at all.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Which we now use, and therefore we should keep those factories going, it seems to me, with sufficient speed to provide the necessary number of rifles for an emergency.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They are not now working all the time. They are turning out, I think, about 750 rifles per day; but they can turn out 1,500 per day by working two shifts.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But there would have to be an additional appropriation to enable them to turn out 1,500 per day, whether it is done in one shift or two shifts.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How many men does the law now provide for the Regular Army? How large a force?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With the first increment 126,000; altogether.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the number of men the President is authorized to call out is not the Regular Army larger than that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With the 20,000 additional authorized some time ago?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It would be something larger than 126,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How much larger?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have the figures here. The number to be provided for, not counting on any increase due to the national-defense act, is 102,660, and for the first increment under the national-defense act 23,455, making a total of 126,115. If the Army is brought up to maximum strength under the joint resolution authorizing maintenance at maximum strength, there would be added over and above the strength before such organization 27,571.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would bring it up to what?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The first increment under the national-defense act is 23,455, leaving to be absorbed by the second increment under the national-defense act 4,116. That would bring it up to 130,000 in round numbers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then, in addition to that, when the National Guard, subject to the call of the President, is added, how many additional does that make?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. About 166,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would make, then, altogether about 290,000?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In round numbers, yes. One hundred and sixty-six thousand plus 130,000 would make 296,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In round numbers about 300,000 men?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, how many rifles have we?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In reserve about 700,000, and this appropriation would manufacture about 115,000 more, making $15,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And Gen. Crozier's estimate of the number which ought to be provided is from four to five more than the number of men, so that, taking the maximum number of men it would not meet the requirements?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It would hardly meet the requirements.

Mr. President, I want to say that I realize the importance of keeping enough of these arms on hand; but, as I said a while ago, the Government has control over the arsenals. Congress meets again in December, and having control of them, with their output steadily going into the reserve, we could increase the number when Congress meets, if it should be necessary. In the case of many of the other appropriations contracts have to be made in advance.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have also reserved the item under discussion. I simply want to make the suggestion that it seems wholly inopportune to reduce by one-half the amount the House has provided for the manufacture of rifles, in the very teeth of our obvious necessities and of the national purpose to be prepared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the committee amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to reserve, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. CUMMINS], for a vote in the Senate the amendment on page 68, lines 10, 11, and 12. I inquire if the amendment can be reserved at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the amendment which has been under discussion, and on which the question now is.

Mr. KENYON. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is that reserved by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] on pages 55 to 58, relating to certain claims for damages for loss of private property.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I move to strike out, beginning with line 23 on page 54, the balance of that page, and the first four lines on page 55.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the item "Credit in the accounts of Maj. James Canby," beginning with line 23, on page 54, and ending on line 4 on page 55, as follows:

Credit in the accounts of Maj. James Canby, United States Army: The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Maj. James Canby the sum of $80, disallowed on voucher 920B of his money accounts for the month of November, 1913, and now standing against him on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. BRYAN. I will read from the House hearings in this language:

This amount was paid by Maj. Canby for hire of a seven-passenger automobile from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg and return, while escorting an official mission from Great Britain.

It was not authorized. The auditor disallowed it, saying that it was a trip taken by officers of our Army for the purpose of giving a trip to officers of a foreign country. I move to strike that out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was not concurred in.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, Mr. President, I move to strike out lines 5 to 11, inclusive, on page 55.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55 it is proposed to strike out lines 5 to 11, both inclusive, as follows:

Credit in the accounts of Capt. David L. Stone, United States Army: The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Capt. David L. Stone the sum of $1,191, disallowed on voucher 6B of his money accounts for the month of December, 1911, and now standing against him on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. BRYAN. This officer put in some bathrooms and fixtures that he was not authorized by law to put in. There was no authority of law for the expenditure. The other day it was stated that the disbursing officers would have to bear this loss; but I have examined the House hearings, and the men who spent the money without authority of law are the men to whom the charge stands upon the books of the auditor's department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, were they put in a Government building?

Mr. BRYAN. Why, certainly they were put in a building that this officer had erected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just a moment? I think a point of order would lie against all of this legislation. It has been before the Senate a number of times, and usually has gone out in conference. The committee has inserted a number of these matters at this time at the urgent request of the Secretary of War; and in order that the Senate may have the benefit of what he says, I am going to ask to have his letter to the committee, under date of June 29, 1916, printed in the RECORD. There were not only these claims, amounting to some $8,000, which we put in the bill at the request of the Secretary of War, but there were other claims, amounting to $6,480.98, which we did not put in, because they involved the payment of money.

I will say that the first lot of claims involved actual expenditures by the officers which have been disallowed to them by the auditing officers. In many cases the Government got the benefit of the money, the officer simply supposing that he had authority, but he did not have authority; and it was disallowed and charged to his account on the books of the War Department. So we have differentiated between the claims which were paid out, and the Government got the benefit of them—except in the one case to which the Senator has called attention—and those claims that involve the payment of money by the Government.

I ask to have the letter read.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, does the Senator want it read now?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not care, myself, to have it read; but one of the Senators asked to have it read.

Mr. BRYAN. The hearings state the whole case, and the official letters from the Secretary of War have been given to Congresses before this, and the House has never consented to allow these items to stay in.

I realize that the whole of these amendments are subject to a point of order, and my disposition was to make the point of order; but upon examination I find that there are two or three to which I have no objection, and it seems to me they ought to be paid. So I have adopted the policy of moving to strike out of the amendments those which it seemed to me ought not to be paid, and leaving in the others.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator from Florida think a bathroom was a necessity in that building?

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President; I do not think an officer in the Army, without any authority of Congress, has the right to be spending public money to fix up a house as he thinks it ought to be fixed up.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, I will not argue it with the Senator, but a house without a bathroom is not fit for an officer of the Army.

Mr. BRYAN. I think if they understand that Congress will not allow that sort of thing to be done, they will quit doing it. This does not prevent this officer from coming in and submitting his claim in the regular way, disassociated from an appropriation bill, to Congress. He can go before the Committee on Claims at any time and the matter can be considered on its merits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a request for the reading of the letter?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If we are going to vote upon it, I should like to have the letter read.

Mr. NORRIS. So should I, if a vote is going to be taken.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator sees fit to make the point of order, that is a different thing.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I do not make a point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If we are going to pass upon it I should like to hear the testimony. I ask that the Secretary may read the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter. The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 29, 1916.

The honorable the CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to certain relief measures which were embraced in the regular annual estimates for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1917, and which are published on pages 369-371 of the published "Estimates of Appropriations, 1917."

The measures are divided into two classes—(a) those which simply look to the relief of disbursing officers from disallowances made against their accounts by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and (b) those which contemplate reimbursement. With respect to the relief measures, no appropriation of funds is desired or required, and the reimbursement measures call for a total of but $6,480.98.

A majority of the measures have been previously submitted to Congress, but have failed of consideration. The department is very desirous of obtaining consideration of these measures, and with respect to those which pertain to the relief of disbursing officers it may be stated that in many instances the Treasury Department has held in abeyance action looking to recovery of the amounts disallowed only upon representation by this department that the cases had been submitted for the consideration of Congress.

I would thank you to give these measures your consideration in acting upon the Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1917, now pending, and am making herewith a tabulated statement of the measures, which shows those calling for an appropriation of public funds and those which do not:

Relief measures requiring no appropriation.

Maj. James Canby, United States Army	$80.00
Capt. David L. Stone, United States Army	1,191.00
Capt. Henry L. Kinnison, United States Army	82.50
Maj. John E. Baxter, United States Army	18.98
Capt. L. C. Brown, United States Army	124.00
Maj. H. L. Pettus, United States Army	1,545.00
Col. Frederick G. Hodgson, retired	21.00
Capt. Briant H. Wells, United States Army	171.00
Capt. Girard Sturtevant, United States Army	2.99
Maj. James E. Normoyle, United States Army	5.00
Maj. G. G. Bailey, United States Army	106.00
Lieut. Col. I. W. Little, United States Army	98.65
Capt. O. R. Wolfe, United States Army	40.00
Maj. G. G. Bailey, United States Army	31.09
Lieut. J. H. Barnard, United States Army	4,555.00

Relief measures requiring an appropriation.

Relief of Lieut. H. E. Miner, United States Army	160.00
Relief of Maj. H. E. Ely, United States Army	200.00
Relief of Lieut. J. A. Barry, United States Army	135.00
Relief of Lieut. Waldo C. Potter, United States Army	375.00
Medical services and hospital care rendered George Vay, injured seaman	103.90
Relief of Lieut. J. F. Taulbee, United States Army	200.00
Reimbursement to Acting Dental Surgeon Frank C. Cady, United States Army	127.61
Relief of Lieut. Sloan Doak, United States Army	150.00
Relief of Pay Clerk H. G. Foster	350.48
Relief of Leland Stauford, Jr., University	450.01
Relief of Lieut. Joseph T. Clement, United States Army	50.00
Relief of Pay Clerk S. R. Beard	168.80
Reimbursement for quarters rented by officers:
To Lieut. Col. Frederick P. Reynolds, United States Army	323.90
To Capt. Learius J. Owen, United States Army	191.67
To Capt. Adam E. Schlanser, United States Army	278.00
To Capt. Jay D. Whitman, United States Army	86.80
To Capt. E. D. Kremers, United States Army	340.00
To Capt. L. B. McAfee, United States Army	293.00
To Lieut. G. D. Graham, United States Army	301.20
Relief of Pay Clerk Hasie A. Stuart	182.40
Payment for rent of buildings, Philippine Islands	1,722.42
Reimbursement to Acting Dental Surgeon William A. Squires	290.79

Total ..... 6,480.98

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me inquire if there are any other amendments reserved?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are other amendments reserved.

Mr. BRYAN. The chairman of the committee does not think he can finish the bill to-night?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it is nearly time to take a recess.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, to shorten the time and to help us get through this bill as much as possible, inasmuch as the Senator from Florida is going to differentiate between certain of these claims and others, I make the point of order against the entire list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained, and all the claims go out.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I presume that in a few moments the Senator from Oregon, in charge of the bill, will move to take a recess. I do not want to interfere with his plan, but I would like to ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution. It will not take a moment. It will lie over under the rule.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 240) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16734) to pay to certain families of the men of the drafted forces of the United States a sum of money for their maintenance during the term of service of such drafted men in the service of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I desire to offer and ask to have printed in the RECORD an amendment which I gave notice I would move to suspend the rules in order to offer; and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD to-night in order that Senators may be able to see it. It has not been printed as a proposed amendment, and is not on the desks of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being drafted, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any such enlisted man called or drafted into the service of the United States who shall marry after the 1st day of July, 1916; and the word "family" shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5645) for the establishment of Noyes, in the State of Minnesota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5172) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16185) to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate to cancel their respective signatures to the enrolled bill (H. R. 12197) authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, and also directing the Clerk of the House to re-enroll the bill with certain amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of Mabel H. Paine, of Urbana, Ill.; of Nat M. Washer, of San Antonio, Tex.; of A. L. Ide & Sons, of Springfield, Ill.; and of Edith Hecht, Lena Blanding, and Ganter & Manter Co., of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Maine State Federation of Labor, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KERN presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from citizens of Rockhill, Greenville, Watkins, Union, Pelzer, Clinton, Newberry, Easley, Laurens, Honea Path, Greenwood, Lancaster, Pendleton, Ninety Six, Columbia, Anderson, and Piedmont Mills, all in the State of South Carolina, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Springfield, Bloomington, Quincy, Chicago, and Wheaton, all in the State of Illinois; of Delmonte, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, all in the State of California; of Wheeling and White Sulphur Springs, in the State of West Virginia; of Asheville and Raleigh, in the State of North Carolina; of Springfield and St. Louis, in the State of Missouri; of Atlanta, Ga.; of Lexington, Ky.; of Ansonia, Stanford, and Winsted, in the State of Connecticut; of Ghent, New York City, Poughkeepsie, White Plains, Pawling, Tupper Lake, Rochester, and Larchmont, all in the State of New York; of Providence and Newport, in the State of Rhode Island; of Rockland, Oquossoc, and Castine, in the State of Maine; of Pittsburgh, Wilkes-Barre, and Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania; of Des Moines, Iowa; of Forest Glen, Md.; of Bridgeton, Englewood, Summit, Hoboken, and Elizabeth, all in the State of New Jersey; of New London, Sunapee Harbor, Little Boars Head, and Soo Nipi Park, all in the State of New Hampshire; of Hyannis, Gloucester, and Amherst, in the State of Massachusetts; of St. Clair, Mich.; of Portsmouth, Ohio; and of Burlington, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 6705) granting an increase of pension to Andrew G. Anderson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 6706) granting an increase of pension to Andrew M. Vanover;

A bill (S. 6707) granting an increase of pension to Elbridge A. Collins;

A bill (S. 6708) granting a pension to Elizabeth Shaffer (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 6709) granting a pension to Ruthie Pruett; and

A bill (S. 6710) granting a pension to Emma Graham (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 6711) granting an increase of pension to Oscar T. Barker; to the Committee on Pensions.

CHILD LABOR.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8234) to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—MARY WALLS.

On motion of Mr. O'GORMAN, it was

Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 4185, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, granting a pension to Mary Walls, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On July 21, 1916:

S. J. Res. 150. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept from the city of Pittsburgh certain lands in exchange for other lands of equal area.

On July 26, 1916:

S. 35. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah;

S. 36. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain lands to the town of Duchesne, Utah; and

S. 2845. An act authorizing the sale of the marine-hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 16185. An act to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5172) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C., which was, on page 2, line 2, after "thereof," to insert "So, also, shall every rectory, parsonage, glebe house, and pastoral residence which is occupied as a residence by the pastor, rector, minister, or rabbi be so exempt from taxation in the District of Columbia: Provided, That such rectory, parsonage, glebe house, or pastoral residence be owned by the church or congregation for which the said pastor, rector, minister, or rabbi officiates: And provided further That not more than one such rectory, parsonage, glebe house, or pastoral residence shall be so exempt for any one congregation."

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 50) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, requested to cancel their respective signatures to the enrolled bill (H. R. 12197) entitled "An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew"; that upon the cancellation of said signatures the Clerk be directed to reenroll said bill with amendments, as follows: On page 1, line 8, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four"; in line 9, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

RECESS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m., Wednesday, July 26, 1916) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, July 27, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1916.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 25, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order to facilitate business I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McCumber	Sherman
Beckham	Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegge	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Husting	O'Gorman	Smoot
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Taggart
Clapp	Jones	Page	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Penrose	Vardaman
Culberson	Kern	Pomerene	Walsh
Cummins	Laue	Ransdell	Warren
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Robinson	Works
Dillingham	Lodge	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was requested to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. STERLING entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that further proceedings under the call be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment reserved will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is on page 87, where the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] reserved the amendment embraced within lines 1 to 8, inclusive. The amendment reads:

Ranges for Field Artillery target practice: For the acquisition by purchase or condemnation of the necessary land for suitable ranges for Field Artillery target practice, the land to be of such general character as to permit of use for instruction of troops of other arms to be located within the eastern and western military departments, and to defray the expenses incident to locating and acquiring title thereto, $800.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] indicated his purpose to offer an amendment on page 74 for the purchase of additional land at Fort Taylor, Key West.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to offer that amendment again. Perhaps I was not as explicit as I might have been yesterday when the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] were inquiring somewhat with reference to the details, as to the quantity of land, and so forth. It did not occur to me at the time and it does not now impress me that the quantity of land is material. The principle questions are, first, Is this addition to the land at Fort Taylor at Key West important and desirable, and, second, as to the cost of it?

Perhaps I should have gone on yesterday to explain that this fort fronts the Gulf and is in the city of Key West and the present barracks are in the city of Key West nearly a mile away from the fort. Of course the land that is adjacent to the fort is not country property; it is not like being out in the open; they are city lots, and the estimates would perhaps be based upon the lots rather than upon the acreage. It would embrace but comparatively few acres because it is in the city. As I said, the land adjacent to the fort is not out in the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, Who fixed the value that is made in the amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I take it it is based upon negotiations by the department and inquiries by the department because it is just what the department recommended in 1910. It was not appropriated for in 1910, but it was recommended and estimated for and no appropriation was made. That is the same item that is suggested now. I take it that it is based upon inquiries by the department as to what the necessities are there and as to what the cost of the land will be.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask my good friend from Florida whether the department has estimated for and recommended the purchase of the land this year.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; they have not, because, as they say in their letter, there were so many other pressing matters. I can quote from the letter the exact language.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I remember it.

Mr. FLETCHER. They say:

In view of the impracticability of covering all military needs in the estimates submitted for a single fiscal year, and of the existence of other and more urgent necessities than the acquisition of additional land at Fort Taylor, no estimate for that purpose was submitted to Congress for the fiscal year 1915. It may be said, however, that the acquisition of this land is necessary for military purposes, and that it is estimated that the sum of $150,000 will be required to procure the additional land needed.

Unless this letter can be regarded as a supplemental estimate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It could hardly be regarded in that light. I will now, in view of the terms of that letter, ask the chairman of the committee if he can tell us approximately how much we have added to this bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; not yet. We have not yet undertaken to estimate it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Several million dollars?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We have not had time to do that, but, as we reported the bill we have reduced the amount. We have added, of course, largely to the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I had reference to.

Mr. FLETCHER. There has been a considerable reduction from the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but a very large addition to the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House. I notice that the department was solicitous in view of the fact that there were so many demands and so many necessary appropriations that had to be made, and thought while this matter was important it might well be put over. That is the way I read that letter. Of course, if the Senate cares to put the item in the bill I have no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is time the matter was being taken care of. I call the Senator's attention to the opening sentence of the letter from the department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 7, 1916.

HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your letter of December 24, 1915, relative to the plans of the department as to the acquisition of additional land at Fort Taylor, Fla., I beg to inform you that for a number of years past it has been the view of the department that additional land should be acquired at that fort in order to permit the erection thereon of accommodations for the Artillery garrison for the coast fortifications at Key West.

There is only one company left there now, I will state to the Senator, because they are not situated so that they can provide for more than enough to take care of the armament.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it very likely it is a desirable acquisition. I am familiar with Key West. It is a strategic point, as we all know, but I think I am a little more solicitous about the finances of the Government than are some of my friends on the other side, and I am constantly wondering where the money is coming from to meet these expenditures that are being directed to be made. I presume it will be found somewhere, but the people of the country are going to make some inquiry about this. While I feel quite sure it will be more harmful to the Democratic Party than it will be to the Republican Party when the issue is raised, I am not going to be contentious or narrow about it. I shall content myself with voting against the amendment when it is offered and will say nothing further on the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am equally as solicitous as is he regarding these expenditures, I will say to the Senator, and I have endeavored to keep them down so far as possible, but here is a matter of urgent importance, and it has been recommended ever since 1906. It has come on down, until now the situation is at present as the letter of the Secretary of War states:

As you are aware, the hurricane of 1909 destroyed so many of the buildings at Key West Barracks that it was necessary to reduce the garrison to one company, which is practically only a caretaking detachment.

They have not enough men there to man the guns.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Florida if it is not a fact that nearly all these places have practically nothing but caretakers now? Is that not true as to our various posts which are scattered throughout the country? I further ask the Senator if he knows what the armament at that point is and how many companies are required to fully provide the men for the guns which are mounted there?

Mr. FLETCHER. The War Department states:

Under the adopted policy of the War Department, 6 of the 10 companies required to provide one manning detail for the fortifications at Fort Taylor should be composed of regular Coast Artillery troops and the remaining 4 companies of militia Coast Artillery troops.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand that.

Mr. FLETCHER. So it appears that there really should be 10 companies.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I further understand that there never have been but two companies there, and that the garrison was reduced from two companies to one. That appears somewhere in the Record.

I am not like my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; I am not seeking to become a guardian of the Treasury of the United States; but here is an item as to which information given us by the Senator from Florida is very indefinite regarding a point in his own State. We have no knowledge whatever what it will cost to procure the desired amount of land; we have no assurance that any negotiations have ever been entered into; we have simply a general guess of the Secretary of War that the land can probably be purchased for $150,000.

The Secretary of War states in his letter that amounts have been estimated for in years gone by and that appropriations have been made in years gone by, for this post or fortification, whatever it may be called, but he also states that they have not made any estimates this year, because, while this is desirable and probably will be necessary at some time, the urgency of other matters gives them the first preference now. I have not any doubt that there are a hundred places on the coast of the United States that will be necessary and needful for the Coast Artillery at some time, as this probably will be, but the Secretary of War has not even made an estimate to the Treasury Department this year for it. He does not consider it of sufficient urgency to do so. Now I ask the Senator from Florida in this year, when we are spending so much additional money—and it will tax the ingenuity and the wisdom of the best men in this Congress to provide the funds in any satisfactory or sufficient way—is it not better, all things considered, to leave this matter until such time as the Secretary of War shall think the necessities are such that he can submit an estimate to Congress for the expenditure through the ordinary channel of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would say, Mr. President, that I do not quite like to leave the matter in the situation described by the Senator from Wyoming.

The Senator says that the information which I have been able to furnish is so vague and indefinite and unsatisfactory that he can not quite see his way clear to reach a conclusion as to what we are driving at. I can not quite appreciate that, because I know the fort; I know the barracks; I know the city; I have been over them all, and I certainly know what I am talking about to some extent and to all material extents, it seems to me.

As to the precise area of the land required, that I can not give, because I have not figured it up in feet and inches; but I know the land is embraced in city lots and I know that it adjoins the present fort, which is in the city of Key West. I also know that the fort is nearly a mile away from the present barracks.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, in all honesty, can the Senator from Florida give us just the amount which it would cost to acquire the land which he has described?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do absolutely give the figure at $150,000. That was the figure that was estimated for by the department in 1910, and they have not changed it. That is fixed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But does the Senator from Florida assume to say, as a matter of fact, that this land is worth exactly the same now that it was in 1910?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do say that to-day the department can acquire that land for $150,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can it acquire it for less than that sum?

Mr. FLETCHER. It may be possible to get it for less, and, therefore, I have inserted in the amendment the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." The Secretary of War may be able to get the land for less, but it is not at all likely that he can get it for less.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am going to content myself with voting against the amendment, and I wish simply to say that this is the first time I have ever seen come before this body a proposition to purchase property under such indefinite terms as appear in this instance.

Mr. FLETCHER. All I know is this—and that, it seems to me, is the vital, the important, thing, and the only thing needed—the department says we need to acquire the land adjacent to Fort Taylor for military purposes and that the cost of that land will be $150,000. Now, is not that all that we need know?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, evidently there is a discrepancy as to the real need of this land.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no discrepancy about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I say, then, there is a discrepancy as to the time when the land is needed. The department has not estimated for it, and it does not seem to me that we ought to consume any more time in the consideration of the matter. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is increasing an appropriation where there is no estimate made for it by the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on yesterday I asked that an amendment which was adopted relative to voting by soldiers absent from home, be reserved, in order that I might add an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that that is correct.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment to come in just before the last paragraph in the amendment, where the language reads, "this act shall take effect upon its passage"; in other words, after the word "voters," on line 21, page 5, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "voters," the last word in the amendment, on page 5, line 21, it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the right to vote hereunder shall not be denied to any person, otherwise qualified, because he may not be registered under the election laws of his State.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will simply say that, for instance, under the election laws of the State of Washington every voter must be registered within a certain time prior to the election. I do not think that he is required to register in person, but so far as this amendment is concerned, with reference to our National Guard, if they are kept on the border until election day very few of them probably will be able to vote, and I thought I would endeavor to put the proviso I have indicated in the bill in order that it might be considered by the committee of conference in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does the Senator from Washington conceive that this amendment would have any effect?

Mr. JONES. I think it is very questionable whether or not the entire amendment would have any effect; but I think, if we are going to adopt the amendment and enact the provisions contained in it, we have a right to put in a provision of this kind. Therefore I offer the amendment, although I very seriously doubt whether or not the entire provision will amount to anything.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can see a little difference between elections for local offices and those for Federal offices outside of the jurisdiction of the State, but I can not understand how the Congress of the United States can interfere with the registration or election laws of the various States.

Mr. JONES. We simply say that the members of the National Guard away from their homes can vote for President and Senators and Representatives, whether they are registered or not. There are other provisions in the amendment modifying the provisions of the local election laws. If we can modify them at all, we can certainly modify them in this respect. I thought it would be well to have the matter under consideration in the conference committee. I can not see any especial objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington is through, I do not think that this amendment ought to pass. In those States which have an educational qualification—or in several of them, at any rate—the sole determination of whether or not a man can read and write is left to the registrars. That is the provision of the law. When a voter appears before the registrar, if there is any doubt about his capacity to read or write, he is then given an examination. He is required to turn to some book handed to him and read a sentence, which is indicated, or he is required to write "Good morning, Mr. Jones," or something else; in other words, the only way of determining whether under the election laws of the State he is qualified or disqualified is when he goes to register. The amendment of the Senator from Washington would upset the entire system in those States. Nothing is more precious, in my opinion, than the conservation to the States themselves of the right to fix the qualifications of suffrage within their limits. I therefore, Mr. President, make a point of order against the pending amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think the point of order will lie. Certainly my amendment is germane to the provisions of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not examined the amendment. Does the Senator from Mississippi make the point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Washington or against the entire amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, the pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which has not yet been passed upon by the Senate. Is that the case?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order, then, as to both.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I understand that this whole amendment, with reference to the members of the National Guard voting, has been adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, but the Senator from Washington reserved the right to offer an amendment to it when it reached the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But what the Chair is trying to get at is this: The Chair has not read the amendment; but, as the Chair understands the amendment, it has to do with the voting of troops in the field. That is the Chair's understanding of the amendment, and the Chair is trying to get at whether the Senator from Mississippi raises the point of order to the amendment of the Senator from Washington, or whether he raises his point of order to the entire amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Owing to the parliamentary situation, I am compelled to raise the point of order to the entire amendment, as I understand—

Mr. REED. No; the Senator is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because if the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is left in the bill there may be some question as to whether the amendment of the Senator from Washington is not in order as an amendment to the amendment.

What the Senator from Oregon has just said, Mr. President, cuts no figure in the case. The Chair decided here not long ago that even after a bill had passed from the Committee of the Whole and had gone into the Senate a point of order might be raised in the Senate as to any item. That was decided against my view of parliamentary law; but that makes no difference; it was so decided and the decision supported by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Chair will not rule hastily on that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not ruling hastily.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Washington will withdraw his amendment, I will withdraw the point of order to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is no reason why the members of the National Guard from my State should be disfranchised while those of other States are permitted to vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; if the Senator will not withdraw the amendment to the amendment, I am forced to make the point of order against the entire amendment. It would knock to pieces the entire voting system of my State.

Mr. REED and Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like the privilege of saying a word about this matter—

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I will put what I desire to say in the form of a question, if the Senator will permit me. Over half of the qualified voters in my State—those in all cities of a certain size—are required to be registered and must register in person. There is a general registration in September and a correctional registration in October. Unless some such amendment as that submitted by the Senator from Washington is adopted, a large portion of the voters of my State will be disqualified; and I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether he would not favor an amendment to his amendment that will save them from disqualification at the polls?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will do anything I can to so perfect this amendment that it will do exact justice to every member of the Guard who is in the field; but this is the situation: I will say to the Senate frankly that I have not had time to go to the bottom of the question as to the right of Congress to permit these men to vote at all, but such examination as I have been able to make leads me to the conclusion that at least there is a fair probability that a proper law of Congress can be sustained, a law that would permit these men to vote for candidates for purely national offices.

But, Mr. President, there is another principle. I do not think the Federal Government—at least I think it is very doubtful whether the Federal Government can establish the qualifications of the voter; that is, such qualifications as the State may prescribe. The place of casting the vote is one thing. The qualification of the voter is another thing. I think it is very doubtful whether we can interfere with the laws of the State in respect to the qualifications of voters. I do not claim to speak with authority, because I have not examined the authorities closely, but I think there is that distinction.

I very much desire to extend this privilege of voting as far as it can be extended by Congress, but I do not want to undertake to interfere with the right of a State to prescribe the qualifications which the man must possess. That is a right that has always been exercised by the State, and it is a right which peculiarly belongs to the State. Unfortunately, some States have laws which provide that the voter must register only a few days before the election. In that event a member of the National Guard who was away and could not register would be deprived of the voting privilege; but, on the other hand, there are many States that do give the right to vote, provided the voter has not moved from his usual place of abode since the last registration. Further than this, in many States registration is not required outside of cities. The amendment would permit that class of men who are registered to vote, and those men who are not required to register to vote.

There are two questions: First, if this act is passed and the general assembly of any State convenes between now and election day, for any purpose, and it is necessary to have any State supplemental legislation, that can be done, and this bill will have already provided the machinery for the casting of the votes. On the other hand, there may be a legislature in session before the members of the Army are returned to their homes. We do not know. They may be down there 30 days and they may be down there three years. I can not tell. Perhaps it may not be done before the coming election; but the coming election is not the last election we are going to hold, and this law ought to be upon the statute books as a general proposition. It is entirely within the limits of possibilities that governors will call extra sessions of their legislatures for other purposes, or even for this purpose. Indeed, there is a movement on in my State—I do not know how powerful it is or how it will result—to ask that a special session of the legislature be called.

Now, I appeal to the Senator from Washington not to defeat this amendment as to all States because his own State will not get the benefit of it. In view of the fact that the soldiers of the State of Washington can not vote now, why deprive those of other States who can vote, if this amendment is passed, of that right? Now, what is fair about that?

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator that he make his appeal to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I put this amendment in yesterday. I made the contest for it single-handed and alone. I should, however, acknowledge that I was aided by the kindly suggestions of the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from New Hampshire, and by other Senators, and the amendment was accepted in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Washington knows I have no control over the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator from Washington says I should make my appeal to the Senator from Mississippi. But suppose the Senator from Mississippi does not change his mind, and suppose the Senator from Washington does not change his mind; then the amendment goes out on a point of order.

Now, that is not very generous. I hope the amendment will not be defeated in this way. Besides, I am against the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington upon the ground that the Federal Government ought not to undertake to set aside the authority of the States to prescribe the qualifications of the individual voter. Let me put it to the Senator from Washington: Suppose we were to prescribe in this bill qualifications of voters that were obnoxious to the policies of his State; he would not want that. His own State ought to reserve that to itself; and that is all the Senator from Mississippi is contending for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri reads "all qualified voters."

Mr. REED. That is changed. There is a change in the text as it passed; but, as it passed, it means those electors who are qualified under the laws of a State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It reads here "all qualified voters of the United States." The way it has been modified, it means "all qualified voters of the several States who shall be in actual military service." Taking for granted that it means that, I have no objection to this amendment. But when the Senator from Washington offers an amendment which knocks to pieces this very idea, and proceeds to allow those to vote who are not qualified even by the laws of his own State, and proceeds to allow those to vote who are not qualified under the laws of my State because not registered, and therefore no step has been taken to determine whether or not they are educationally qualified, I am forced to make the point of order to the whole affair, because if I do not make the point of order to all of it my point of order simply to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington as an amendment to the amendment, would, in my opinion, fail.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I should like very much to have the Senator withdraw his amendment to the amendment, and then I will withdraw my point of order; but if not, I must insist upon it, and the Chair has decided it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. What is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is there any amendment pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to have to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I thought we could straighten out this matter in a moment. I want to ask the Senator from Washington this question: His State having passed a rigid registration law for the protection of the purity of the ballot of that State, does he want to concede the right of the Federal Government to wipe out that registration law?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my State is not the only one that has passed registration laws. My State is not the only one that has members of the National Guard at the front who would be affected by this amendment. There are many of the States which have these registration provisions; and I think it is absolutely inexcusably unjust to attempt to permit members of the National Guard to vote and prohibit these persons from voting simply because they have not had an opportunity to register under the State laws.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. JONES. I think there is a very serious question as to whether we can provide for voting by these soldiers anywhere outside of the State. The Constitution seems to make a very express provision that we can not change the places of voting in these elections—voting for Senators, and so on—and if the Senator from Mississippi insists on this amendment going out because my amendment is offered, the responsibility will be his and not mine.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, the Senator from Mississippi assumes the responsibility for everything that he does.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the registration law of my own State is such that unless every member of the National Guard shall register upon one of the three days appointed before the election, it would be impossible for them to vote anywhere for any candidate in the coming election. I suppose the registration laws of my State are similar to the laws of Idaho, Wyoming, Minnesota, Washington, and many of the other Northern States. Without the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, I am quite sure that none of the guard from my own State could vote, because it would be impossible for them to register upon one of the three days that shall be appointed before the election. Those days are not yet appointed, and I think the last day of registration must be within 10 days before the day of election.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the next amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I want to congratulate the Senator from Washington. I congratulate any man who is so broad and so generous that because the laws of his own State deny, as he thinks, the men of his own State who happen to be in the Army the right to vote he will therefore seek to deny that privilege to every other man in the United States who might, but for his act, have it. It is a position at once so generous and so patriotic that it ought always to be remembered; and I hope the National Guard of his State and the National Guard of the country will always remember that he performed this valiant and glorious service for it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I appreciate the spirit in which the congratulations of the Senator from Missouri are tendered to me; but it seems to me that if his congratulations go anywhere they should go to the Senator from Mississippi, who is alone responsible for this matter. I have not sought to deprive the National Guard of Missouri of their right to vote. I want them to have it; but I want all the members of the National Guard to have the right to vote. I do not want the mere fact that some of the National Guard had left their homes at the call of the President before they had had an opportunity to register to prohibit them from voting because the Senator from Mississippi does not desire his local laws to be interfered with. That is the purpose that the Senator from Mississippi stated as to why he made the point of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the trouble with the Senator's defense or explanation is that this amendment does not deprive any living man of the right to vote. This amendment seeks to confer a privilege; and if the laws of the State of Washington make registration at a given day necessary, the fault is with the laws of that State and not with this particular amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. The laws of the State of Washington were made long anterior to the suggestion or thought of an emergency of this kind. If this emergency had continued, and in the face of its continuation for a term of years a State failed to make provision for its soldiers voting without registration, then the point which the Senator from Missouri makes would be well taken. But without any warning a contingency arises, and these men are called from their homes. It would require a special session of the legislature of that State to meet this contingency. Now, being called away upon a contingency, why should there be withheld from these men the additional privilege provided in the amendment of the Senator from Washington?

I confess, Mr. President, that I am a little surprised at the attitude that the Senator from Missouri takes with reference to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington. He proposes an amendment to meet a contingency that nobody dreamed of when the Legislature of Washington provided this requirement of registration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator has not been in the Chamber during the discussion.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I sat here and listened to it.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Missouri, by his amendment, sought to preserve the right to vote to all of the qualified voters of the States who happened to be in the Army. In that form it passed the Committee of the Whole, and, if let alone by those who never dreamed of trying to confer the privilege on anybody, it would have conferred the right to vote on every man who was qualified under the laws of his State to vote; at least I believe it would. Now, the matter being in that shape, the Senator from Washington undertakes to put into this bill a clause changing the effect of the laws of his own State and, as to these men, wiping out the registration laws of his own State. I have made no special objection to that; but the Senator from Mississippi does have an objection, and he raises the point of order against the whole amendment. I thereupon appeal to the Senator from Washington to withdraw his amendment in order that the point of order may be withdrawn.

The situation now presented is this: If the Senator from Washington can not have an amendment put on this law which will nullify, as to these soldiers, the laws of his own State, he then says that other men from other States who may be qualified shall not vote. Now, that is the situation. I am not trying to deprive anybody of the right to vote. I am trying to confer it, and because the right can not be extended, as the Senator from Washington thinks, so that it is available to the people of his own State, he says, "Very well; none shall vote." That is the effect of his position.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I have no more sympathy with the attitude that would deprive the soldiers from those States that do not require registration of the right to vote, simply because it can not be secured for those States that require registration, than I have with the opposition to a provision waiving the matter of registration as to presidential and Federal officers. I do not think either position is tenable. But the Senator from Missouri—and that is what I rose for the other time—rather intimated that the States had been derelict in not making provision.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I do not mean that.

Mr. CLAPP. They could not do that, for they could not anticipate that.

Mr. REED. I did not say that.

Mr. CLAPP. Then the criticism was not warranted.

Mr. REED. I meant to say that it happened to be the fact that those were the State laws. They have not had an opportunity to change them yet, but they hereafter may. These troops may be on the border for two years or three years; I do not know how long. They may be back in 30 days. But why refuse the soldier from a rural district in my State—I am merely illustrating—where he does not have to register, the right to vote because it happens that the State of Washington has a law that deprives its citizens of the right to vote? Or why deprive the citizen of the State of Vermont of the right to vote because the State of Washington has a certain law?

It is unfortunate. It is a condition we could not foresee. If we all had registration laws, they probably would have met it; but here is the proposition: Because one State has a law requiring registration shortly before voting it is proposed to take such action as will result in depriving all the soldiers from the rest of the States of the opportunity to vote. Now, that is not very generous.

Mr. CLAPP. I quite agree with the Senator that that is not a correct position to take. The soldiers from my State can not vote without an amendment here waiving the matter of the registration. At the same time if I can not get the right for them to vote I would not stand in the way of conferring the right upon others, and we can confer it in the light of the exigency here. That is my position.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. In what worse state would the voters of the State of the Senator and of the State of Washington be if the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is adopted than they are in without it?

Mr. CLAPP. They would be in no worse shape, and that is what I say. Anxious as I am to get the right conferred on the soldiers of my State, the fact that I could not get it for them would not deter me from supporting an amendment that would grant it where we can grant it, in view of the fact that one Senator can stop the whole matter by a point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply wanted to suggest that it seems to me if it is within the power of Congress here to confer the right upon the soldiers from only one State to vote while they are at the front, we would be derelict in our duty if we did not do it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact, in view of the colloquy with the Senator from Washington, that in my judgment one part of the Senator's amendment as well as the amendment of the Senator from Washington is subject to a point of order. As I understand from the ruling of the Chair the whole amendment, whether with or without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, is subject to a point of order.

Mr. REED. Yes; and the point of order has been sustained.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The point of order has been sustained. So I really can not see how the Senator from Washington can be said to be at fault or to lack courtesy or lack judgment. It is simply a question of the Senator from Mississippi allowing an amendment that is out of order to go in under one condition and declining to allow it to go in under the other condition. I wish the Senator from Mississippi, if it is not too late, would withdraw the point of order to the whole proposition.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will state his inquiry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. This point has been determined?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has.

Mr. REED. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I do it with all the respect in the world.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. Now, I should like to be heard on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has had four speeches, and under the rule—

Mr. REED. Not on the appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; upon the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Illinois if he desires to be heard.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to be heard on the appeal. Is it debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is debatable.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will not take much time, for I realize that I have no business to take any time at all here. A good many of us feel considerably that the subject has been expounded, that the knowledge of the subject has all been expounded. No doubt "You are the people, and wisdom will perish with ye," in the language of Job. But notwithstanding that, there are some States that will be affected vitally.

The amendment as originally presented I shall support, and I will support it, anyhow, even if it should prevent certain of the voters in my own State from voting. I will cheerfully allow others that right, and I shall not interfere in any way with the voters who can have that right extended to them.

I doubt very much whether it is a valid regulation, but for what it is worth it ought to be had. The laws of all the States require the voters to vote personally. I do not know in the absence of State legislation that any other kind of voting would be valid.

Mr. REED. For the information of the Senator I will state that there are some States, among them my own, that permit under certain conditions a citizen of the State to vote away from his polling place. That law applies in my State to any citizen of the State who is absent from home on election day, who will go to a certain officer and make an affidavit showing that he is a certain individual registered at a certain place and inclosing his ballot and forwarding it by mail. The ballot is then counted as provided by law. There must be strict proof that he is the individual, strict proof that he was registered, and so forth. That ballot is then compared with the registration book, if he lives in a part of the State where there is registration; but there is no registration in the State of Missouri except in certain cities and certain counties. Outside of that there is no registration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the pending question is an appeal from the decision of the Chair sustaining the point of order that this amendment is general legislation. I should like to have the Senator from Missouri state on what theory that ruling is incorrect. It seems to me to be a manifestly correct ruling.

Mr. REED. I think I ought to permit the Senator from Illinois, who is interrupted, to conclude, and then I shall have something to say in answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The regulations mentioned serve to illustrate the subject. I should like to conclude without much consumption of time. It is a relaxation of the requirement by a State in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. It dispenses with the personal presence of the voter, and to that extent it so far permits the voter to vote for certain Federal elective officers. If we relax one qualification required by the constitution or statute of the State we can relax another. In common fairness if the relaxation of the personal presence of the voter at the polling places is allowed in one part of the State, where no registration is required, then the provision for the registration of the voter ought to be relaxed in the other part of the State. Out of the million two hundred and fifty thousand voters in Illinois more than five hundred thousand are required to be registered before they are qualified to vote. The registration provisions are in certain denser centers of population, the larger cities. The reasons for registration are well known. In the absence of registration in certain areas no one is qualified to vote. It operates just as the absence of his personal presence would operate. So by the relaxation of one qualification by the original amendment, it would add the relaxation of another qualification by the amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Washington. It is just as fair to relax in one case as it is in the other. Out of 11,000 men in my own State who are absent from their homes, about 7,000 are on the Texas border. The other 4,000 are in different encampments in the course of preparation, and subject—all of them—to the call of the President. The 11,000 will be totally disqualified in the absence of some permissive legislation.

We have a complete registration in September, in which all the voters of the State within the area where registration is required are compelled to appear and register anew. We have in October a correction day, in which those who did not register the first time may appear and have their names registered. Personal presence is required for registration in all the registration area covering about 500,000 voters in the single State that I mentioned. If this added relaxation on the qualification of voters in my State be not permitted by the amendment of the Senator from Washington, it will pro tanto disqualify so many of the 11,000 voters or so many as would come from the area mentioned, and it would be unjust. They are mixed politically, so that there is no particular advantage gained one way or the other. It is merely a matter of fairness.

On the point of order raised by the Senator from Mississippi, the original amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri relaxes a State qualification in that personal presence is required to vote. It interferes that far. Whether it is valid or not I am not undertaking to say, but I am willing to support it for what it may be worth. But it relaxes a qualification required by the State and permits them to vote in camp under such regulations as are provided here for Federal elective officers.

In the areas mentioned in the State like that of the Senator from Washington and like my own State there is a further qualification that they must be registered, and it is just as essential as if the voter lived within a certain precinct.

All these qualifications belong to a State. There are 48 jurisdictions, making 48 different sets of qualifications. We relax one general qualification of personal presence to vote in all the large centers of population, and that is where registration laws were born. In those large centers comprising, as suggested, about 500,000 voters in my own State, the city of Chicago, the city of Peoria, the city of Danville, the city of Springfield, and the city of East St. Louis, personal presence is required to register. If they are not found on the registration list when they undertake to vote, they are denied the right. Like any other qualification, it will be absolutely indispensable that these men be permitted to register without being present or that they be permitted to vote without registration for President and Vice President or the electoral ticket and for Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I wish we might have a rule, and have it enforced, that discussion of this kind should be confined to the merits of the ruling of the Chair upon the appeal; but that is never done. That is not the object of this appeal, I am quite sure.

This question does not affect my State. We have a provision in California authorizing absent voters to register by a proper showing by affidavit; but the result of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, is that the right to vote is conferred upon voters in some of the States and denied to others. The Senator from Missouri talks about generosity. That does not seem to be very generous. Why should the militiamen from Missouri be authorized to vote and that same right be denied to the voters of Washington?

Mr. President, looking at this from a purely political standpoint, which is the way we are in the habit of looking at things here very much, this may be a very important matter. It might mean the election or defeat of the Senator from Missouri as a candidate for the United States Senate. I can appreciate the fact that in view of the championship of the National Guard by the Senator from Missouri pretty much all of the militiamen from his State would feel themselves obligated to vote for the Senator for reelection. It may mean the balance of power in some of the States.

I have no objection to the militiamen from Missouri being granted the right to vote, whatever may be the result; but it seems to me that if the militiamen from Missouri are entitled to vote the same right should be granted to the militiamen of Washington and numerous other States who would be deprived of that right by the provision contained in the law of the State of Washington and other States.

It is hardly correct, Mr. President, to say that we are attempting to change the laws of Washington, as stated by the Senator from Missouri. The State of Washington has not legislated with respect to this situation at all; it has legislated with respect to voting within the borders of the State.

Here is an entirely different situation developed by which the voters of that State should be allowed or denied the right to vote outside of the State, which is not covered by the laws of that State at all. Therefore, we are not proposing to change the laws of Washington in that respect.

I am very sorry that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has found it necessary to make his point of order under the circumstances.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I appealed from the decision of the Chair. At least, I want, as far as I am able, to do all that lies in my power to take the last possible step to gain this privilege of voting for the members of the National Guard. I want to extend it to every member of the National Guard; I do not care whether he comes from Washington or from New York, or from Mississippi, or from Minnesota, or what other State he comes from. In drawing the amendment I did not see how we could go further than simply to provide that the qualified voters of a State would be qualified to vote in the Army camp. That seemed to me to be as far as we could go. There were many reasons why, if we attempted to go further, the legislation would fail. In that shape the bill passed. Under it, of course, the laws of the State having strict registration, unless they change those laws, would, by virtue of their own laws, deprive these men of the right to vote. But I do not believe there is a State in this Union, except perhaps the State represented by the Senator from Washington, where all the population, rural as well as city, are required to register.

I may be in error about that, but I know there are many States where registration is confined to the larger cities. I think that is true of the State of Illinois; is it not? I was asking the Senator from Illinois, who evidently did not hear me, whether it is not true that in the State of Illinois registration is limited to the larger cities and does not obtain in the rural districts?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is limited to cities and townships of a certain size. In other parts of the State there is no registration required. I will add, if the Senator will permit me, that a large part of these 11,000—I would say probably two-thirds of them—are drawn from areas that are affected by registration. The rural member has not responded so readily or promptly to the call.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the effect in the State of Illinois would be that a part of the guard from that State would be permitted to vote and a part of the guard would be denied the right to vote, not by virtue of the provisions of this amendment, but because of the provisions of the laws of Illinois.

Now, the situation existing in Illinois is substantially the same as in Missouri. Some of our volunteers who went from the larger cities might, unless the legislature shall assemble and change the law, be deprived of the right to vote because of a lack of registration, but those coming from the rural communities would still have the privilege of voting if this law is sustained. I think a similar condition exists in nearly all of the States of the Union. But the Senator from Washington says that in his State they have universal registration.

Mr. JONES. No; I did not make that statement.

Mr. REED. Well, then, what is the fact?

Mr. JONES. The fact is that in precincts where there are 250 voters or over registration is required.

Mr. REED. But can the Senator from Washington roughly tell us how much of the State such precincts include?

Mr. JONES. No; I can not, of course, say how much, but it includes a great deal of the State.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not wish to intervene in the debate here, but I think I ought to state, in view of the question of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], that I think my colleague [Mr. JONES] has overlooked a statute which was passed by the last legislature of our State, which requires universal registration.

Mr. JONES. I had overlooked that; I did not have that statute in mind.

Mr. REED. Now, I am speaking to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] for a moment. The situation presented this morning was that at least a part of the National Guard would be permitted to vote. This amendment undertakes, so far as it can, to let all of them vote; but the laws of the various States intervene and require certain registration. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] now offers an amendment proposing to waive the necessity of registration in every State, a thing that might be very dangerous in some of the States; but nevertheless I do not pause to debate that. Thereupon, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] states that, unless that amendment is withdrawn, he will make a point of order against the whole amendment. Accordingly, I appealed to the Senator from Washington to withdraw his amendment, and he declined to do so. So the onus is upon the Senator from Washington of having taken an action here which, if the point of order is sustained, will deprive every single member of the National Guard who is on the border of Mexico, in November, of the right to vote. The Senator from Washington can divide that responsibility as much as he pleases with the Senator from Mississippi; yet it is perfectly apparent that, if the Senator from Washington would withdraw his amendment, this provision might remain unobjected to, and might become a part of the law of the country.

I offer this observation to the Senator from California, who has again intimated that there is some politics in this question. I am sorry that the Senator so often in these dog days sees politics in every decent thing a man attempts to do. I know nothing as to the politics of the National Guard of the State of Missouri. The movement to the border has not been a political question. The National Guard, recruited long ago, was not recruited on political lines. I know that some of the colonels and some of the other officers—many of them, indeed—of the National Guard of Missouri are Republicans. I have no reason in the world to believe that I shall be the beneficiary of the votes of the National Guard any more than my opponent will be the beneficiary. I shall not be deterred from doing what I can for the National Guard, because somebody may imagine I am doing it for political purposes. If I were to adopt so narrow a policy as that, I would not be permitted to do anything for the benefit of these men lest some supersensitive individual who "sees things" should arise in his seat and cry out "Politics!"

The question that I wish now to discuss for a moment is the point of order. I think there is a distinction here that, properly understood, will enable us, with all respect to the President of the Senate—and nobody respects him more than do I—will enable us to go on with this legislation. My amendment, when it was introduced as in Committee of the Whole, was plainly open to an objection that it was general legislation. That objection, however, although made, was afterwards withdrawn. The amendment was accepted, and became a part of the bill. The point of order was therefore waived as to the amendment. The bill being in that situation, the amendment being a part of the bill, the Senator from Washington reserved the right to offer an amendment. He did not reserve my amendment or the right to raise the question as to its being general legislation or the right to discuss it separately as an amendment, but he reserved the right to offer an amendment to it; that was all. That is the state of the case, as I understand it.

That being the case, the amendment which the Senator offers may or may not be subject to a point of order; but the fact that the Senator has offered an amendment and that he only reserved the question for the purpose of offering an amendment does not bring the entire proposition before the Senate so as to make it subject to the point of order. That is my view of the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, however much Senators may sympathize with the views and purposes of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in offering his amendment, it seems to me that it is so clear that the amendment is subject to a point of order that it is unfair to the Chair to urge an appeal from his decision sustaining the point of order. The Chair is, of course, under the duty of conforming his decisions to the rules of the Senate when those rules are invoked by Senators. On yesterday, when this point of order was made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], this colloquy, which will be found on page 11605 of the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, occurred:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

That being the identical amendment now under consideration—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I make the point of order against the proposed amendment, first, that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. REED. I think the point is well taken. I spoke to the chairman of the committee about this amendment, and I had hoped that he would let this go to conference. It puts no burden upon the Government. It takes no money from the Government. It is the only chance to give these men an opportunity to vote.

The Senator from Missouri on yesterday conceded that the amendment was subject to a point of order.

Mr. REED. I concede now, and have conceded in my remarks heretofore, that it was at that time subject to a point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. The Senator now says that it is not subject to a point of order at this time because the point of order was not reserved by any Senator in Committee of the Whole; and yet the Senator from Missouri must know that it is not necessary to reserve in Committee of the Whole a point of order. Every Senator here knows that; no Senator is ignorant enough to think that in order to make a point of order in the Senate it must be reserved as in Committee of the Whole.

If it was subject on yesterday to a point of order when the bill was in Committee of the Whole, it is subject to a point of order when the bill goes into the Senate, and no reservation of a point of order is necessary in order to entitle a Senator to make a point of order.

Mr. President, the statement I made a moment ago I repeat, that it is not fair to the Chair, in view of the admission the Senator from Missouri has made, that he should insist on his appeal; and I move, Mr. President, to lay the appeal of the Senator from Missouri on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will withdraw the motion for the present, in order that the Senator from Missouri may reply to my statement.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, no one more than myself respects the Vice President. I simply want to state this matter. I do not claim that a point of order has to be reserved. I made no such claim. I frankly conceded on yesterday, when the point of order was made against this proposition, that the point of order, if insisted upon at that time, was good, and that this was general legislation. The point of order was withdrawn and the amendment became a part of the bill. Now, if the entire amendment had been reserved I think the point of order could have been renewed in the Senate; but, as I understand the RECORD and as I remember the facts, the amendment was not reserved for general action in the Senate, but it was reserved merely for the purpose of offering an amendment to it. Now, when that amendment is offered it is subject to a point of order if it invades the rule; but if it does not, I hold it is not subject to a point of order. That is the point I am trying to state. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator say that it is necessary in order to have a separate vote on his amendment in the Senate to reserve the amendment in Committee of the Whole? Does he assert that from his knowledge of the rules? Does not the Senator from Missouri know that it is not necessary to reserve in Committee of the Whole a vote upon any amendment and that a vote can be taken in the Senate, upon the demand of any Senator, upon any amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole before the amendment is finally concurred in or acted upon by the Senate?

Mr. REED. But that is not the question before us. No one has demanded a vote upon the whole question. The Senator from Washington has simply offered an amendment to the bill as it stands now perfected as in Committee of the Whole. Thereupon the Senator from Mississippi makes a point of order, not against the amendment offered, but he makes a point of order against the whole amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator think that it is subject to a point of order, if made?

Mr. REED. I do not in the state of the record.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why?

Mr. REED. Because this amendment was added to the bill, and is in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. When this bill was reported to the Senate the question was upon concurring in the amendments agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, which had not been reserved. The Senate concurred in those amendments, but the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which had been reserved, was not acted upon; and therefore it is before the Senate as an entirety now.

Mr. REED. But it was not reserved. I claim this is the record—I have not had time to read it, for I have been on my feet every minute; but my recollection of the record is that this amendment was not reserved except as to the mere right to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Chair stated to the Senate that certain amendments had been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and certain amendments had been reserved, and the question was on incurring en bloc in the Senate in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole which had not been reserved, and the Senate concurred in those amendments which had not been reserved, leaving the amendment of the Senator from Missouri unacted upon.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to Rule XX, in which it is provided:

1. A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, except when the Senate is dividing, and, unless submitted to the Senate, shall be decided by the presiding officer without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is not whether soldiers shall have a right to vote, but whether the ruling of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. REED. That is a peculiar way to state it.

The question being put, the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee in reference to the subject matter of a telegram which I received this morning from the State of Michigan, which states that a militiaman had died on the Rio Grande, and that the Government, as the telegram states it, had notified the parents at Tecumseh that if they wanted the body they would have to send the amount of the transportation charges, or else it would be buried on the border. The telegram further states that this family is very destitute and has not the means for obtaining the body.

Does the bill anywhere provide, or do the regulations of the War Department provide in any way, for sending this body, at the expense of the Government, to the parents of the deceased?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, of course there is at this time no appropriation available for that purpose, and there would not be any until after this bill has passed, because that contingency is not provided for in the case of the National Guard, in the appropriations that have been heretofore made. But in the case of the bodies of the soldiers that were brought out of Mexico, the body of Lieut. Adair, of my own State, for instance, was sent to his parents at Portland, Oreg.; and I think so with every young man who was killed. My opinion is that the appropriation in this bill is broad enough to allow that when the bill becomes a law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I gave notice that I would move to suspend the rules in order that the amendment which I offered providing for an appropriation to care for the dependent families of guardsmen who have been drafted into the Regular Army and required to go to the border may be considered. I do not know that a point of order will be made against the amendment if I offer it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I would feel it my duty to make the point of order against it, in view of the position which I have always taken, that there ought to be no discrimination as between the forces of the Army.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In view of that statement by the chairman of the committee, I move to suspend the rules pursuant to the notice which I gave, and I will ask the Secretary to read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows:

July 22, 1916: On Tuesday, July 25, or as soon thereafter as possible, I shall move to suspend that provision of paragraph 1 of Senate Rule XVI which provides that no amendment shall be received to a general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation, or act or resolution, previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments, and also that provision of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI, prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, by adding to the bill, after line 5, page 91, a new paragraph to read as follows:

"That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being drafted, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any such enlisted man called or drafted into the service of the United States who shall marry after the 1st day of July, 1916; and the word 'family' shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, upon the motion to suspend the rule I think it proper to discuss the purpose of the amendment which I propose to offer if the rule is suspended, and as an introduction to that discussion I beg to remind the Senate of the history of the legislative acts of Congress which, in my view, make necessary at this time this proposed amendment.

It will be recalled that when House joint resolution 242—the draft resolution—was before this Senate this particular proposition, the care of the dependent families of National Guardsmen, was a matter of very sharp controversy between the House and the Senate. The joint resolution providing for drafting the National Guard into the Regular Army passed the House of Representatives on the 23d of June and came before the Senate. It provided:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to draft into the military service of the United States, under the provisions of section 111 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof, any or all members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and any and all members of the National Guard and Organized Militia Reserves, to serve for the period of the emergency, not exceeding three years, unless sooner discharged.

Mr. President, that joint resolution as it passed the House carried an appropriation of $1,000,000 to provide for the care of the dependent families of the National Guard and State militia thus summarily called into the service of the country and drafted into the Regular Army. The Senate rejected the House provision, but substituted a provision permitting drafted guardsmen with dependent families to apply for discharge. The subject was thrown into conference. The Senate conferees came back to the Senate and reported a disagreement with the House upon that provision. Then the Senate directed that the matter be taken back into conference. I will ask the chairman of the committee if I am right about that?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is, Mr. President, the Senate agreed to a further conference, and the same conferees were appointed and the matter was again taken up between the House and the Senate with the result which I will state.

Mr. President, there are on the floor of the Senate at this time 14 Members. I am discussing a proposition of so much importance that I shall be constrained to go all over this ground again when the Senate comes to vote on it, in order that those who are not upon the floor of the Senate at this time may be properly informed before they cast their votes.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BRADY. I fully agree with what the Senator says about the importance of the measure which he is discussing, and for that reason I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Asbust	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Gronna	Norris	Sterling
Brady	Hardwick	Overman	Taggart
Brandege	Hollis	Page	Thomas
Bryan	Husting	Penrose	Thompson
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Poindexter	Tillman
Chilton	Jones	Ransdell	Townsend
Clapp	Kenyon	Reed	Vardaman
Clark, Wye.	La Follette	Robinson	Wadsworth
Culberson	Lane	Sheppard	Walsh
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Sherman	Warren
Curtis	McCumber	Simmons	Williams
du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.	Works
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] on account of the death of a near relative. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to suspend the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I beg the attention of Senators to the statement which I am now making. It relates to a provision for compensation to the families of dependent members of the militia who have been drafted into the regular service. I have given notice of a motion to suspend the rule to make such an amendment in order upon this bill, and therefore upon the motion to suspend the rule Senators are practically to vote as to whether they will favor compensating the dependent families of these drafted men.

I want to save the time of the Senate as much as possible in presenting this matter. Therefore, for the saving of time I appeal to those who are summoned here upon this call for a quorum to indulge me while I make this statement and to remain in attendance until it is completed.

I had already brought to the attention of the few Members who were present when I began the fact that when the draft resolution, House joint resolution 242, which passed the House on the 23d of June, came before the Senate, it had stricken from it the provision for an appropriation for the care of the dependent families of these guardsmen.

So the matter was thrown into conference. It remained a matter of stiff difference between the House and the Senate. The Senate conferees came back and reported a disagreement upon that proposition and asked the direction of the Senate for a further conference upon the matter. That was granted, and again it went back to conference and the conferees finally reported an agreement. At that time it was stated that the other House receded on this particular measure, because the matter would be taken care of in a separate bill.

So, Mr. President, it will be observed that Congress was pretty nearly in accord that some measure should be enacted providing for the care of the dependent families of the men who had been summarily drafted into the Regular Army.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator uses the word "drafting." That applies to all the militia, as I understand it, who are now serving.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does, and that is the term used in the joint resolution which became a law. They were drafted men. I want to call the attention of the Senate just a moment to the fact that that summary drafting of those men into the Regular Army was not in the contemplation of the men when they enlisted in the State militia, and was no part of the contract which they then made. They dedicated their services within the terms of the Constitution and the statutes of the various States to the State militia service.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I took precisely that position when the question was before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I so recall. I remember the very able constitutional argument submitted by the Senator from California upon that very point.

Mr. President, I press that upon the attention of Senators at this time because it is the foundation of an equitable appeal to the Senate for the passage of the amendment which I purpose to offer if the Senate suspends the rule and gives me an opportunity to offer it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not as well posted on military affairs as I ought to be, but, as I understand it, the militia who have been sent to the border have not as yet been drafted in the legal sense of the term; and I was wondering, if those men are permitted to serve down there without being drafted, whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin would apply to their families.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think, in contemplation of all of the existing statutes, several of these new statutes, these men have been taken into the service of the country, and that they could, upon the order of the President, be sent directly across the border into a foreign country.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator is correct. The National State Guards have been examined by the surgeons of the United States and have been regularly mustered into the United States service. They are regularly mustered into the United States service just as our State volunteers were during the Civil War, and after they are mustered into the service they become United States Volunteers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And are subject to the orders of the Commander in Chief, the President.

Mr. NELSON. Of the President, and can be sent over the border.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Beyond any question; that is, they can be, if this whole proceeding is not unconstitutional.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I agree with the Senator, but my inquiry was directed to whether the wording of the Senator's amendment applying to drafted men could be construed as applying to the men who have not as yet formally been drafted, but who are in fact serving the United States Government in the Army on the border and can, as the Senator says, be sent into Mexico, or will be, if there is occasion for it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The language which I have employed in the amendment which I propose to offer is the language of a bill passed by the House of Representatives. The history of the passage of which I propose to recite as the next step in my statement as showing that the obligation to give relief, as I view it, practically rests upon us. The House of Representatives understood when the crux of this matter was the subject of contention between the conferees on House joint resolution 242, the draft resolution, after the Senate instructed its conferees not to yield to the House upon the provision to appropriate for the families of these dependents, yielded upon a tacit understanding that the matter should be taken care of in a separate bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE rose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut in just a moment. Pursuant to that the House, on the 1st day of July, passed and sent to the Senate an act providing for the dependent families of these militiamen. That bill passed the House with only two votes against it. That bill came over to the Senate on the 1st day of July. Mr. President, this is the 27th day of July. It came here 26 days ago. The Senate gave the bill to its Committee on Military Affairs, and that bill, Mr. President, is still in that committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him at this point to suggest that it does not seem to me that there need be any argument as to the object of this amendment or its justice in a general way; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the suggestion made in some quarters that the National Guard can not be depended upon as a part of the armed force of the country, and the question is whether that claim ought to be strengthened by making special provisions for the National Guard which do not apply to the regular enlisted men. I ask the Senator if he will state his position clearly upon that discrimination which, it seems to me, is the crucial point of his amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I purpose to do so. I was approaching it in what I believe to be a logical way and gathering up the history of this transaction step by step in order that the argument for action by the Senate when I came to the final conclusion of my statement might be so fortified that the Senate would be in such an agreement with me that a two-thirds vote would be accorded for a suspension of the rule. I will make what to my mind, Mr. President, is a perfectly clear differentiation between the obligation which the National Guardsman or State militiaman incurs when he enlists and the obligations which, according to the terms of the contract, the Regular Army soldier incurs when he enlists. I believe there is a clear distinction between these obligations, and the same rule need not be applied to these distinctive branches of the service.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. Before we get too far away from it I want to notice the remark made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that these men are volunteers. They are not volunteers in any proper sense. They enlisted in the militia, which was quite a different thing. We have extended their obligation and made them Federal soldiers by an act of Congress, and under that act the President has been authorized practically to draft these men into the service.

Mr. CLAPP. And, Mr. President, labeled them as drafted men.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not ask the Senator to yield except in reply to the Senator from California. Mr. President, I think an exception ought to be made to what the Senator from California has suggested in that respect. After these men were called into the service of the United States many of their companies were not up to war requirements, and at the same time all those who did enlist at the time of the call did volunteer.

Mr. WORKS. I think probably the Senator is right about that. If a man voluntarily enlists knowing what his obligations are, that is a different question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I concede the righteousness of the position stated by the Senator from Connecticut. It is a mere contract obligation, and any man who enlists in contemplation of being taken into the Regular Army and subjected to immediate separation from his family, leaving that family without his support has no claim upon the Government for special consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator at this time unless he is willing to be interrupted, and I shall interrupt very briefly if he is willing to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I have been informed that the State militias were called into the service of the United States under existing law at that time and were not drafted. I assume that that must be so, because the draft act to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers has not yet become a law of Congress, has it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well; whether it is or not, at the time the call of the President went out, I am informed, it was based upon the theory that it was a call under the Constitution to repel invasion. At any rate, that first call, according to my information, was not a draft as used in the act to which the Senator has referred. If that is so, I want to suggest to the Senator that in his proposed amendment, in line 9 of the first page, he uses the words "at the time of his being drafted," and then in the very next line, referring to the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard, he uses the phrase, "called or drafted into the service of the United States." Also, on page 2, in line 10, it says, "That this act shall not apply to any such enlisted men called or drafted." Unless there is some distinction between the two things I think the language ought to be uniform. I simply submit that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We have not yet reached the stage where the terms of the amendment can be fairly considered. All I expected to do in addressing the Senate at this time on the motion to suspend the rule was to outline in a general way conditions as they are presented at the present time. Mr. President, if the motion to suspend the rules shall prevail and we get this amendment before the Senate, then it will be an appropriate time to consider its phraseology.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But what I expected to do at this time was, as I stated, to present in a general way the claims which the amendment has for consideration by the Senate and to put them, if I could, in such a way as would appeal to Members of this body to suspend the rule and let us take up the amendment for thorough discussion and consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not speak of it in any critical way, but just recurring to what I have said many times on this floor, Senators, in anticipating a Senator who occupies the floor, thrust into his argument matters that should come up for consideration perhaps very much later in the debate and compels going over the ground again and again. I believe

I could have concluded what I have to say in urging suspension of the rule at this time if I had proceeded without interruption. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise simply to remove, if I can, some of the uncertainties that seem to have crept into the status of the Guard because of its attitude toward the General Government. I am in favor of suspending the rule upon the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I have been and am still very much in favor of the amendment which he proposes. I think it is unthinkable to send those men to fight for their country without taking care of the families which they leave dependent behind them.

But I had something to do in the argument or discussion on the reorganization of the Army bill, especially as it relates to the National Guard. That Army bill provided a different obligation, an enlarged obligation, for members of the National Guard if they were to receive the pay which the bill provided for members of the National Guard. That additional obligation was one toward the United States. When these guardsmen came into camp under the call, they were all presented with the new obligation which really made them soldiers of the United States as well as militiamen of the States. There is not a man, I think, on the border of Mexico who has not taken that additional obligation whether he enlisted a year ago or only since the call was made by the President.

Now, I think those men who left under those circumstances are just as much entitled to have their dependent families taken care of as the men who might be drafted, because after these men were called into camp there was the stigma of a coward put upon a man if he did not take this additional oath, and the few men who did refuse to take the additional oath have been called slackers all over the country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Some of them have been drummed out of camp.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. Now, then, the draft resolution to which the Senator from Wisconsin has referred was intended by the Judge Advocate General of the Army to supplement what some thought was a weakness in the oath; that is to say, he believed that the oath did not establish the status of a Federal soldier among the guardsmen, and he insisted that there should be given power to draft as well as the taking of this additional obligation, and therefore the resolution was passed. But there is not a guardsman on the border of Mexico now who is there under the authority given to the President in the draft resolution.

I could not forbear making this suggestion at this time in order to put before the Senate my view of the relation which these soldiers bear to the United States. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me for interrupting him. My only reason is that I am deeply interested in his motion and in his amendment, and both ought to be adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, whatever may be the technical status of the men who are upon the border, they are there by the action of Congress which surrounded them with conditions that compelled them as men to go to the border under the call of the President.

Mr. President, some formal action might be taken by order of the Executive to technically place these men in a situation where they could be sent across the border. They were, whether technically or not, drafted into the service. They were, by every obligation which men in like conditions respond to, compelled to go to the border. Without any definite or formal and well-understood action upon their part changing their status from the time they enlisted in the militia, they will be sent on the orders of the President, if the occasion arises, into a foreign country.

I undertake to say, Mr. President, that not one in a thousand of the guardsmen is conscious that he has by any act of his placed himself in any position different from that which he incurred when he enlisted in the State militia. Of course, he went through the form of taking an oath. All of them were lined up; they were mobilized; they were brought together; the oath was administered to whole companies at the same time; and every man of them was under a constraint to take that oath. Now, Mr. President, the Senator from California—

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WEEKS. Before the Senator from Wisconsin proceeds further, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. I will ask the Senator if he does not think it would have made a difference to the militiaman who had taken this step whether he had supposed that he was going to perform actual service other than police service; that he would have hesitated about taking the step if he had supposed that he was to be called upon to perform police service and that alone?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think, Mr. President, that any considerable number of men would have stood up in the face of their comrades to question about it whatever, as to whether the service was to be on one side or the other of an international boundary line. I know how men are affected who are dealt with en masse. The man who stands out upon a technicality in responding to a call to the flag and the man who stands out now under the provisions of some of the bills we have passed to the effect that if an application is made stating that because a man's family is suffering he wants to be discharged or sent home—there is a provision to that effect, I think—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a regulation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Or a regulation, he may get this concession made to him through the War Department; but, Mr. President, the man to do that must pass through an ordeal; he has to undergo self-stigmatization, and men shrink from such actions.

His personal courage, if not openly questioned, he will feel, may be questioned in the minds of his comrades. He is restrained by his pride from asking for help for his family. It is an unfair position in which to place him. So this whole proceeding, Mr. President, as I contend, worked to take a grossly unfair advantage of these men.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to ask the Senator a question. I agree with him about these men having been forced in and not having enlisted with this idea in view; but is it not true that the legislation under which this was done was framed and approved by the committee of National Guard officers who were here all of last winter?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, Mr. President, I know nothing about that.

Mr. LODGE. I entirely agree with the Senator's view that they were forced in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not know anything about any militia lobby, to which reference has been made repeatedly in the last month, during which this subject has been before the Senate. I never received a letter from any member of the National Guard or of the State militia with respect to this legislation. The only matter to which my attention was called by a member of the Wisconsin National Guard was relative to a provision which was covered by an amendment that I offered and which was accepted and is now part of the law, to the effect that the Army regulations, with regard to the retirement, should apply to the heads of the National Guard when they reach retiring age, to the end that they be taken out of the list of political appointments in the various States. That amendment, I think, will have a wholesome influence upon the future of the State militia of the various States.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. In response to the question of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I should like to remind the Senator that this federalizing—and that, by the way, was proposed here as an amendment by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]—was naturally brought up by the friends and officers of the National Guard in sustaining the George Washington view of the Constitution, that the guard was a Federal force, and in answer to the Garrison and Breckinridge view of the Constitution, that the Guard was nothing but 48 little armies in 48 States; and the oath, and the action of the men under the oath, have speedily demolished the Garrison argument.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not want at this time to be drawn aside into a discussion of those matters, excepting in so far as this discussion bears upon the contract obligation which members of the State militia assumed when they enlisted. I know how it is in my own State. For six years I was pretty closely associated with the development of the National Guard in Wisconsin. I know men enlisted in the National Guard in Wisconsin, or in the State Militia of Wisconsin, with the idea that they were going into a service where they would be disciplined, where they would fit themselves for service to the State and service to the country under the Constitution and the laws of the State and the Nation. Of course, all of them, and the parents of those who were under 21 years of age, consented to enlistment in contemplation of conditions as they prevailed at the time of their becoming members of the National Guard. There was no sound or threat of war any—where in the world. The National Guardsmen from 1865 to 1898 had served out their time; had become as proficient as it was possible for men to become under the circumstances in that service during the period of enlistment. In 1898 the United States called the National Guard. When that period of war passed the Guard was recruited upon the old basis of service. But twice in over 50 years has the National Guard been called out of their States. So these young boys and their parents assented to their enlistment as guardsmen because it meant simply drill once or twice a week at the local armory; it meant going into camps for a period of 10 days or two weeks or three weeks at the State encampment. That is all that it signified to them. It was a healthful service. So we found in Wisconsin we were able to keep up our militia to the full measure of the legal requirements; but, Mr. President, I think it fit to remind the Senate at this time that technically these men, when they enlisted, did so in contemplation of constitutional provisions. Article I, section 8, of the Constitution provides that—

The Congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

Then there is the constitutional provision with regard to the President. The power of the President over the militia is defined by Article II, section 2, as follows:

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States.

How "called into the actual service of the United States"? By congressional action. What are the limits upon that service, as fixed by the Constitution itself? To wit, that Congress may "provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions."

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, without trying to draw the Senator from Wisconsin aside from the point he is making and without discussing the question whether the term "militia" means the Organized Militia, or whether it means both organized and unorganized militia—to wit, every able-bodied citizen of the United States—I ask the Senator if the power of Congress, which he has just read, could not be exercised so that it would apply to every able-bodied man in the United States just as well as to the poor fellow who happened to join the militia?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no doubt in my mind as to that, Mr. President. I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. And therefore the obligation that these men were under was no other or different than the obligation which rests upon us all. Therefore it follows that the claim that they took a special obligation and that therefore they ought to be dragged off to the border, regardless of results and no compensation made, does not have very much merit in it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri; and while on that point I want to distinguish—as I think it is possible easily to distinguish—between the enlisted man in the State militia—the National Guardsman—and the man who enlists in the Regular Army. It has been the contention of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate—and that was the point of difference between the Senate committee of conference and the House committee of conference on the draft resolution—that if provision were made for the dependent families of National Guard soldiers the same provision ought to be made for the dependent families of those who had enlisted in the Regular Army.

I contend, Mr. President, that there is not any basis for that claim. The man who enlists in the Regular Army takes an obligation which he well understands. From the moment that he enlists he obligates himself upon the call of the military arm of this Government to go wherever soldiers are required, be it to the Philippines or to any other place. He understands perfectly well that his contract is one that takes him away from his family from the very hour that he takes the obligation as an enlisted soldier in the Regular Army. Not so with the boys who have enlisted in the militia. As I said a moment ago, but twice in 51 years have those men been called into the service of the country, and it is, I think, a plain proposition under the Constitution that they can never be called into the service of the country excepting to suppress insurrection on our own soil, to enforce the laws of the Union upon our own soil and under our own flag, and to repel invasion. Their obligations are easily distinguishable from the obligations which the soldier enlisting in the Regular Army takes upon himself. When you leave out of consideration constitutional questions and technical constructions of statutes and look at it as a practical proposition as applied to men every Senator knows that it would have made a world of difference to these lads who enlisted in the National Guard or the State militia—many of them the heads of families, many of them the sole support of families—if they had understood that at the snap of a finger they could be taken away from their homes and sent to the border or into a foreign country.

I say, Mr. President, that it can not be contended that the same rule should be applied to the men who have enlisted as Regular Army men and the boys in the National Guard, who find themselves now unexpectedly snatched away from their families, removed from the occupations in which they were earning enough to support those dependent upon them, and sent down to the border, subject to the perils that attend upon the assembling of a large number of men in a climate to which they are unaccustomed.

It may be answered that there is a plan by which they can escape from their hardships; but I have already suggested, Mr. President, that they can not avail themselves of it, and that they do not avail themselves of it; that they stay there in the line of duty as they see it with their comrades, under the strain of anxiety in regard to their families, suffering more than it is possible to describe in words. Because they can not write themselves down to the possible construction that they are cowards, they will hesitate long before they will place themselves on record as having families that must be supported by charity unless they go out of the service, take off the uniform of their country, and leave their comrades to face the dangers of the border.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me. Mr. President, all over the land to-day committees are being formed and money is being raised to give charity to the families of the boys who have gone to the border at the call of their country; and the Congress of the United States hesitates and halts and falters when confronted with an appeal to do that measure of justice by these families which will take them out of the charity list in the communities in which they live and which will relieve the husbands and sons of these dependent ones from the awful strain that they are under.

I want to read to the Senate, in this connection, extracts which I very hurriedly made the other day from a few papers. The Detroit News-Tribune of July 23, 1916, has this dispatch from El Paso, Tex.:

Col. Barlow's biggest worry is the problem of releasing men who have families dependent upon them for support. He is sending a plea to the wives of Detroit to stop writing him those pathetic letters that fill his mail bag every day.

Can anything be stronger than that, Mr. President, in support of the statement I made a moment ago, that these men will undergo almost any sort of strain and anxiety, almost any mental or heart torture, before they will make application for release? The heads of those dependent families are in the ranks there, and it is those who are suffering at home, those who are in want, who are asking the commander to send the breadwinners home. Listen further. The Indianapolis Sunday Star of July 23 printed this in an editorial:

This Nation has an ample supply of young men who may be depended upon to fill the ranks of the army reserve without requiring married men and others with dependents to go to the front. It is illogical and unfair to ask those who are needed at home to go to the border to perform service that can be just as well done by others whose presence at home is not required.

Oh, but, Mr. President, they have been taken there—married men, sons of widowed mothers, with little children in the families younger than the boy who happened to be over 18 who was taken away from the opportunity to support the family—they have been taken there, and it is up to them either to write themselves down on the record in the face of their comrades as seeking to evade their share of the dangers or it is up to the Congress of the United States to meet this matter as it ought to meet it and provide for the dependents of these soldiers.

Listen to this, further: The New York Sun of July 23 said—
[A pause.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please preserve order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg pardon of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was not stopping for better order; I was just running over the number of Senators present in the Senate at this time to see whether it would be advisable to ask the others to come here in order to save the time of repeating this speech of mine, because I am going to insist upon a pretty good understanding on the part of the Senate when we come to vote on the question of suspending the rules; but I forbear. Mr. President, to call for a quorum now. We can not compel Senators to remain here, and perhaps those who are absent have already made up their minds upon this question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will pardon me for a moment, I wish to state that I am in perfect accord with his amendment, but want to see it extended further to cover the families of soldiers in the Regular Army under like circumstances during any period of hostilities between the United States and a foreign country.

Mr. President, I introduced a bill in the Senate two days before the House bill was introduced covering this subject fully. The bill has been lying with the Committee on Military Affairs since June 27. I included in my bill the families of the soldiers of the Regular Army during time of actual hostilities, which the House bill, introduced afterwards, did not contain.

I am obliged to leave the Chamber for a short time, but will return in time to vote for the motion to suspend the rules when it comes up, so that the Senator's amendment may be given a vote, and I shall also vote for the amendment, but I much desire that it shall cover the families of the Regular Army. I hope it may be amended to-day before it comes to a final vote, and that all of us may agree to it in that way, so that all soldiers' families may be treated equally, and I believe that the added provision will receive the support of this body.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was just about to cite another news dispatch in the New York Sun of July 23. In a dispatch from Brownsville, speaking of the married men who have dependents upon them, it was said:

Their families are in want, and in some regiments 40 per cent of the men are miserable because their wives and their children are wondering where food and rent money will come from.

If any reader of the Sun thinks this statement exaggerated, read this telegram sent by Col. Gordon Johnston of the Twelfth New York Infantry to Gov. Whitman:

"MCALLEN, TEX., July 16.

"The condition of affairs in the New York division deserves most serious consideration. There are many soldiers whose families are in the most desperate condition. I have seen many letters which disclose a most tragic state of affairs."

I am sure that condition would appeal to both of the Senators from New York.

The Morning Oregonian of July 19, 1916, has this to say:

"More funds are needed urgently by the soldiers of Battery A, Oregon Artillery, now stationed on the Mexican border," say members of the Veterans Society.

It is stated that Federal funds paid to the men of Battery A will probably not reach their dependents in this city earlier than August 10. In the meantime rents are overdue and ready money at many homes is exhausted.

"Above a half dozen cases requiring aid were so desperate that a few of us paid money out of our own pockets to relieve sufferers," said a member of the Veteran Society last night.

Mr. President, it is a mortifying situation when the families of soldiers, in a time when this country is more prosperous, perhaps, than ever before in its history, should be upon the charity roll of givers in the great centers of population East and West, North and South.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I wanted to say that I have had repeated requests from National Guardsmen in Ohio asking that they be released because of the fact that they had dependent families; but more pitiable than all that is the request that comes from neighbors of many of these people who have been insisting that something be done, and in the several communities they are raising funds to take care of these people.

But there is another phase that I wish to call the Senator's attention to, which he at least has not touched upon since I have been in the Chamber, and it is this: When the so-called Hay resolution was up for consideration in the Senate the Senate will remember that the committee offered an amendment releasing from the service all who were married. While this was before the Senate I happened to meet a very intelligent guardsman who was a member of the Signal Service Corps. He said that if the committee amendment was to be adopted it would practically destroy the efficiency of his company. There were 18 married men—skilled men, who had been under training for a number of years in his company. If they were to be discharged under that compulsory order it would necessitate filling the ranks of his company with 18 men who had had no training whatever.

It seems to me that if we look at this matter from the governmental standpoint alone we are serving the Army and serving the Government better when we provide for the immediate wants of the dependent families. That will at the same time take care of the families, and it will leave these guardsmen in a position where they can serve their country if they feel that they so desire.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I, of course, agree with the Senator's view, and I thank him for making this contribution to my argument. It is but a very pointed illustration of the futility of a makeshift proposition. It was to get rid of this obligation to take care of these dependent families—an obligation that every other civilized government on the face of the earth assumes, as I can show from the RECORD—that that proposition was incorporated in the law that the heads of families, married men, should be let out of the service. I think it is a sort of stultification upon a Congress which is consuming most of the time of this session in appropriating probably 80 or may be 90 per cent of all the appropriations of this year for preparedness to resort to a makeshift such as the releasing of these men from the service. Remember these releases can only be secured upon the application of the man and after full investigation by the commanding officer. If there was any occasion for mobilizing the National Guard, if there was occasion for putting them into touch with the Regular soldiers of the country, as a step to secure efficiency, then we are morally obligated to care for their families. But instead, we make this shifty proposition that they can get out of the service, and, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, utterly demoralize, perhaps, the companies in which they constitute 20 or 30 per cent of the entire membership.

There is not any argument upon the other side of this question. The only thing that has been suggested in the shape of an argument was that it was a discrimination between the Regular Army soldiers and the soldiers of the militia. I have dwelt upon that, Mr. President, at some length, because I contend that their obligations, their contract obligations, their practical obligations are entirely dissimilar.

I will undertake to say that you could not have enlisted 4 per cent of the married men and the sons upon whom fatherless families are dependent in the State Guard if they had ever dreamed that they might be taken away from their homes and from their States, their families left without any means of support, and subject to become beggars and objects of charity for the communities in which they lived. I say, Mr. President, if you want to build up this arm of the service, do not put this stigma, do not put this condition upon these men. Do not permit it to continue another hour.

I know that those who want a large standing Army, and who think that the citizen soldiery ought not to be a part of the military arm of this Government, are stiff in their resistance to this proposal. I think this opposition has run all through this legislation. There was hostility to the State Guard from eminent sources. It starts with the Regular Army officials who are brought in close touch with the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs of each branch of Congress. They did not find the popular branch of Congress as responsive to their ideas and their suggestions as they did the committees of this branch of Congress. But, Mr. President, I believe that if military preparation is to come at all the people of this country would rather see a good percentage of it come through encouraging the militia organizations and the National Guard organizations of the various States than to see it come in the method and under the system that prevails among the powers of Europe, of putting upon the back of every man who toils a soldier of the Regular Army whom he must carry as a burden represented in taxation.

Here is a clipping from the Springfield Daily Republican of July 22:

Capt. Young and Matthew J. Clarke, chairman and secretary of the relief disbursing committee, made detailed reports.

They stated that 38 families have been on their lists, but 1 has been taken care of by the firemen, who are caring for 3 families. Others have been dropped from time to time, so that to-day there are but 31 families on the list.

This committee is paying for food—

Just think of it, Senators!

This committee is paying for food $5 a week to 25 families, $7 to 3 families, $6 to 1 family, and $3 to 2 families. It is helping 21 families by paying rent, in whole or part. The rents range from $15 to $18 a month.

Total subscriptions thus far are $2,023.95.

Mr. President, the war orders of munitions amount to $3,000,000,000. The stocks of these great munition plants have increased from ten to sixteen hundred per cent in value. We have added from twelve to fifteen thousand millions of dollars to the stock values of the organizations that have profited out of the conditions that have brought on this legislation. Factories, mills, shops of every sort all over the country are running two and three shifts of laboring men, and Congress is dealing with liberality on every hand except with regard to the families of these militiamen, these guardsmen. Forty-three million dollars have been taken out of the common purse to improve little streams and harbors—many of them of national importance, I grant, but many of them of very questionable merit. We are about to pass a bill here that in round numbers, I think, aggregates a little over $300,000,000. We passed the other day a bill for an increased Navy amounting to $315,000,000. For exactly the same things for which we appropriated $429,000,000 12 months ago we are this year appropriating $844,000,000. All of these things relate to military preparedness; and yet in the case of these guardsmen down on the national border, drawn into service unexpectedly, without any preparation, snatched away from their families, their positions where they were earning support for those families lost to them, we put aside by a vote of the Senate last June a proposition to provide for their families.

Mr. President, if I can get the consent of the Senate, I am going to offer the amendment. If Senators will vote for my motion to suspend the rules, they will give this body an opportunity to take care of the suffering families of these guardsmen. I have shown from the extracts read from clippings all over the country, and I have many others that I have not touched, how everywhere these families are dependent upon charity. If Senators on the roll call on this motion to suspend the rules will vote for suspension, then there will be a chance to offer in the Senate an amendment that will provide for these families. If Senators vote against the motion to suspend the rules, they will defeat the opportunity to take care, by suitable appropriation, of the families of these guardsmen now dependent upon charity.

For the motion that I have made proposing to suspend the rule, I hope I may have the unanimous vote of the Senate. I trust it will not be necessary to make a record vote.

I have here certain newspaper clippings, which I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post of July 18, 1916.]

EIGHTY APPEALS FOR HELP—GUARDSMEN'S FAMILIES PROVE A PROBLEM FOR RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

With 80 appeals for assistance now on file, the Citizens' Welfare Association for the Relief of the Families of District Guardsmen and Volunteers finds itself with numerous problems, it was said yesterday at headquarters of the organization.

Funds are not ample, and many cases that have come under the attention of the investigators are really desperate. One woman told the committee yesterday that her landlord had threatened to evict her immediately if the rent was not paid.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of July 20, 1916.]

STOTESBURY ISSUES URGENT APPEAL FOR SOLDIERS' FAMILIES—SAYS SMALL BALANCE IN AID TREASURY WILL SOON BE GONE.

Appealing for additional funds for the purpose of aiding the dependents of the Philadelphia soldiers who are now at the Mexican border, Edward T. Stotesbury, chairman of the finance committee of the Citizens' Soldiers' Aid Committee, in a signed statement issued last night, said that the small balance in the fund would soon be exhausted.

For the first few days this week giving to the committee was stimulated by letters and telegrams from men at the front telling of actual need in many families. The contributions took a slump yesterday, however, when a little over $200 were given.

Following is Mr. Stotesbury's appeal:

To the citizens of Philadelphia:

It is vitally important that an adequate fund be raised at once to provide for the pressing needs of the families of the National Guardsmen, who have left their homes in Philadelphia for the border of Mexico. They are there at the risk of their lives to defend our Nation's honor; and we here are in duty bound to protect their wives and children, and to provide them with the necessities of life.

About 400 families have already applied for aid, and the list is increasing daily. A small balance already subscribed by a few people will soon be exhausted unless the citizens of Philadelphia generally, in proportion to their means, promptly respond to this urgent call.

Contributions may be sent to Joseph E. Widener, treasurer, Citizens' Soldiers' Aid Committee, care of Drexel & Co.

EDWARD T. STOTESBURY,
Chairman Finance Committee.

"WHAT ABOUT FAMILY?" IS THE BIG QUESTION OF MILITIAMEN ON BORDER—WAR REPORTER FINDS UNITED STATES AND MEXICO ARE LESS CONSIDERATE OF MEN WHO VOLUNTEER TO HELP COUNTRY—GEN. FUNSTON HEARS CALLS FOR RELIEF FROM GUARD.

(By William G. Shepherd.)

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., July 20, 1916.

Not one soldier that I rubbed elbows with in all the armies of Europe in the past two years ever worried as some of these American soldiers along the edge of Mexico.

These Americans I refer to are worrying about their families back home; they don't know whether their wives and children have enough to eat. Such a deplorable situation could not possibly exist in any European army, for European Governments care for the families of their soldiers.

NO CARE FOR FAMILIES.

The Mexican Government doesn't; we don't. I've talked with hundreds of soldiers of six different armies in Europe. I talked to-day with my first soldier of the new American Armies. I've talked to Europeans in artillery pits, trenches, and dugouts, but I talked with the American in a jitney going from San Antonio to the Army post.

If the Germans knew Britishers were treating the families of their soldiers as we are treating ours, or vice versa, the fact would be blazoned world-wide as an indication of governmental cruelty by the enemy. It's not cruelty on our part, only oversight, and the lesson we've learned has cost unhappiness and embarrassment in many American homes.

If an American correspondent learned from a British soldier what I learned from Frank Shepkowski, my first American soldier to-day, he would break the censorship to get the story to the world.

Shepkowski, of Company H, Second Illinois Infantry, will march up the steps of his little home at 1452 Emma Street, North Chicago, within a couple of days, give his wife a hug, and say, "Well, I'm home."

He's got a check from Uncle Sam for $67.72, and if he's careful, after paying his fare, he ought to have about $20 to hand over to Mrs. Shepkowski. He was born in Poland, but has served in the militia six years and his term of enlistment expired to-day, his militia career winding up with a blazing two weeks' holiday here in Texas.

WORRY ABOUT FAMILIES.

It was from Shepkowski that I got my first inkling that thousands of Americans here who were snatched suddenly from their families in the little breeze of war which struck America three weeks ago, are worrying about folks back home and wondering whether they are getting food and other necessities of life.

"It wasn't so bad with me," said Shepkowski, "because my wife was a dressmaker, and I could quit my glove cutter's job and go to the front without her starving, but there are lots of fellows whose wives don't work, and they're worried stiff."

There were thousands of tragedies as grim as many in Europe in American homes three weeks ago which are just coming to light here on the border. Gen. Funston and his staff officers are hearing them. Shepkowski put his finger on the greatest present fault with the American Army plan.

"Can a man be a good soldier and do good work if he's wondering whether his family at home has enough to eat?" I asked Gen. Funston, after leaving the jitney and making my way to his hot office.

The general, whose perspiring head was leaving patches of dampness on the leather back of the huge chair in which he sat, leaned forward, saying earnestly:

SENDS 14 HOME.

"Of course not. I permitted 14 men to return home yesterday because their dependents were suffering, and I have so many requests for relief on like grounds that it will prove necessary to release several thousand within the next few weeks."

These men are given 3½ cents mileage homeward. Money which has been spent in bringing them to the border, feeding them and outfitting them, and then after two weeks sending them back home, isn't wasted. It is our payment for the lesson that in our new Army plan we must provide well for the care of soldiers' families if we are going to insist on taking men away from their families into the Army.

"What about my family?" is the biggest question in all militia camps along the border.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy with the thought expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin. Some two months ago, the Senate will recall, I introduced a resolution asking that all those men in Government employ who had enlisted in the service should receive their regular wage from the Government in addition to whatever the soldier's wage might be. Some Senator objected, and the resolution went over. It has seemed, thus far, impossible to resuscitate it.

It seems to me but a case of humanity that that should be done. All over our land great firms and corporations are doing that thing, and in every town and in every hamlet, almost—I know it is the case in my own city—they have called meetings, and money has been provided to take care of the families of those soldiers who have enlisted and who were in need of funds.

This is a more comprehensive proposition, and probably infinitely better than either of the methods that I have mentioned. I can hardly believe it possible that the great Senate of the United States will leave these families of our young men, brave men all, who have gone to the front, dependent upon charity to take care of them. I remember having read within a day or two a statement from Gen. Funston or Gen. Pershing, one or both of them, wherein they declared that very, very frequently, in a great number of instances, they had signed orders permitting these soldiers to go home in order that they might sustain their families. A broader, more comprehensive, more liberal proposition, certainly grander and better in its results and ramifications, is embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. With all my heart I stand for it, and trust the Senate may aid in carrying it into execution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I am not going to undertake to make a speech on this proposition now, and probably not at all; but I do desire to say that if the Senator from Wisconsin will examine the RECORD I think he will find that no promise was made in the Senate when the conference report was before the Senate on either occasion that we would favor the resolution, or the substance of the resolution, which is now presented.

Mr. President, when the report of disagreement of the conferees was made to the Senate I stated, in the course of the discussion which ensued at that time, what I have said since a number of times, and what I say now—that I am not radically opposed to the proposition involved in the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. I have no objection, and I stated yesterday that fundamentally and economically the proposition was right. The only difference I have with the Senator, and the great difference we had with the Members of the House, was on the question of excluding the Regular Army from the relief provisions. My reason for that is that to exclude the Regular Army from its provisions—and there would not be very many who would come under the provisions of such a resolution—to exclude them from the relief afforded to the National Guard, and discriminate in favor of one and against the other, would, in my opinion, absolutely disorganize the Regular Army.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Wisconsin rather left the inference that some promise was made by Senate conferees in connection with the conference that followed the sending back of the bill. So far as I remember, there was not one word on the part of any Senator promising what would be done as to the future regarding that problem, nor was there any allegation on the part of the House conferees that they expected us to promise that. There was no promise on their part. They said that they would probably follow it up on the House side. But the real difference, I wish to say, was exactly what the Senator from Oregon now states—that it was a discrimination, in that it was providing benefits for one portion of the battling forces without providing in a similar way for the other.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is correct, Mr. President. That was one of the points of difference between the conferees of the Senate and the conferees of the House. I still entertain the same opinion that I did then with reference to that subject. It is fundamentally wrong to do better for one branch of the service, no matter what branch it may happen to be, than is done for another branch.

The Senator from Wisconsin has given pretty generally a correct history of the provision as it got into the House resolution. House joint resolution 242 was prepared at the War Department, and I think by the Judge Advocate General, in order to bring the National Guard into the Federal service. That was all that was reported out of the committee of the House of Representatives, and on the floor of the House Mr. HAY proposed the amendment providing an appropriation to take care of the dependent families of the National Guardsmen, and the National Guardsmen only. It had no reference to the Regular Army.

Mr. President, our committee did not think that was right. We submitted it to the Secretary of War and he thought it was such a radical departure from the standing policy of the Army that it ought not to be acted upon hastily. He said the same thing in reference to the provision that was offered from the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate as a substitute for the House provision. I am going to insert in the RECORD the resolution offered on the floor of the House by Mr. HAY appropriating the sum of $1,000,000 for taking care of the dependent families of members of the National Guard. It is section 2 of the original resolution, and is as follows:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of War and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of maintaining, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge therefrom, which family during the term of service of said enlisted man has no other income, except his pay, adequate for the support of said family; and the word "family" shall include wife, dependent mothers, fathers, and sisters, as well as brothers under the age of 14 years.

The Senate Military Affairs Committee offered a substitute for that resolution. It took the place of section 2 of the original resolution and provided that the National Guardsmen who had dependent families might be excused from being mustered into the Federal service. That substitute is as follows:

SEC. 2. That when any member of the National Guard or the Organized Militia of any of the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, or any member of the National Guard or Organized Militia Reserves, is called or drafted into the service of the United States under section 1 of this resolution and has a family dependent upon him the Secretary of War is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to excuse such person, upon his own application, from the call or from the draft, and if drafted, upon a like application, to honorably discharge him from the service. The word "family" shall include wife, children, dependent mother, father, sisters, or brothers under the age of 14 years: Provided, That when such person is excused from the call or draft, or discharged from the service, he shall be furloughed to the National Guard Reserve, unless in the discretion of the Secretary of War he is given a final discharge.

That was the fight. I believe now that if the conferees could have agreed to put into the resolution this provision to care for dependent families of the Regular Army there would not have been much trouble about it at all, but all through this fight I have stood for treating the Regular Army just exactly as the National Guard is treated.

Would the Senator from Wisconsin assent to so amend his amendment, if the rules are suspended, as to cover the dependent families of the Regular Army?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Oregon consent that the matter be voted upon without a suspension of the rules?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to do it. I have always been ready, I will say to the Senator. As I said yesterday in reference to another proposition, all I ask is that the Regular Army shall be treated as the National Guard.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Let me suggest before the Senator accepts that, does he include the members of the Regular Army while they are engaged in Mexico or on the Mexican border and not make it a general proposition to perpetually follow that Army, so that it would result in the enlistment of men as permanent soldiers and compel us to permanently take care of their families?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I want them treated the same as the National Guard as long as the National Guard is in the Federal service, and I have an amendment here to do that very thing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. While I believe the contract obligation of the National Guardsmen is entirely different from the contract obligation of the soldier in the Regular Army, and their equities are not comparable at all, in order to bring this matter to a speedy conclusion, if those in charge of the bill will accept the amendment which I offer, I will consent to a modification of the amendment readily that it shall apply to soldiers in the Regular Army as well as guardsmen, in both cases limited to such time as to the soldiers in the Regular Army as it is limited to the soldiers in the National Guard.

Mr. REED. The phraseology would have to be changed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand. I am not framing it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think I have the phraseology, I will say to the Senator. I have been working on that.

The Senator has called attention to the conditions with reference to the families of these National Guardsmen. As long ago as the Revolutionary period Gen. Greene recommended that the families of the soldiers ought to be taken care of, but that there ought not to be any discrimination between the Continentals and the militia. I think that the condition of the families of the National Guardsmen has been fully developed here and no one disputes the facts. A man can not fight for his country, Mr. President, and do his best when he knows his wife and children are suffering for the necessities of life.

While there will not be very many men in the Regular Army who would be affected by this provision, there may be some; but we do not want to drive men out of the Regular Army because they are discriminated against. Even a very small discrimination will have that effect. Let me call the Senator's attention—

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me, if the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin should be agreed to by the Senator from Oregon, that you would bite off a good deal more than the Government could chew with comfort. The Regular Army is not doing any more now on the border of Mexico than it does ordinarily. It is not engaged in service different from that which it performs in other times of profound peace. This country is not at war with Mexico, and the Army is not suffering any of the hardships of war.

The only excuse which could be given for conferring upon the National Guard this special benefaction is because the members of the National Guard, not being professional soldiers and taken from their usual vocations, suffer an extraordinary pecuniary loss.

I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. If we are going to keep the National Guard in the field—and I really do not see any necessity for it at all on the border of Mexico—but if the administration thinks it necessary, I really believe it is the duty of the Government to take care of their dependent families. It is better that all the people should be taxed a little more than that the helpless women and children should suffer for food and raiment.

But if you propose to apply this rule to the Regular Army you will have to do it all the time, because the reason for doing it now will be just the same in the future. The Regular Army, I repeat, is doing no more to deserve this extra compensation to-day than it does every day in the year. I desire it understood that I am in favor of doing absolute and complete justice to all the men and women who serve the Government, whether in the Army or the civil departments; but we must not lose sight of the fact that the people who are taxed to raise this money which the Congress is giving away with such a liberal hand are also entitled to some little consideration. There is a limit to their ability to bear the load.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Without offering any objection whatever to the suggestion the Senator from Oregon has made, I want to ask him a question, and I ask it entirely for information. I suppose he has learned from his experience as a conferee whether or not the House could agree to that kind of an amendment. Has not the House taken a stand in opposition to it, and would it not delay this matter so that it would take at least quite a time to get any agreement through conference?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will say that the contention among the conferees was more bitter over the two propositions that were involved in the bill itself—the one with reference to providing for dependent families and the other with reference to allowing them to be excused from the service.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the House conferees take any stand on the proposition the Senator now proposes?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know that they have taken any record stand. I do not think they have. But I will say to the Senator, if the Senate instructs me to stand by the proposition that will go into the bill, it will remain in the bill or the bill will be returned to the Senate with a disagreement.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the question I was submitting. The Senator has made a proposition to the Senator from Wisconsin, a proposition to which I have no objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand the Senator has not.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the proposition the Senator has made; but I wanted to inquire of the Senator how the House stood on it, for if the House has taken a stand the whole thing might fail, and I would rather have a part of it provided for than not to have any.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I really do not know whether the House has ever taken any position in the matter or not, and really I do not think that it makes any difference, so far as the Senate is concerned. We ought to act with entire independence.

Mr. GALLINGER. And really ought we to discuss the attitude of the House?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Probably we ought not to mention it, but I thought that it was necessary in view of the discussion which was had heretofore. As I have said, these differences are honest differences between the Houses, and they were fundamental.

Mr. President, I generally have a reason for the course I take in these matters. This is not a case of first impression with me. I have given it a great deal of consideration. I venture to say that I have read as much on this subject as any Senator here. I have studied Upton's Military Tactics and other military works. Let me call attention to what Washington himself said on this subject of discrimination. One of the Senators said here the other day that Washington had been very grossly misrepresented for a great many purposes. I am going to quote him with reference to this very proposition and not rely upon my memory. Writing to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, November 10, 1776, he said, with regard to an additional bounty of 20 shillings per month which Connecticut apparently had offered. Here is what he said about it:

That the advance allowed by your State may be the means of raising your quota of men sooner than it otherwise would perhaps may be true; but when it is considered that it will be an effectual bar to the other States in raising the quotas exacted from them when it is certain that if their quotas could be made up without this advance coming to their knowledge the moment they come to act with troops who receive a higher pay, jealousy, impatience, and mutiny will immediately take place and occasion desertions, if not a total dissolution of the Army; it must then be viewed as injurious and fatal. That troops will never act together, in the same cause and for different pay, must be obvious to everyone. Experience has already proved it in this Army. That Congress will take up the subject and make the advance general is a matter of which there can be but little probability, as the addition of a suit of clothes to the former pay of the privates was a long time debated before it could be obtained.

So as small a difference as that in favor of the militia in those days Washington thought would seriously affect the Army. Mr. President, if it was good in that early day, why is not the same reasoning sound now?

In 1777 Massachusetts and New Hampshire doubled the extra bounty then given, making a total of eighty-six and two-thirds dollars for each recruit. This increase at once put a stop to reenlistments in the old regiments, as the men naturally went home to secure the State bounty, and would not take the smaller sum offered by Congress. Further than this, the large State bounties shook the allegiance of the soldier to his colors. Desertions became so numerous that Washington, on the 6th of April, issued a proclamation—

Offering a free pardon to all * * * who shall voluntarily surrender themselves.

Mr. President, there was an illustration of a very small difference in the bounties paid which caused desertions from the colors of Regular soldiers, and Washington, in order to get them back to the colors, offered a free pardon to all who would return. It was a very small difference, quite different from taking care of the families of the soldiers of the National Guard, which I do not oppose, and leaving the family of the Regular soldier entirely unprovided for. The effect must be the same on the Regular Army now.

Let me quote once more, and then I will stop, because I think we have practically agreed on the form the amendment shall assume, but I want to give the reasons for the faith that is in me in reference to this matter. I believe, as I have always said, in the last analysis the Regular Army is the force to be relied upon for the defense of our country.

These citations showed the evil of unequal treatment between men already with the colors and volunteers raised by increased bounties over that given to men then with the colors. In 1779 the bounties had risen to large amounts and were very different in the different colonies, and were far greater than those given to men already in the service. The effect of these large bounties on the men already enlisted for the war, is thus described in Washington's letter of June 9 to the board of war.

In consideration of the services of the soldiers who engaged at an early period to serve during the war, and the great disproportion between the bounties they received and those given to others for the service of a few months or perhaps not more than a year at most, I have sometimes thought it might not be improper to give them, by way of gratuity and as an acknowledgment, $100, which, besides operating as a reward might have a good effect and quiet their discontent.

So, Mr. President, I might quote innumerable cases where Washington called the attention of the country to the ill effects of discriminating between the militia and those who had been called to the colors in the Regular Army.

Now, the Secretary of War, while he agrees with me in reference to this being fundamentally correct, realizes the difficulties and the dangers that might beset the Regular Army because of making this discrimination. I am going to have printed in the RECORD his letter to me on this subject. He suggests because of the difficulties that surround this question that something ought to be done to look into the whole subject by the way of the appointment of a commission and let them investigate it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I ask the Senator what is the date of that letter?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. July 26.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yesterday?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yesterday.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 26, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR CHAMBERLAIN: With reference to H. R. 16734, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, "An act to pay to certain families of the men of the drafted forces of the United States a sum of money for their maintenance during the term of service of such drafted men in the service of the United States," I beg leave to say that this bill by its terms undertakes to appropriate the sum of $2,000,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the support of the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States, under certain restraints imposed in the bill. It will be noted that the bill does not apply to the families of Regular soldiers and volunteers but only to the families of men who, being in the National Guard, are called or drafted into the Federal service.

I am persuaded that this legislation raises several questions which are not disposed of by the bill. Under an order of this department, made some time since, authority has been granted to discharge National Guard enlisted men with dependents, so that no very great hardship ought at present to exist from this cause, and I am not, therefore, able to say whether the sum here suggested ought to be appropriated or could be usefully expended or not. I am, however, of opinion that so long as the policy of Congress is to have the Government rely upon the National Guard in times of emergency, and no legislative or departmental restraint is imposed upon membership in the National Guard by men whose families are dependent upon them, a duty arises for the Government to assume, on behalf of all the people, provision for the families thus left by the Guard being called into the Federal service. Whether the proper remedy for this situation is such additional legislation or regulation as will secure for military service men without dependents or some such provision as is here undertaken for dependents, is a question of far-reaching policy upon which opinion is sharply divided. My own judgment is that there are enough men in the country without dependent families for all military service in the least likely to be required by the Government, unless conditions become so serious as to engage all the forces and strength of the Nation. One consideration which ought to be had in mind is the creation of various branches of the military service bearing different relations to the Government in the matter of pay and provision for their families, and the effect of inequality in that relation upon the Regular Army and enlistments in it.

In the form submitted I am not able to recommend favorable action upon this bill; but if I may go so far, I beg leave to suggest the wisdom of a committee or commission appointed for the purpose of considering the whole question in all of its bearings in the hope that consistent legislation may be suggested which will have in view all the difficulties and make comprehensive provision for them.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

HON. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, that is all I am going to say on this subject. I have no right to speak for the committee, but I speak for myself as a member of the committee.

This committee has been criticized that we have neglected to report out a bill passed by the House on this subject. It is pending in the committee now. Mr. President, nearly ever since it came to the Committee on Military Affairs on the 3d day of July the committee has been engaged, first, with the Army appropriation bill and then with the Military Academy appropriation bill, and with other matters. Aside from that, on the 5th day of July, just as soon as we had a chance to do it, we sent the bill down to the Secretary of War and asked him to report on it and give us his views. We not only did that but we sent down the bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], which provides in terms for the Regular Army as well as for the National Guard. We did not receive a report from the Secretary of War until this morning. So the committee has not been guilty of negligence in this matter. We have since been considering this matter very carefully and going to the proper sources for information on the whole subject. The letter is now here and I have had it printed in the RECORD. I have shown the difficulties we have had to adjust in this whole matter.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand that a substantial agreement has been arrived at; that the point of order will be withdrawn and the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], with an amendment suggested by the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is agreed upon. I hope that will be done and done at once. I simply wanted to say this. I think the amendment so far as it includes the Regular Army is unsound. I do not think it very material. I do know that the wives and children of men called or practically compelled to go to the colors are suffering and I want some relief, and I want it quickly. Therefore I am very glad to see this arrangement made.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment as amended be read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator does not want to have it read until it is to be voted on I assume.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I would just like to know how it reads.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Wisconsin will hand it to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire whether a motion to suspend the rule was made in form?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the motion was made in form on the 22d day of July, being the Calendar Day of July 24.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it was not submitted to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was called up. The Senator from Wisconsin made it before he began his argument.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before I proceed with my remarks I avail myself of the opportunity—having the floor—to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what he considers the parliamentary status to be now. While he was engaged with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] the question was asked whether a point of order had been made against the proposed amendment, whether it had been withdrawn, and whether the pending motion was a motion to suspend the rule or not. I will wait until that situation is cleared up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupant of the chair understands that the amendment has not yet been offered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; the amendment has not yet been offered; but I did make a motion to suspend the rule. I did not, however, make that motion until I received from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs the avowal that the point of order was insisted upon against my amendment; therefore it became necessary for me to make the motion to suspend the rule, and I spoke to that motion. Then, after the Senator from Oregon had taken the floor, he suggested that if an amendment were added to this contemplated amendment, if the rule should be suspended, which I had intended to offer to include soldiers in the Regular Army, he would be in favor of it; and I did make, across the aisle here, the suggestion that we might come to an agreement upon that and that the Senate might readily accede to it. He has submitted to me an amendment which covers that point, and if it will be understood that a point of order will not be interposed against my amendment I will withdraw the motion which I made for a suspension of the rule and will offer the amendment and accept the amendment to my amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I trust the Senator from Wisconsin will understand that I did not raise this inquiry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Some other Senator did, and I did not know but that the Senator wanted to state exactly the situation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it well to have the parliamentary situation understood. That is as I understand it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not yet understand whether the Senator has already withdrawn his motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not withdrawn it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As he stated it, I doubted whether he had, because he said if the point of order had not been insisted upon he would withdraw it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Perhaps that is not just the form in which I ought to state it. Probably I ought to withdraw it. I can renew it if a point of order is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me a moment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to suggest that we are now somewhat complicated from a parliamentary standpoint. The Senator from Wisconsin can withdraw his motion, and then, if the point of order is made on his amendment, he can renew his motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator from Connecticut wish to retain the floor?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was going to make a few remarks on my own account.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will wait until the Senator concludes, and then I will withdraw the motion and clear up the parliamentary situation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Although the motion is technically now to suspend the rule, I can say what I want to say just as well on the merits of the amendment as the Senator from Wisconsin, who made a speech on the motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. President, I think it is but just to the dependents of the National Guardsmen who have been called into the service of the United States to be taken care of by the Government, but I do not entirely agree with the theory of the Senator from Wisconsin or with some of the statements that he made. He seems to intimate that the National Guard have been in some way drafted into the service of the United States, and when it is suggested that they have not been drafted but have been called into the service of the United States by presidential proclamation, duly exercised under the provision of Congress made in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, that that is a technicality and should not be made. I do not consider it a technicality but I consider it a mere statement of fact.

I do not think the appeal of the dependents of these militia-men comes with any stronger force, even if they were drafted in a technical sense into the service of the United States, than it comes if they are lawfully in the service of the United States in any other way. When they entered the militia the Senator from Wisconsin intimates that they did not suppose at all that there was any chance of their being called into the service of the United States, even to carry out the three purposes specified in the Constitution, for which alone they could be called into the service of the United States by the Commander in Chief.

I can hardly believe that that is so, Mr. President. It may be so as to some of them, but I am inclined to think that almost every man of any intelligence certainly who joined a regiment of militia in his home State knew that that regiment was liable to be called into the service of the United States by the President, whom the Constitution made the Commander in Chief.

I grant you that, inasmuch as they have not been called into the service of the United States by the President except two or three times in the last generation or two generations, they may have thought their chances of being called into the service of the United States were very slim. They had the option of taking those chances or not, as they pleased. So I do not think they were in any way drafted, and I do not think they have yet been drafted into the service of the United States, unless, when they voluntarily went and enlisted to begin with, that can be said to be a draft against their will, which I think is, of course, a contradiction in terms.

The draft act which Congress passed was not approved by the President until July 1, 1916; and, I think, before that time these men had been called into the service of the United States by presidential proclamation.

Another reason why, I think, these men had in contemplation and still have in contemplation service under the authority of the United States is because when the act of reorganization of the Army was before the Senate one of the chief arguments used was that these men wanted to be as near as possible under our Constitution Regular soldiers of the United States. They wanted to wipe out so far as possible all the distinctions and differentiations that existed between them and the Regulars of the United States. Indeed, the adjutant general of my own State wrote me to that effect, and said that he was satisfied he spoke for the entire militia of the State of Connecticut when he said that they wanted in every way to be drawn as close to the central authority of the Government and made to be as like as possible to the Regular Army of the United States. If that is not so, I do not think there is any sense to all this talk about the federalization of the National Guard of the United States, because I think they wanted to come into the service of the United States.

But, whether they did or not, I think, even if they wanted to come in and are in, their dependents are just as much entitled to be supported or have their support contributed to to some extent by the National Government as though they had been unwillingly dragged into the service of the United States, and, indeed, I may say I think they are more entitled to it, because I think that patriotism should at least not be discriminated against.

I am going to ask to print, in connection with my remarks, the draft act to which I have alluded; and I will read the constitutional provision relating to the authority to call the State militia into the service of the United States contained in the fifteenth and sixteenth clauses of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States. The fifteenth clause reads:

The Congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

The sixteenth clause reads:

The Congress shall have power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to print the act referred to by the Senator from Connecticut will be granted.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public resolution No. 23, 64th Cong.]

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That in the opinion of the Congress of the United States an emergency now exists which demands the use of troops in addition to the Regular Army of the United States, and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to draft into the military service of the United States, under the provisions of section 111 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, so far as the provisions of said section may be applicable and not inconsistent with the terms hereof, any or all members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and any and all members of the National Guard and Organized Militia Reserves, to serve for the period of the emergency, not exceeding three years, unless sooner discharged: Provided, That all persons so drafted shall, from the date of their draft stand discharged from the militia during the period of enlistment under said draft.

Sec. 2. That the provisions of section 112 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, shall be applicable to any officer or enlisted man drafted into the service of the United States pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution.

Sec. 3. That when organizations the members of which are drafted under the provisions of this resolution do not constitute complete tactical units the President may, by combining such organizations, organize battalions, regiments, brigades, and divisions, and may appoint officers for such units from the Regular Army, from the members of such organizations, from those duly qualified and registered pursuant to section 23 of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903, or members of the Officers Reserve Corps as provided in section 38 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, officers with rank not above that of colonel to be appointed by the President alone and all other officers to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That vacancies incident to the appointment of officers of the Regular Army to the positions in the forces drafted for this emergency may be filled under the provisions of section 8 of the act of April 25, 1914.

Sec. 4. That whenever in time of war or public danger or during the emergency declared in section 1 of this resolution, two or more officers of the same grade are on duty in the same field, department, or command, or organizations thereof, the President may assign the command of the forces of such field, department, or command, or of any organization thereof, without regard to seniority of rank in the same grade. In the absence of such assignment by the President, officers of the same grade shall rank and have precedence in the following order without regard to date of rank or commission as between officers of different classes, namely: First, officers of the Regular Army and officers of the Marine Corps detached for service with the Army by order of the President; second, officers of forces drafted into the military service of the United States: Provided, That officers of the Regular Army holding commissions in forces drafted into the service of the United States shall rank and have precedence under said commissions as if they were commissioned in the Regular Army; but the rank of officers of the Regular Army under their commissions in the forces drafted into the service of the United States shall not for the purpose of this resolution be held to antedate muster or draft into the service of the United States.

Approved, July 1, 1916.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Every militiaman when he enlisted in his home State knew that Congress had passed such laws, and that the President could call the militia into the service of the United States. So I think no advantage has been taken of them; that no new contract has been made with them nor new obligation placed upon them that they did not voluntarily assume.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate, I withdraw the motion which I made to suspend the rules, with a view of offering the amendment referred to in the notice which I gave.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I withdraw the point of order which I made, assuming that my amendments affecting the Regular Army will be accepted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, after line 5, it is proposed to add a new paragraph to read as follows:

That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being drafted, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any such enlisted man called or drafted into the service of the United States who shall marry after the 1st day of July, 1916; and the word "family" shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. It occurs to me, not knowing very much about military affairs, to inquire whether or not the family of a noncommissioned officer, of a sergeant or of a corporal, would be provided for under this legislation or whether it were wise to provide for them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am advised, upon the authority of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], whose long service on the Committee on Military Affairs acquaints him with these matters of regulation, that it would include the families of such noncommissioned officers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin why he desires to restrict the operation of that amendment to the 1st of July? Some of the National Guardsmen have not yet been mustered into the service of the Government and been sent out. Suppose some man should have married after the date fixed in the amendment; what then? Why not make the date the 15th of July? No man has married with a view of giving his family that protection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi and change the date to the 15th of July.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk the amendments which I propose to the amendment, and I desire that the amendment be read as I propose to amend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended the amendment would read as follows:

That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being called or drafted into the service of the United States or his enlistment in the Regular Army while the National Guard is in the service of the United States, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service and the family of each enlisted man of the Regular Army until the discharge of the National Guard from such service, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any such enlisted man who shall marry after the 1st day of July, 1916; and the word "family" shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to suggest that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has insisted on including the Regular Army in this provision, on the theory, doubtless, that there will be some substantial number of men or families to be provided for. I think that he ought to make a slight increase in the appropriation of say $500,000. Of course, if the Senator does not believe that there are any of the Regular Army people who have families, and that this is an entire fiction in reference to the Regular Army, there would be no occasion for the increase; but if it is a real thing, if the point was earnestly and properly pressed, if the Senator does not want a differentiation between the services, and there will be something to pay for the Regular Army people, I think the House appropriation ought to be increased by $500,000.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say that I really believe that there will not be found to be very many enlisted men in the Regular Army who will have families who will call for any relief; I do not know about that; but the House appropriated only $2,000,000. I do not want an increase, and I do not think any increase will be required. Congress will convene in about three months from now, and there will be ample money, I am sure, to take care of any applications which may be made.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I move that the amount of the appropriation be increased to $2,500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland offer that as an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that a vote be first had on the amendments submitted by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1 of the amendment, it is proposed to strike out "$2,000,000" and to insert "$2,500,000."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask that a vote first be had on the amendments offered by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Wisconsin accepted all amendments to his amendment previous to that just offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; let there be a vote upon the amendments offered by the Senator from Oregon to my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, before the word "drafted," it is proposed to insert "called or," so that it will read:

At the time of his being called or drafted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment to the amendment is in line 9, after the word "drafted," to insert the words "into the service of the United States or his enlistment in the Regular Army while the National Guard is in the service of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment to the amendment is, in line 11, after the word "service," to insert "and the family of each enlisted man of the Regular Army until the discharge of the National Guard from such service."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment to the amendment is, in lines 9 and 10, on page 2, to strike out the words "called or drafted into the service of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment to the amendment is, on page 2, line 11, before the words "day of July," to strike out "first" and insert "fifteenth," so as to read:

Who shall marry after the 15th day of July, 1916.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I now offer my amendment increasing the amount of the proposed appropriation to $2,500,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the propriety of providing for a definite payment to the dependents and the children of the dependents rather than a maximum sum of $50 a month. It seems to me that if the Secretary of War should determine, for example, that some dependent should receive less than $50 a month, Senators and Representatives will constantly be called upon to importune the Secretary to pay the maximum amount. If we were to provide, say, $9 a week for a wife or $9 a week for a mother and a dollar for each of the other dependents, it would be a much wiser course for us to follow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As the Senator from Massachusetts will observe, in line 6 it is provided "or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary." So the matter is left to be determined by the result of his investigation, which, it seems to me, will be very much better as a measure of what is requisite in any given case than for us to determine here, without any knowledge of the circumstances or conditions, upon an iron-clad classification of amounts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that is just the criticism that I am making; that the Secretary will, of course, establish a bureau to carry out the purposes of this amendment; and whatever amount is arrived at is going to be unsatisfactory to the dependents if it is less than the maximum amount. I think we are going to be importuned beyond reason to get the maximum amount in each case, and it does seem to me—though I am not going to offer an amendment unless the Senator is willing to accept it—that it would be wiser to name a stated amount in each case.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the phraseology of the amendment which I have offered here is exactly in line with the bill which was passed by the House of Representatives, and which is now in the hands of the Military Committee. So far as I am concerned, I want to see it complicated just as little as possible—to see it changed just as little as possible—because I fear that differences may arise between the two committees which will jeopardize the legislation altogether, and I prefer, so far as my consent goes, not to accept any further amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1 of Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$2,000,000" and to insert "$2,500,000."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. There is not any question but that $2,000,000 will take care of all of the dependents of soldiers until the end of the present year. The amendment provides for payments for the full year ending June 30, 1917. If at the beginning of the next session of Congress there is a shortage in the amount appropriated to take care of dependent families, an additional sum can be provided in any of the appropriation bills. So I think there is no necessity for an increased appropriation at this time. I am heartily in favor of the amendment as now agreed upon. I think the amendment ought to be adopted in justice to the men both of the Regular Army and of the National Guard, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted just as it is now before the Senate without further amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not see how it is possible for any Member of the Senate to assert that $2,000,000 is ample for the payments both to the dependents of soldiers of the National Guard and of the Regular Army. No Member of the Senate ever has made any investigation of the matter at all. I presume—and I think it is an assumption which we may fairly make—that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House in fixing $2,000,000 as an amount which it would be proper to provide for taking care of dependent families of guardsmen had some basis for their calculation which led them to arrive at that amount. It is a fact that we have made, presumably, an additional draft upon the amount that is now to be paid out by adding the care of the dependent families of those who are in the Regular Army. I do not know how many such there are. There may be only a few or there may be many. However, since the House determined that $2,000,000 was necessary to care for the dependent families of guardsmen, and we have added to the amount that the Treasury will have to pay out sufficient to take care of the dependent families of another class, it seems to me it is fair to assume that some additional money will be required, and I can not quite understand how any Senator can say, ex cathedra, that this amount is all that is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it for granted that the House provided in the bill it passed sufficient for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and the amount was $2,000,000. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin as it now reads provides for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the same amount. As I have stated, between now and the 1st day of January are but five months. Congress will be in session again in four months, and I stated that I had no doubt that $2,000,000 would take care of all needs for the four or five months period. If not, the House, has made a great mistake, and instead of appropriating $2,000,000 it ought to have appropriated $5,000,000 or $6,000,000.

I took it for granted, however, that there had been an estimate made and that it had been ascertained that $2,000,000 was sufficient for the full year, as the House bill provided and as the amendment will provide if made a part of this appropriation bill. That amount certainly ought to take care of all needs for the next four or five months, and then Congress will know whether more money will have to be appropriated. The War Department will know how many dependents there are by that time, and such amount as may be needed can be put in any appropriation bill which may be before Congress at that time, either a regular bill or a deficiency bill, and I have no doubt that if there is a deficiency Congress will provide any amount required without a doubt.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have a division, Mr. President.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected after a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment which I will send to the desk. I think it might well go to conference. The amendment should come in on page 13, in line 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, at the end of line 12, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That nothing in this act or previous acts of Congress shall be construed to prohibit the paying of men enlisted by State authorities of any State for militia organization for the purpose of bringing said organization up to the minimum necessary to permit of the muster in of said organization, from the date of such enlistments to the date of muster in or from date of enlistment to date of rejection, after physical examination, where such enlisted men are transported to the border from place of enlistment before such physical examination is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Permanent establishment," on page 2, line 2, after the word "professors" to strike out "$26,500" and insert "$27,000: Provided, That any officer of the United States Army now holding the position of permanent professor at the United States Military Academy who on July 1, 1916, should have served not less than 33 years in the Army, one-third of which service shall have been as professor and instructor at the Military Academy, shall on that date have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel in the Army," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of seven professors, $27,000: Provided, That any officer of the United States Army now holding the position of permanent professor at the United States Military Academy who on July 1, 1916, should have served not less than 33 years in the Army, one-third of which service shall have been as professor and instructor at the Military Academy, shall on that date have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel in the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 13, after "$462,000," to insert:

Provided, That whenever a cadet shall fail to pass any required examination because deficient in not more than two subjects of instruction he shall have the right to apply for a second examination regarding such subjects by making written application therefor to the Academic Board within one year after being officially notified of such failure. Within 30 days after such application shall have been made, the examination demanded shall be held, and if the cadet being otherwise qualified shall pass the same by compliance with the requirements existing at the time of the first examination, he shall be given the same credits to which he would have been entitled if he had passed such first examination.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, shortly after President Wilson was inaugurated he undertook to regulate affairs in Mexico. In pursuance of that object, in August, 1913, he attempted to deprive Victoriano Huerta of his office as President by demanding that an election be promptly held to select his successor, at which Huerta should not be a candidate. This suggestion naturally was declined and led to a series of events, during which the President endeavored to drive Huerta from his position, first by pacific and persuasive means; then, on February 3, 1914, by lifting the embargo on arms so that Huerta's opponents, Villa and Carranza, could more effectively wage the kind of warfare they were carrying on, although he had in the previous August, in a message to Congress, declared—

I shall follow the best practice of nations in the matter of neutrality by forbidding the exportation of arms or munitions of war of any kind from the United States to any part of the Republic of Mexico—a policy suggested by several interesting precedents and certainly dictated by many manifest considerations of practical expediency. We can not, in the circumstances, be the partisans of either party to the contest that now distracts Mexico or constitute ourselves the virtual umpire between them—and eventually by the use of the Navy at Vera Cruz. He finally succeeded, but left Mexico torn by the contentions of rival factions striving for supremacy. The result of the President's efforts was disorder and turmoil, where there had, at least, been the semblance of authority. He succeeded in deposing Huerta, but left distracted Mexico in the terrible agonies of factional strife.

By the beginning of 1915 he apparently despaired of good results coming from his meddling and decided to abandon further interference. He so declared in a speech at Indianapolis on the 8th of January, 1915, when he said:

I want to say a word about Mexico—or not so much about Mexico as about our attitude toward Mexico. I hold it as a fundamental principle that every people has the right to determine its own form of government. * * * It is none of my business and it is none of your business how long they take in determining it. It is none of my business and it is none of yours how they go about the business. * * * And, so far as my influence goes, while I am President nobody shall interfere with them.

Have not European nations taken as long as they wanted and split as much blood as they pleased in settling their affairs, and shall we deny that to Mexico because she is weak?

This was the President's thought at the beginning of that year. But it did not last long. By June he was again all for interference, and on June 2 he issued a warning to the leaders of the Mexican factions, which was telegraphed to the American consular officers in Mexico for circulation, in which he recited the disastrous effects his policy had brought upon that country and declared that Mexico was starving and without a government. He said that—in these circumstances the people and Government of the United States can not stand indifferently by.

And ended by declaring:

I therefore publicly and very solemnly call upon the leaders of factions in Mexico to act, to act together, and to act promptly for the relief and redemption of their prostrate country. I feel it to be my duty to tell them that, if they can not accommodate their differences and unite for this great purpose within a very short time, this Government will be constrained to decide what means should be employed by the United States in order to help Mexico save herself and serve her people.

To this solemn but unsought advice the factional leaders in Mexico—each in the field at the head of armed forces, engaged in a desperate struggle where death was the result of failure and no quarter was given—naturally paid no attention. They preferred to take his other advice, that they were entitled to spill all the blood they wanted and as long as they wanted, and flouted advice from a man who only a few months before had declared that—

So far as my influence goes, while I am President nobody shall interfere with them.

To get out of the undignified position in which Mr. Wilson now found himself, he invited representatives of several of the South American States to join in his interference. The invitation was accepted, and on the 11th of August, 1915, this so-called A B C council issued an appeal—to generals, governors, and other Mexican leaders—inviting them to meet—either in person or by delegates, far from the sound of cannon, and with no other inspiration save the thought of their afflicted land, there to exchange ideas and to determine the fate of the country—and announced that they would expect a reply within 10 days. Gen. Villa and those associated with him agreed to the conference. Carranza and his followers declined. This third effort to dictate a settlement of Mexican affairs by a man who had announced—

while I am President nobody shall interfere—was also a failure.

It had been carried on with great pomp and circumstance. Representatives of the press had vigilantly watched the meetings that were held and filled their papers with surmises and conjectures of what was being done. When it was all over, Mexican affairs were still going on as though nothing had happened. It was an awkward position for the President of one of the great nations of the world, and the failure was doubtless as galling to his pride as this succession of vacillating policies was disgusting to the people whom he represented.

Something had to be done to save his prestige, so on October 19, 1915, the President adopted a fourth method of interference, and the Secretary of State issued the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 19, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. ARREDONDO: It is my pleasure to inform you that the President of the United States takes this opportunity of extending recognition to the de facto government of Mexico, of which Gen. Venustiano Carranza is the chief executive.

The Government of the United States will be pleased to receive formally in Washington a diplomatic representative of the de facto government as soon as it shall please Gen. Carranza to designate and appoint such representative; and, reciprocally the Government of the United States will accredit to the de facto government a diplomatic representative as soon as the President has had opportunity to designate such representative.

I should appreciate it if you could find it possible to communicate this information to Gen. Carranza at your earliest convenience.

Very sincerely, yours,

ROBERT LANSING.

The reasons for this selection were never adequately put before the American people. It had not become apparent that Mr. Carranza had obtained such a commanding position in Mexican affairs as would justify this selection of him as an ally of the United States. Nevertheless I think the great majority of our people, though in ignorance of the circumstances, hoped the selection was justified and that the President had adequate reasons for believing Mr. Carranza to be a capable and upright man who would be able to restore order with the support of our Government.

This was the situation when Congress convened in December. The Republican Members of the Senate had heretofore for the most part deliberately refrained from discussing this Mexican situation. They had felt it their patriotic duty to give the President as free a hand as possible toward solving the unhappy situation in which he had put himself. But he had now taken a decisive step. The negotiations, if any, leading to it had been carried on in secrecy, and they felt it was a proper time to have a full and frank statement made by the administration. Accordingly, when Congress assembled after the Christmas holidays, on January 6, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] introduced a resolution, which was unanimously passed by the Senate, requesting full information about Mexican affairs, and specifying 10 aspects of the subject for special attention.

The answer to this request was delayed five weeks, until the 12th of February, and when received—though admitting that the data were voluminous—the reply made by Mr. Lansing was of the briefest character, occupying only 5 small pages, and with supplementary explanatory documents 46 pages. The answer to one of the questions, however, is interesting in connection with subsequent events. As to question 4, Mr. Lansing said:

As to the ability of the de facto government to fulfill its promises to protect lives and properties along the border, the undersigned has the honor to call your attention to the fact that since assurances in this respect were given to this Government by the de facto government the disturbances along the border have in a large measure ceased. In this connection a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War, dated February 10, 1916 (inclosure No. 5), and copies of weekly reports Nos. 146 and 148 for the weeks ending January 1 and January 15, 1916, prepared by the War Department, concerning general conditions along the Mexican border (inclosures Nos. 5A and 5B), are hereto appended. It will be seen from these reports that conditions along the border are practically normal.

In respect to the evidence in the possession of this Government of the ability of the de facto government of Mexico to fulfill its promises and obligations relative to protecting American lives and property in Mexico, the department's information indicates that the de facto government is now in control of all but a few sections of Mexico, and that bearing in mind that the nation is just emerging from years of domestic strife, it may be said that within the territory which it controls it is affording, in all the circumstances, reasonably adequate protection to the lives and property of American citizens.

The inclosures referred to are reports confirming these statements that conditions were normal. They are from various places along the border for the weeks ending January 1 and January 15, saying:

Nothing of importance to report.
Conditions have remained normal during the week.
The past week has been very quiet.
And so forth.

I ask permission at this point to have printed as a part of my remarks inclosures Nos. 5, 5A, and 5B, heretofore referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Inclosure No. 5.]

Secretary of War to Secretary of State.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 10, 1916.

The Secretary of War presents his compliments to the honorable the Secretary of State, and incloses, in accordance with the verbal request made this date by the Chief, Division of Mexican Affairs, additional copies of Report No. 146 of general conditions along the Mexican border based on weekly reports of January 1, 1916, from the local military commanding officers, and upon information received from all other sources, and Report No. 148 of similar conditions for the week ending January 15, 1916.

[Inclosure No. 5A.]

Weekly report of general conditions.

Weekly report of general conditions along the Mexican border, based on weekly reports of January 1, 1916, from the local military commanding officers and upon information received from all sources to date:

BROWNSVILLE.

The commanding officer, Brownsville Cavalry patrol district, reports: "Nothing of importance to report."

The commanding officer, Brownsville subdistrict, reports as follows: "Absolute quiet prevailed during the week ending December 31, 1915. A number of families who went over into Mexico with their furniture, stock, and other belongings during the height of the bandit trouble have returned to this side with their belongings. From all appearances conditions have assumed their normal state along the border."

HARLINGEN.

The commanding officer, subdistrict of Harlingen, reports: "Nothing of special interest to report. The Mexicans who attempted to cross the river near Los Indios the last week were not bandits, and their attempt has no significance."

Los Indios: "Two Mexicans were apprehended December 26 while attempting to cross the Rio Grande from Mexico below San Benito pump. Two other Mexicans were apprehended December 27, one while attempting to cross near the Harlingen pump, the other near San Benito pump. The above was made the subject of a special report dated the 28th instant."

Mercedes Headgate: "The past week has been very quiet. There is nothing further to report."

Landrum's Ranch, La Paloma: "Nothing extraordinary has happened in this sector during the period."

San Pedro Ranch, San Benito: "No unusual occurrences."

Santa Maria: "All quiet."

The commanding officer, Twenty-sixth Infantry, Harlingen, reports: "Quiet. Conditions improving."

Mercedes: "Conditions have remained normal during the week."

Mission: Following from commanding officer, Twenty-eighth Infantry: "Conditions remained normal throughout the week ending January 1. Two families emigrated to Mexico during the week and 74 families of 134 persons immigrated to the United States during the same period."

The commanding officer, Cavalry camp at Mission, reports: "Conditions have continued normal during past week."

FORT BINGGOLD, RIO GRANDE.

"Conditions have remained normal during the past week."

LAREDO.

The commanding general, Second Brigade, reports: "Conditions in this district have remained quiet during the week."

The commanding officer, Fort McIntosh, reports: "Everything has remained quiet in this district during the past week."

EAGLE PASS.

The commanding officer, Seventeenth Infantry, reports: "Nothing has occurred to report on border conditions during the week."

The commanding officer, detachment Fourteenth Cavalry, Eagle Pass, reports: "Conditions remain normal in this district."

DEL RIO.

"Nothing of importance to report."

WESTERN TEXAS CAVALRY PATROL DISTRICT.

MARFA.

"Nothing of importance to report. Quiet has maintained throughout the district. The garrison of the de facto Mexican Government at Ojinaga consists of about 300 men, 150 of whom are regulars and the remainder apparently local volunteers."

EIGHTH BRIGADE.
FORT BLISS, EL PASO.

The following report, dated January 2, 1916, was received from the commanding general, Eighth Brigade: "The garrison of Juarez, having been transferred to Carranzista control, there were 800 Mexican (Carranza) soldiers sent there from Chihuahua on the 29th ultimo. About 2,300 Carranza soldiers with baggage and camp followers were disembarked at Pelca on the 30th ultimo and marched into Juarez from that point without incident. Gen. Obregon left El Paso on the 1st instant for Chihuahua. The whereabouts of Gen. Villa continues to be unknown. Conditions in this vicinity seem to be peaceful, and it is reported that most of the ex-Villa troops have been mustered out, paid off, and returned to their homes."

COLUMBUS.

"The Villista forces at Palomas, Mexico, and the Border Gate have transferred their allegiance to the Carranza government."

HACHITA.

"Border conditions in this patrol district for week ending January 1, 1916, have remained normal."

DOUGLAS.

The following report, dated January 2, 1916, was received from the commanding officer, Second Cavalry Brigade:

"Military situation: In and about Agua Prieta there have been no military movements of any kind. Peace reigns to the south and south-east, and no reports of Villistas have been received during the past week."

"Business outlook: Train service between Douglas and Nacozari was resumed on Saturday, January 1. The large bridges that were burned have been temporarily repaired, and it is expected that the regular traffic will be resumed within four or five days. Practically all of the mining people who were compelled to leave Sonora on account of the Villa campaign have returned to their mines, the Nacozari Railroad granting them free transportation south."

"It is expected that the whole State of Sonora will be normal within a week or 10 days."

"With the opening of the railroad there were heavy shipments of concentrates to the Copper Queen Smelter in Douglas. The Montezuma Mining Co. have their mines and mill now in operation."

The commanding officer, Seventh Cavalry, reports: "Conditions have remained normal in this vicinity during the week."

NACO.

The following report, dated January 1, was received from the commanding officer of this station: "Nothing of importance has occurred in this vicinity during the week. The mines and furnaces of the Cananea Consolidated Copper Co. are in full operation. The Southern Pacific de Mexico Railroad is operating on both the Cananea and Nogales branches. On December 30, 1915, Gen. Gavira, with his brigade, was transported by way of the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad from Naco, Sonora, to Palayas, N. Mex., en route to Juarez. Each of the two sections of the train carrying these Mexican troops was accompanied by one commissioned officer and eight men of my command."

[Inclosure 5B.]

Weekly report of conditions on Mexican border.

Weekly report of general conditions along the Mexican border, based on weekly reports of January 15, 1916, from the local military commanding officers and upon information received from all sources to date:

BROWNSVILLE.

The commanding officer, Brownsville Cavalry patrol district, reports as follows: "About 15 wagonloads of furniture came over the past week, with Mexican families returning to the United States, which shows to some extent increased confidence in the stability of present conditions."

The commanding officer, subdistrict of Brownsville, reports as follows: "Nothing unusual developed during the week. Conditions normal. The reported withdrawal of the squadron of the Twelfth Cavalry from the valley, in my opinion, is responsible for the several rumors of bandit movements across the river. The residents of the lower valley up to the Rio Grande will oppose the withdrawal of any troops from the valley, and any suggested movement of troops away from this locality will, no doubt, bring on a new crop of rumors."

HARLINGEN.

The commanding officer, Twenty-sixth Infantry, reports "conditions quiet during the week."

The commanding officer, Sixth Cavalry, reports: "No disturbances due to bandits this week. It is said that Miguel Garcia, from near El Soliseno Rancho, opposite Santa Maria, was trying to enlist men to make a raid into United States and offered a dollar a day as wages. He failed to get any recruits."

MERCEDES.

"Conditions have remained normal during the period in this section."

MISSION.

The commanding officer, Twenty-eighth Infantry reports: "Conditions remained normal in this district during the week ending January 16, 1916. During this week one family emigrated to Mexico and 48 families of 80 persons immigrated to the United States."

The commanding officer of the Cavalry camp at Mission reports: "Conditions have continued normal during the past week."

FORT RINGGOLD, RIO GRANDE.

Report not received.

LAREDO.

The following report, dated January 15, was received from the commanding general, Second Brigade: "Conditions in and around Laredo have remained quiet and unchanged for the past week. Americans coming out of Mexico report a great deal of typhus fever, especially in the City of Mexico and in the towns between there and our border. There are now two cases of typhus in Laredo in the city pesthouse. Up to date there have been five cases, one of which died and two recovered."

The commanding officer, Fort McIntosh, reports: "Everything has remained quiet in this district during the past week."

EAGLE PASS.

The commanding officer, Seventeenth Infantry, reports: "Nothing has occurred to report on border conditions during the week."

The commanding officer, detachment, Fourteenth Cavalry, Eagle Pass, reports: "Conditions remain normal in this district."

DEI RIO.

"Conditions remain normal in this vicinity."

WESTERN TEXAS CAVALRY PATROL DISTRICT.

MARFA.

"Nothing of importance to report. Things have remained quiet throughout the entire district during the past week."

COLUMBUS.

The commanding officer of this station reports as follows: "It is reported that the Carranzista forces at Palomas, Mexico, have been reinforced by about 50 cavalymen and 30 infantrymen."

HACHITA.

"Border conditions in this patrol district for the week ending January 15, 1916, have remained normal."

DOUGLAS.

The following report, dated January 15, 1916, was received from the commanding officer, Second Cavalry Brigade:

"Military situation: On January 13, 150 men under Col. Quevedo, left Agua Prieta for Casas Grandes, to cooperate with other Carranza forces said to have been sent from Juarez. Maj. Campbell, in command of the garrison at Agua Prieta, gave strict orders to Col. Quevedo that there should be no raiding of the country through which his troops passed and to exterminate any Villa soldiers found."

"Economic situation: South of Douglas, in the Nacozari and Moctezuma districts, great activity is reported. Mining men are returning to open up their properties, and it is probable large shipments will be made in the near future. The hotel at Nacozari is crowded and means are being taken to increase the accommodations, on account of the heavy traffic expected in the spring."

The commanding officer, Seventh Cavalry, reports: "Conditions have remained normal in this vicinity during the week."

NACO.

"All has been quiet from a military standpoint in this vicinity during the week."

Mr. LIPPITT. While the information thus given is very meager, it so happened that the country was to receive additional and very interesting information later on. And bearing these dates in mind—the recognition of Carranza on October 19, 1915, and the first half of January as a time when conditions were quiet and normal on the border—I now want to turn to this later source of information. This January condition of good order did not continue, if it ever existed. Turbulence continued and grew worse in Mexico and along the border, finally culminating in the Villa raid on Columbus, March 9, and his pursuit by American troops. The President explained this expedition by announcing on March 21 that—

As has already been announced, the expedition into Mexico was ordered under an agreement with the de facto government of Mexico for the single purpose of taking the bandit Villa.

And that the expedition would—retire from Mexican territory so soon as that object is accomplished.

The expedition did not succeed in taking the bandit Villa and finally came to a standstill, but the troops were not withdrawn; so that on May 22—more than two months after the troops went over the border—Carranza sent a note to Mr. Wilson protesting against the continuance of American troops in Mexico, declaring that the expedition had not been undertaken with his consent, and demanding the immediate withdrawal of American troops in accordance with Mr. Wilson's promise.

The United States delayed its answer to this communication for nearly a month, but on June 20 sent a reply which from many points of view is a most extraordinary document. It is an arraignment and criticism of the administration of Mr. Wilson's choice for the head of the Mexican Government, Carranza, such that if it had been made by any of his Republican opponents would have been considered an act of extreme partisanship. No more complete evidence of the impropriety of that choice could be offered and, considering the conditions it describes and declares existed in Mexico at the time of the recognition of Carranza on October 9, 1915, and its description of conditions in January, 1916, the period Congress was told that quiet and order reigned there, calls for some explanation. I quote the third paragraph of this note of June 20:

It would be tedious to recount instance after instance, outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity, to illustrate the true nature and extent of the widespread conditions of lawlessness and violence which have prevailed. During the past nine months in particular—

Notice this is September 20, one month before Carranza was recognized—the frontier of the United States along the lower Rio Grande has been thrown into a state of constant apprehension and turmoil because of frequent and sudden incursions into American territory and depredations and murders on American soil by Mexican bandits, who have taken the lives and destroyed the property of American citizens, sometimes carrying American citizens across the international boundary with the booty seized. American garrisons have been attacked at night, American soldiers killed, and their equipment and horses stolen; American ranches have been raided, property stolen and destroyed, and American trains wrecked and plundered. The attacks on Brownsville, Red House Ferry, Progreso post office, and Las Paladas, all occurring during September last, are typical.

This is the language in which the Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, is describing conditions that existed during the month preceding the recognition of Carranza. Now, see who is responsible for these attacks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LIPPITT. I should prefer not to be interrupted for a few minutes. At the conclusion of my remarks I shall be very glad to answer any question that the Senator from Nebraska may wish to put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LIPPITT (reading)—

In these attacks on American territory Carranzista adherents, and even Carranzista soldiers, took part in the looting, burning, and killing. Not only were these murders characterized by ruthless brutality, but uncivilized acts of mutilation were perpetrated. Representations were made to Gen. Carranza, and he was emphatically requested to stop these reprehensible acts in a section which he has long claimed to be under the complete domination of his authority. Notwithstanding these representations and the promise of Gen. Nafarrette to prevent attacks along the international boundary, in the following month of October—

And this is the month in which, on the 19th, Carranza was recognized.

A passenger train was wrecked by bandits and several persons killed 7 miles north of Brownsville, and an attack was made upon United States troops at the same place several days later. Since these attacks leaders of the bandits, well known both to Mexican civil and military authorities as well as to American officers, have been enjoying with impunity the liberty of the towns of northern Mexico. So far has the indifference of the de facto government to these atrocities gone that some of these leaders, as I am advised, have received not only the protection of that government but encouragement and aid as well.

This is a description of conditions that were existing for a few weeks preceding and apparently following Carranza's recognition by this country. It appears that Carranza adherents and soldiers were looting, burning, and killing with ruthless brutality and perpetrating uncivilized acts of mutilation; that in spite of representations emphatically made to him they did not cease, and that even in the month of October a passenger train was wrecked and several persons killed near Brownsville; and that although the leaders of the bandits who committed the acts were well known to the Mexican authorities, they were enjoying their liberty with impunity in the towns of northern Mexico—a section which he (Carranza) has long claimed to be under the complete domination of his authority.

It is impossible to suppose that the American Government, which now urges these facts as an accusation against Carranza, was not aware of them at the time he was recognized by this Government. In view of the existence of such facts, proclaimed by the unimpeachable authority of the American Department of State, the approval of Carranza and his acts as evidenced by his recognition, becomes one of the most extraordinary incidents in American history.

The note gives other interesting information, however—information as to the condition of affairs in the month of January, 1916, during the time, as the Senate was informed, conditions were normal and quiet on the Mexican border. I read from the fourth paragraph of Mr. Lansing's note of June 20:

Depredations upon American persons and property within Mexican jurisdiction have been still more numerous. For example, on January 3 troops were requested to punish the bands of outlaws which looted the Cusi mining property 80 miles west of Chihuahua, but no effective results came from this request. During the following week the bandit Villa, with his band of about 200 men, was operating without opposition between Rubio and Santa Ysabel, a fact well known to Carranzista authorities. Meanwhile a party of unfortunate Americans started by train from Chihuahua to visit the Cusi mines, after having received assurances from the Carranzista authorities in the State of Chihuahua that the country was safe and that a guard on the train was not necessary. The Americans held passports or safe conducts issued by authorities of the de facto government. On January 10 the train was stopped by Villa bandits and 18 of the American party were stripped of their clothing and shot in cold blood, in what is now known as "the Santa Ysabel massacre." Gen. Carranza stated to the agent of the Department of State that he had issued orders for the immediate pursuit, capture, and punishment of those responsible for this atrocious crime. Assurances were also given by Mr. Arredondo, presumably under instructions from the de facto government, that the murderers would be brought to justice, and that steps would also be taken to remedy the lawless conditions existing in the State of Durango. It is true that Villa, Castro, and Lopez were publicly declared to be outlaws and subject to apprehension and execution, but, so far as known, only a single man personally connected with this massacre has been brought to justice by Mexican authorities.

So we now have this description of conditions that were existing during the month of January, when, as the Senate was informed, conditions were quiet and normal.

There is one more interesting fact that is worthy of attention in this remarkable message. In the note of Carranza, to which this is a reply, he declared that if the American troops were not withdrawn he would have to resort to an appeal to arms. The American reply, on June 20, declared: If—the de facto government of Mexico is pleased to ignore this obligation and to believe that "in case of a refusal to retire these troops there is no further recourse than to defend its territory by an appeal to arms," the Government of the United States would surely be lacking in sincerity and friendship if it did not frankly impress upon the de facto government that the execution of this threat will lead to the gravest consequences.

I suppose nobody will question that in this statement President Wilson meant war. No other interpretation can be put upon the expression "gravest consequences." It was so interpreted by the press and by the people generally, and the feeling was reflected in the activities of commercial markets and the prices of securities. It was apparently so intended by the administration, for militiamen were hastily summoned from their homes, our forces mobilized, entrained, and hurried to the border at great expense to the Treasury and inconvenience to the men; and Senator Stone, chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, announced to the press that hope of peaceful settlement was gone. (Washington Post, June 26.)

But what did the Mexican Government do? On June 21, the very next day after the American message was delivered, troops of Carranza, under the command of Gen. Gomez, at Carrizal met in battle a troop of American Cavalry advancing to attack, defeated them, killed several of them, captured others, and dispersed the balance. Here is Capt. Morey's account of what occurred:

CARRIZAL, MEXICO, June 21, 1916, 9.15 a. m.

To commanding officer, Ojo Federico:

My troops reached Ojo Santo Domingo at 5.30 p. m., June 20. Met C Troop, under Capt. Boyd. I came under Capt. Boyd's command, and marched my troop in rear for Carrizal at 4.15 a. m., reaching open field to southeast of town at 6.30 a. m.

Capt. Boyd sent in a note requesting permission to pass through the town. This was refused. Stated we could go to the north, but not east. Capt. Boyd said he was going to Ahumada at this time.

He was talking with Carranza commander, Gen. Gomez sent a written message that Capt. Boyd could bring his force in town and have a conference. Capt. Boyd feared an ambush. He was under the impression that the Mexicans would run as soon as we fired.

We formed for attack, his intention being to move up to the line of about 120 Mexicans on the edge of the town. We formed C Troop on the left in line of skirmishers, one platoon of K Troop on right of line, and another K Troop platoon on extreme right, echeloned a little to the rear.

When we were within 300 yards the Mexicans opened fire, and a strong one, before we fired a shot; then we opened up. They did not run. To make a long account short, after about an hour's fire, in which both troops had advanced, C Troop to position of Mexican machine gun, and K Troop closing in slightly to the left. We were very busy on the right keeping off a flank attack. A group of Mexicans left town, went around our rear, and led our horses off at a gallop.

At about 9 o'clock one platoon of K Troop, which was on our right, fell back. Sergeant said he could not stay there. Both platoons fell back about 1,000 yards to the west, and then, together with some men of C Troop who were there, these men scattered.

I was slightly wounded. Capt. Boyd, a man told me, was killed. Nothing was seen of Lieut. Adair after fight started, so man I saw stated.

I am hiding in a hole 2,000 yards from field and have one other wounded man and three men with me.

MOREY, Captain.

So Carranza did exactly what Mr. Wilson told him would be followed by "the gravest consequences." Now, what have the gravest consequences been? On June 24 Mr. Arredondo delivered to the American Government a curt acknowledgment and justification of the Carrizal affair, with the information that he had captured 17 American soldiers, and on the 25th we replied, saying the note evidently was—intended as a formal avowal of deliberately hostile action against the forces of the United States—

And asking would they please release the prisoners and the property of the United States and kindly let us know what they intended to do next. This is the correspondence as printed in the Washington Post of June 26:

With the permission of the Senate, I will not read that, but will ask that it will be included in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NOTE TO CARRANZA DEMANDING THE RELEASE OF UNITED STATES PRISONERS AND STATEMENT OF HIS ATTITUDE.

The text of the note to the Mexican de facto government, transmitted yesterday to James Linn Rodgers, special representative of the American Government in Mexico City, says:

"Mr. Arredondo yesterday delivered to this Government the following communication:

"I am directed by my Government to inform your excellency, with reference to the Carrizal incident, that the chief executive, through the Mexican war department, gave orders to Gen. Jacinto B. Trevino not to permit American forces from Gen. Pershing's column to advance farther south nor to move either east or west from the points where they are located, and to oppose new incursions of American soldiers into Mexican territory. These orders were brought by Gen. Trevino to the attention of Gen. Pershing, who acknowledged the receipt of the communication relative thereto. On the 22d instant, as your excellency knows, an American force moved eastward quite far from its base, notwithstanding the above orders, and was engaged by Mexican troops at Carrizal, State of Chihuahua. As a result of the encounter, several men on both sides were killed and wounded and 17 American soldiers were made prisoners."

STATEMENT TO CARRANZA.

"You are hereby instructed to hand to the minister of foreign relations of the de facto government the following:

"The Government of the United States can put no other construction upon the communication handed to the Secretary of State of the United States on the 24th of June, by Mr. Arredondo, under instruction of your Government, than that it is intended as a formal avowal of deliberately hostile action against the forces of the United States now in Mexico, and of the purpose to attack them without provocation whenever they move from their present position in pursuance of the objects for which they were sent there, notwithstanding the fact that those objects not only involve no unfriendly intention toward the Government and people of Mexico, but are, on the contrary, intended only to assist that Government in protecting itself and the territory and people of the United States against irresponsible and insurgent bands."

"I am instructed, therefore, by my Government to demand the immediate release of the prisoners taken in the encounter at Carrizal, together with any property of the United States taken with them, and to inform you that the Government of the United States expects an early statement from your Government as to the course of action it wishes the Government of the United States to understand it has determined upon, and that it also expects that this statement be made through the usual diplomatic channels and not through subordinate military commanders."

Mr. STONE. Is the Senator reading literally from the letter sent to Carranza?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LIPPITT. When I began my remarks I suggested that I should prefer to be allowed to finish them.

Mr. STONE. That is all right. I was not here when the Senator began.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will not be long.

Mr. STONE. But I was wondering whether the Senator was quoting literally from the diplomatic letter. When the Senator has finished, I hope he will kindly let us know.

Mr. LIPPITT. Carranza was graciously pleased to accede to this demand for the return of the captured soldiers, and a few days later they were released, but without their arms, without their uniforms, and in all kinds of nondescript costumes.

Having obtained this much, Mr. Wilson grew bold again and apparently remembered about the bodies of the soldiers that were killed, and on June 29—eight days after their death—our consul at El Paso was informed by Gen. Trevino that we could have these bodies if we wanted to go after them, but we must pay all expenses. The announcement, as printed in the New York Times of June 30, is as follows:

OREGON GIVES PERMISSION FOR REMOVAL OF BODIES OF AMERICAN TROOPERS WHO WERE SLAIN AT CARRIZAL.

MEXICO CITY, June 29.

Minister of War Obregon to-day instructed Gen. Trevino, the Mexican commander at Chihuahua, to inform Consul Garcia at El Paso that no impediment would be placed in the way of the American authorities if they desired to remove the bodies of the American troopers killed at Carrizal to American territory for burial.

The correspondence between Obregon and Trevino arose from a request of Gen. Bell, commander at El Paso, that the Mexican Government deliver the bodies for burial. Gen. Obregon informed Gen. Trevino that the expense for the transfer of the bodies to the United States must be borne by the American Government.

So this is the situation. No request for the disavowal of this attack has been made, so far as the public has been informed; no demand for reparation has been made; no "grave consequences" of any kind have come to Carranza. But, on the contrary, Mr. Carranza celebrated American Independence Day, July 4, 1916, by sending another note to the American Government, couched in pacificatory terms, but again demanding the withdrawal of American troops; and on July 8 the Secretary of State replied, assuring Carranza—of the sincere gratification of my Government at the frank statement of the difficulties which have unfortunately arisen in our relations—and of our desire for the—continuation of cordial relations.

Since then what the newspapers describe as parleys have been going on in secret between the State Department and representatives of Mexico.

Mr. Wilson began his relations with Mexico by refusing to recognize and insisting upon deposing Huerta, because he had injured the Mexican people in causing the death of Madera. He then assisted and coordinated with Villa in spite of his murder of Benton and his long list of brutal and fiendish outrages. He has now recognized Carranza, who, in Mr. Lansing's indictment, for more than nine months immediately preceding and since recognition, has been guilty of "outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity"; of "murders characterized by ruthless brutality"; and "uncivilized acts of mutilation" against American citizens, who ignored his call upon the "leaders of factions to act together and to act promptly"; and who has, in defiance of his threat of "gravest consequences," met and defeated American troops in battle, and Mr. Wilson is now in conference with him, and rejoicing in "the continuance of cordial relations" with a man of this record and character. Three years ago, in his message to Congress on August 27, 1913, Mr. Wilson said:

We should let everyone who assumes to exercise authority in any part of Mexico know in the most unequivocal way that we should vigilantly watch the fortunes of those Americans who can not get away, and shall hold those responsible for their sufferings and losses to a definite reckoning. That can be and will be made plain beyond the possibility of a misunderstanding.

Since then he has demanded salutes to our flag which have not been fired; he has engaged the Navy in war at Vera Cruz, involving the death of sailors and marines; and engaged the Army in war at Carrizal involving the death of our officers and soldiers. He admits the continual murder and brutal outrage of our citizens, but instead of calling those responsible for such things to a "definite reckoning," establishes "cordial relations" with them. He boastfully proclaims what "he can and will do" one minute, and threatens "gravest consequences" the next, but sucks the force from both by declaring in between times that he "is too proud to fight" and that it is "none of our business" what they do, anyway. And the result of it all is that our patriotic young men are taken away from their families and affairs to mark time in the heat of the Mexican border, while he waits watchfully to decide which way he will jump next, and he calls all this "serving the Mexican people."

I ask permission in connection with my remarks to publish the description of the withdrawal of the embargo on arms as it was received in Mexico and was described in the volume by Mrs. Nelson O'Shaughnessy entitled "A Diplomat's Wife in Mexico."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"FEBRUARY 1—10.30 P. M.

"To-night has come the long-feared cable from Washington stating that the President intends to raise the embargo on arms and ammunition. The note was for Nelson's special information, not for delivery to the foreign office yet, but the hour will come when he will have to gird himself to do the deed. It has been sent to every chancery in Europe, where it will raise a storm, to blow hard or not, according to the amount of material investments in Mexico. We scarcely know what to think; we are dazed and aghast. I am glad that a few hours at least must elapse before the facts will get out. I shall hardly dare to venture forth unveiled. Courteous as the Mexicans have been to Nelson and myself, some day, in face of the terrible catastrophes we have brought upon them, their patience must fail. This act will not establish the rebels in Mexico City or anywhere else, but will indefinitely prolong this terrible civil war and swell the tide of the blood of men and women, 'and the children—oh, my brothers.'

"I think Wilhelmstrasse, Downing Street, Quai d'Orsay, Ballplatz, and all the other ministeres will pick many a flaw in the President's document; but what can they do except anathematize us behind our backs?"

"FEBRUARY 2.

"My first thought on awaking this morning was of the irremediable catastrophe threatening this beautiful land. Nelson says he thinks Huerta will disregard it, as he has disregarded all other moves of Mr. Wilson, but it can be nothing but a further source of terrible embarrassment."

"FEBRUARY 3—11 A. M.

"The second telegram has just come, saying that the President intends within a few hours to raise the embargo, and that N. is to inform all Americans and foreigners. I keep repeating to myself, 'God! God! God!'. A generation of rich and poor alike will be at the mercy of the hordes that will have new strength and means to fight and eat and pillage and rape their way through the country."

"There will be a stampede of people leaving town to-night and to-morrow but those in the interior, what of them? There is sure to be violent anti-American demonstration, especially in out-of-the-way places."

"12.30.

"The news previously leaked out from Vera Cruz last night. Nothing gets out from the embassy, as our staff all happen to know how to keep their counsel. It is what Mr. Lind has wanted for months, and I suppose the news was too satisfactory to keep. You will read it in to-morrow's Paris Herald and the Journal de Geneve. Don't worry about us. We will have first-class safeguard if Huerta declares war. He may not. It is his policy, and a strong one it has been, to ignore Washington's proclamations. On the other hand, he will have no intention of being caught by Villa, like a rat in a hole; and war with us may seem to him a glorious solution of his problems. Villa and Carranza will not arrive in the city together. No street is broad enough to permit the double entry of their contrary passions, violence, and greed.

"Is it 'to laugh' when Villa is thanked publicly and officially for his kind promises in regard to life and property in the north?"

"FEBRUARY 3d—Evening.

"A busy day—as you can well imagine. N. had to inform the various legations. I went down town with him for luncheon, a thing I never do. We met the Spanish minister driving up the Paseo in his victoria—a pathetic figure. He has had so much worry and heartbreak over the situation and has been so helpless in the face of the disasters which have befallen his nationals that he is beyond surprise. Upon hearing the news he merely made a tired gesture of acquiescence. To him the raising of the embargo was, doubtless, only one more inexplicable thing. Von Hintze was out, and we next stopped at the French legation, just opposite the German. Eyguesseparsse, the secretary, possessed of one of the most elegant silhouettes in the world, was more than polite, but quite impassive, as he came out with Nelson to speak a word to me. He is married to a handsome young Mexican—the sister of Rincon Gaillard, Marques de Guadalupe—whose time, strength, money, and life, if need be, are at the disposition of his country.

"When we got to the restaurant in Plateros, the most public and alarm-allaying spot we could think of, the newspaper men assailed N. with questions. The 'story' that they are after is what the relations of Huerta would be to N. and the embassy, and they announce that they were not going to let the chargé out of their sight.

"After lunch, at which Mr. S. joined us, we went to the British Legation. N. gave Sir L. the news while I walked in the garden with Lady C., both of us wilted with nerves on edge. I came home, rested for a few minutes, and then dressed and went out to fulfill my afternoon program of calls, turning up late for bridge at Madame Simon's. She asked me squarely, though in the politest of French, 'What is your Government doing?' I saw many people during the afternoon, but apart from her greeting, there was no word of politics. I think the matter is too distasteful to the public to be discussed with any one like myself, where care in the expression of feeling is necessary.

"I drove home with Lady C., who was quite aghast at the situation just in time to get into a tea gown and downstairs for dinner. In the salon Seeger and the Grauxs (who leave tomorrow for Vera Cruz and New York) were waiting. N. telephoned that he was at the Palace, just going in to see Huerta. You can imagine that we had a lively dinner of surmises. He returned barely in time to say good-by to the Grauxs, and after they left we sat up late to talk over the appalling situation.

"Sir Lionel was with the President when N. got there. From the violent sounds coming through the half-opened door, N. thought that the old man was at last losing patience and control, and prepared himself for the worst. However, when N. finally went in Huerta was perfectly calm and had never been more friendly. He never mentioned President Wilson's name, and concerning the raising of the embargo quietly remarked that it would not change matters much, but would merely give a recognized name to the smuggling over the border that had been going on for three years. He kept repeating that the future would justify him; that he had had nothing to do with the killing of Madero; that the attitude of the administration toward him was simply 'a persecution.' N. said he never flinched. He terminated the interview by saying that he greatly appreciated N.'s public as well as private courtesies, and that he was 'very necessary to the situation.'

"FEBRUARY 4.

"The newspapers have appalling headlines about President Wilson. El Puritano, with his mask off, the avowed friend of bandits and assassins, is about the mildest sample."

Mr. LIPPITT. I also ask to have printed the message from Gen. Carranza to the American Secretary of State of May 22, 1916, and Mr. Lansing's reply of June 20, 1916.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"MEXICAN GOVERNMENT'S NOTE OF MAY 22, 1916, REQUESTING A DEFINITION OF THE INTENTIONS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT REGARDING MEXICO.

"MEXICO, D. F., May 22, 1916.

"MR. SECRETARY: I am instructed by the first chief of the constitutional army, in charge of the executive power of Mexico, to address your excellency the following note:

"1. The Mexican Government has just been informed that a group of American troops, crossing the international boundary, has entered Mexican territory and is at the present time near a place called 'El Pino,' located about 60 miles south of the line.

"The crossing of these troops, effected again without the consent of the Mexican Government, gravely endangers the harmony and good relations which should exist between the Government of the United States and Mexico.

"This government must consider the above action as a violation of the sovereignty of Mexico, and therefore it requests in a most urgent manner that the Washington Government should consider the case carefully, in order definitely to outline the policy it should follow with regard to the Mexican nation.

"In order to afford a clear understanding of the basis of the request involved in this note it becomes necessary carefully to review the incidents which have occurred up to the present time.

"2. On account of the incursion at Columbus, N. Mex., by a band led by Francisco Villa on the morning of March 9, 1916, the Mexican Government sincerely deploring the occurrence, and for the purpose of affording efficacious protection to the frontier it advanced its desires that the Governments of the United States and Mexico should enter into an agreement for the pursuit of bandits. The above proposal was made by the Government of Mexico, guided by the precedent established under similar conditions obtaining in the years 1880 to 1884, and requested, in concrete, permission for Mexican forces to cross into American territory in pursuit of bandits under a condition of reciprocity which would permit American forces to cross into Mexican territory if the Columbus incident would be repeated in any other point of the frontier line.

"As a consequence of this proposal made in the Mexican note of March 10, the Government of the United States, through error or haste, considered that the good disposition shown by the Mexican Government was sufficient to authorize the crossing of the boundary, and to that effect, without awaiting the conclusion of a formal agreement on the matter, ordered that a column of American forces should cross into Mexican territory in pursuit of Villa and his band.

"3. The American Government on this account made emphatic declarations, assuring the Mexican Government that it was acting with entire good faith and stating that its only purpose in crossing the frontier was to pursue and capture or destroy the Villa band that had assaulted Columbus; that this action did not mean an invasion of our territory nor any intention to impair Mexican sovereignty, and that as soon as a practical result should be obtained the American troops would withdraw from Mexican territory.

"4. The Mexican Government was not informed that the American troops had crossed the frontier line until March 17, at which time it was unofficially known, through private channels from El Paso, that the American troops had entered into Mexican territory. This government then addressed a note to the Government of the United States stating that inasmuch as the precise terms and conditions of an agreement which should formally be entered into between both countries for the crossing of troops had not been stipulated the American Government should not consider itself authorized to send the expedition.

"The Washington Government explained the sending of such expedition, expressing its regret that a misinterpretation had occurred in regard to the attitude of the Mexican Government concerning the crossing of American troops over the boundary line in pursuit of Villa, but that this had been done under the impression that the previous exchange of messages implied the full consent of the Mexican Government without the necessity of further formalities.

"The American Government explained also that its attitude was due to the necessity of quick action, and stated that it was disposed to receive any suggestions the Mexican Government would wish to make in regard to the terms of a definite agreement covering the operations of troops on either side of the boundary.

"5. Both Governments then began to discuss the terms of an agreement in accordance to which the reciprocal crossing of troops should be arranged, and to this end two projects from the Mexican Government and two counterprojects from the American Government were exchanged. During the discussion of this agreement the Mexican Government constantly insisted that the above-mentioned crossing should be limited within a zone of operations for the troops in foreign territory; that the time the troops should remain within it, the number of soldiers of an expedition, and the class of arms they should carry should be fixed. The Government of the United States opposed the above limitations, and when at last the American Government submitted the last counterdraft, accepting them in part, it stated, nevertheless, that while agreeing to sign the agreement, the latter would not apply on the Columbus expedition.

"6. This attitude of the American Government brought forth the Mexican note of April 12, which, deferring the discussion of the agreement, since the latter was not to apply to the Columbus case, requested the American Government to withdraw its troops, since their stay was not based on any agreement and the expedition was then unnecessary, inasmuch as the Villa bandits had been dispersed and reduced to impotency.

"7. While the American Government was delaying its reply to the aforesaid note of April 12, and took no action to withdraw its troops, it was considered convenient that military commanders of both countries should meet at some point of the frontier to review the military aspect of the situation and endeavor through this channel to arrive at a satisfactory solution, which, on the part of Mexico, consisted in the withdrawal of American troops from its territory.

"To this end Gens. Hugh L. Scott and Frederick Funston, representing the American Government, and Gen. Alvaro Obregon, secretary of war and marine, representing Mexico, met at Ciudad Juarez and El Paso, where they held a series of conferences with an open spirit of cordiality. During these conferences full explanations and data were exchanged concerning the military situation of the frontier.

"As a result of these conferences a draft of a memorandum was submitted to the approval of the Washington and Mexican Governments, in accordance with which Gen. Scott declared that the destruction and dispersion of the Villa band had been completed, and therefore the American Government had decided to begin the withdrawal of its troops under the promise that the Mexican Government would endeavor to maintain efficacious guard on the frontier against new incursions similar to that at Columbus.

"8. The Mexican Government refused to approve that sort of agreement, because it was stated in it besides that the American Government could suspend the withdrawal of its troops if any other incident would occur which would serve to change the belief of the Washington Government in the ability of the Mexican Government to protect the frontier.

"The Mexican Government could not accept this condition to suspend the withdrawal, because the evacuation of its territory is a matter entirely affecting the sovereignty of the country, which should at no time be subjected to the discretion of the American Government; it being possible on the other hand that another incident might occur, which would thus give the indefinite stay of the American troops in Mexican territory a certain color of legality.

"9. Gen. Scott, Gen. Funston, and Gen. Obregon were discussing this point, when on the 5th of the present month of May a band of outlaws assaulted an American garrison at Glen Springs, on the American side, crossing the Rio Grande immediately after to enter into Mexican territory via Boquillas.

"10. On this account and fearing that the American Government would hasten the crossing of new troops into Mexican territory in pursuit of the outlaws, the Mexican Government instructed Gen. Obregon to notify the United States that American soldiers on his new account would not be permitted to enter into Mexico, and that orders had already been given to all military commanders in the frontier to prevent it.

"11. When the attitude of the Mexican Government became known, Gens. Scott and Funston assured Gen. Obregon that no movement of American troops had been ordered to cross the frontier on account of the Boquillas incident, and that no more American soldiers would enter into our territory.

"This assurance, which was personally made by Gens. Scott and Funston to Gen. Obregon when the conferences were about to be adjourned was reiterated by Gen. Scott himself in a later private conversation he had with Licenciado Juan Neftali Amador, subsecretary for foreign affairs, who had had the opportunity to take part in the conference between the American and the Mexican military commanders.

"12. On account of the same incident of Glen Springs, or Boquillas, fearing that the various bands of outlaws which are organized or armed near the frontier might repeat their incursions, and with a view to procuring an effective military cooperation between American and Mexican forces, this Government suggested through its representative, Gen. Obregon, to Gens. Scott and Funston, representing the United States, the convenience of reaching an understanding on a military plan of distribution of troops along the frontier in order that an effective watch could be kept over the whole region, and avoiding in this way, so far as possible, the recurrence of similar assaults. The Mexican Government showed by this action, not only its good faith and good wishes but also its frank willingness to arrive at an effective cooperation with the Government of the United States to avoid all further cause of friction between the two countries.

"This plan for the distribution of American and Mexican forces in their respective territories along the frontier was proposed as a means to immediately prevent any new difficulty and always with the idea of arriving later at the celebration of an agreement for the reciprocal crossing of troops, as long as the abnormal conditions exist in our territory.

"13. The conferences between Gens. Scott, Funston, and Obregon adjourned on May 11, without reaching any agreement concerning the unconditional withdrawal of the American troops. Gen. Scott insisted in the form of the memorandum concerning the conditional withdrawal of the American forces, but did not take into consideration the plan proposed by the Mexican Government for the protection of the frontier by means of detachments along the same.

"Under these conditions, it was left for the Governments of Washington and Mexico to conclude the arrangements initiated during the conferences of Ciudad Juarez and El Paso. Up to that time no complication had occurred on account of the new Boquillas incident, and all the assurances given Gens. Scott and Funston led to suppose that the above incident would not bring about new difficulties.

"14. The Mexican Government, however, has just been informed that 400 men of the Eighth Regiment of the American Army are in Mexican territory, having crossed the line in the direction of Boquillas approximately between the 10th and 11th of May, and are at present near a place called El Pino, about 60 miles south of the frontier. This fact was brought to the attention of the Mexican authorities by the commander himself of the American troops which crossed the frontier, who gave advice to the Mexican military commander at Esmeralda, Sierra Mojada, by a communication in which he informed him that he had crossed the frontier in pursuit of the band of outlaws which had assaulted Glen Springs, and in accordance with an agreement existing between the American and the Mexican Governments regarding the crossing of troops, and with the consent of a Mexican consular official in Del Rio, Tex., whom the American commander alleged to have informed of the entry of his expedition.

"15. The Mexican Government can not assume that an error has been committed a second time by the American Government, ordering the crossing of its troops without the consent of the Government of Mexico. It fails to understand, also, that a commander of troops of the United States Army would enter into Mexican territory without due authority from his superiors, and under the belief that he could secure permission for the crossing of his troops from a consular agent.

"The explanation given by the American Government in regard to the crossing of troops at Columbus has never been satisfactory to the Mexican Government; but the new invasion of our territory is no longer an isolated fact and tends to convince the Mexican Government that something more than a mere error is involved.

"16. This latter act of the American forces causes new complications for the Mexican Government, impairing the possibility of a satisfactory solution and increasing the tenseness of the international situation between both countries.

"The Mexican Government can not consider this last incident except as an invasion of our territory, made by American forces against the expressed will of the Mexican Government, and it is its duty to request, as it does, the American Government to order the immediate withdrawal of these new forces and to abstain completely from sending any other expedition of a similar character.

"17. The Mexican Government understands its obligations to protect the frontier; but this obligation is not exclusively its own, and it expects that the American Government, which is subject to an equal obligation, will appreciate the material difficulties with which this task is met, inasmuch as the American troops themselves, notwithstanding their number and in spite of the fact that their attention is not distracted by other military operations, are physically unable effectively to protect the frontier on the American side.

"The Mexican Government has made every effort on its part to protect the frontier, without disregarding on the other hand, the considerable task of pacification which is being performed in the rest of the country, and the American Government should understand that, if now and then any lamentable incursions into American territory committed by irresponsible bands of outlaws might occur, this should be a case for pecuniary reparation and a reason to adopt a combined defense, but never a cause for the American authorities to invade our national territory.

"The incursion of bands of outlaws into American territory is a deplorable incident, to say the least, but in no way can the Mexican Government be made responsible for them, inasmuch as it is doing everything possible to prevent them. The crossing of regular American troops into Mexican territory, against the expressed will of the Mexican Government, does constitute an act for which the American Government is responsible.

"18. The Mexican Government, therefore, believes that the time has come for it to insist with the American Government that in withdrawing at once the new Boquillas expedition, it should abstain in the future from sending in new troops. In any case, the Mexican Government after having made clear its unwillingness to permit the crossing of new American troops into Mexican territory, will have to consider the latter as an act of invasion of its territory, and therefore, it will be forced to defend itself against any group of American troops which may be found within it.

"19. With reference to the troops which are now interned in the State of Chihuahua on account of the Columbus incident, the Mexican Government is compelled to insist on their withdrawal.

"The Mexican Government understands that in the face of the unwillingness of the American Government to withdraw the above forces, it would be left no other recourse than to procure the defense of its territory by means of arms, but it understands at the same time its duty to avoid as far as possible an armed conflict between the two countries; and acting in accordance with article 21 of the treaty of February 2, 1848, it considers it its duty to resort to all means of a peaceful character to find a solution of the international misunderstanding in which both countries are involved.

"20. The Mexican Government considers it necessary to avail itself of this opportunity to request the American Government to give a more categorical explanation of its real intentions toward Mexico. To this end it hopes that in speaking with entire frankness its words may not be interpreted as tending to wound the sensibility of the American Government; but that it finds itself in the condition to set aside all diplomatic euphemism, in order to express its ideas with entire frankness. If in the expression of the grievances hereinafter mentioned the Mexican Government makes use of the most perfect frankness, it is because it considers it its duty to convey the most perfect clearness to the minds of the Government and the people of the United States concerning the Mexican point of view.

"21. The American Government has for some time been making protests of friendship to Latin-American countries, and it has availed itself of all possible efforts to convince the same that it is its desire to respect their sovereignty absolutely.

"With respect to Mexico, especially, the American Government has stated on various occasions that it has no intention to intervene in any way in its internal affairs and that it wishes to leave our country to decide by itself its difficult problems of political and social transformation.

"It is still reassured when on account of the Columbus expedition the American Government, through the voice of its President, has made the declaration that it does not intend to interfere in the affairs of Mexico, nor to invade it; that it does not desire to acquire a single inch of its territory, and that it will in no way impair its sovereignty.

"The Washington Government and its representatives in the frontier have also expressly declared that it is not the will of the American people to go into war or have an armed conflict with Mexico.

"Summing up all of the above, and judging from the official declarations which have been made for some time past by the Washington Government there should appear to be an honest purpose on the part of the Government and people of the United States not to launch into a conflict with Mexico.

"22. The Mexican Government, however, regrets to remark that the acts of the American military authorities are in absolute conflict with the above statements, and therefore finds itself constrained to appeal to the President, the Department of State, the Senate, and the American people to the end that once and for all time the true political tendency of the United States toward Mexico be defined.

"23. It is equally necessary that on this account the Government of the United States should define in a precise manner its purpose toward Mexico, in order that the other Latin-American nations may be able to judge the sincerity of such purposes and be able to appreciate the proper value of the protests of amity and fraternity which have been made to them during many years.

"24. The American Government, through the voice of its own President, stated that the punitive expedition from Columbus would withdraw from Mexican territory as soon as the band of the Villa outlaws should have been destroyed or dispersed. More than two months have elapsed since this expedition entered into Mexican territory. Gens. Scott and Funston declared in Ciudad Juarez that the Villa band had been entirely dispersed, and notwithstanding this the American troops are not withdrawn from the territory of Mexico.

"The American Government is convinced and has accepted the fact that no military task is now left for the Columbus expedition, and nevertheless the promise made by President Wilson that the forces would withdraw as soon as the purpose which caused them to go in should have been reached has not been complied with.

"Causes of any internal political order which may exist not to withdraw the American troops from Mexican territory, however justified they may appear, can not justify the above attitude, but, on the contrary, they accentuate the discrepancy between the protests of respect to the sovereignty of Mexico, and the actual fact that on account of reasons of internal policy of the United States a status should be maintained which is utterly unjust with regard to the Mexican Republic.

"25. The American Government stated that its purpose in causing the American troops to enter Mexico was only to defend the frontier against probable incursions. This statement, however, is in conflict with the attitude assumed by the same American Government in discussing the agreement concerning the reciprocal crossing of the frontier, because, while the Mexican Government maintained that said agreement should limit the zone of operation of the troops of one and the other country, as well as the time which the expeditions should last, the number of soldiers and the arm to which they should belong, the American Government constantly evaded these limitations. This attitude of the American Government, which is the one expecting to have frequent occasion to cross the frontier on account of incursions of outlaws, is one clearly indicating the purpose of having power to enter Mexican territory beyond the limit which the necessities of defense could require.

"26. The Columbus punitive expedition, as it has been called, had not, according to the statements of President Wilson, any other purpose than to reach and punish the band of outlaws which had committed the outrage, and it was organized under the supposition that the Mexican Government had given its consent to it. Such expedition, however, has had a character of such clear distrust toward Mexico and of such absolute independence that it can not justly be considered as anything but an invasion made without the consent, without the knowledge, and without the cooperation of the Mexican authorities.

"It was a known fact that the Columbus expedition crossed the frontier without the consent of the Mexican Government. The American military authorities have carried this expedition into effect without awaiting for the consent of the Government of Mexico, and even after they were officially informed that this Government has not given its consent for it they nevertheless continued it, causing more troops to cross the line without informing the Mexican authorities of this fact.

"The expedition has entered and operated within Mexican territory without procuring the cooperation of the Mexican authorities. The American military authorities have always maintained complete secrecy regarding their movements without informing the Mexican Government about them, as they would have done if they really had tried to obtain cooperation. This lack of advice and agreement was the cause of the clash which occurred in Parral between American forces and Mexican citizens.

"In conclusion, the Columbus expedition has been carried into effect without any spirit of harmony, but, on the contrary, under a spirit of distrust with respect to our authorities, as our cooperation was not only unsought, but we were not informed with regard to military operations effected, besides which the expedition was organized carrying not only Cavalry, but Artillery and Infantry forces.

"If the purpose was only to pursue a band of outlaws, which on account of its nature should be essentially light, this pursuit could only be carried into practice by means of forces of light Cavalry. The use of Artillery and Infantry can not be explained in any other way except as a means of precaution against the probable attack on the part of Mexican forces.

"Now, then, the protests of friendly cooperation made by the American authorities are not in keeping with the use of Infantry and Artillery exclusively suited to be employed only against the regular Mexican forces.

"If the Columbus expedition had taken place with the consent of the Mexican Government and its cooperation had been sought, the use of Artillery and Infantry would have been considered an insult to the Mexican authorities because of the supposition that they might feloniously assault the American forces which would have entered Mexico in pursuit of a common enemy and confiding in the friendship of the former. Nevertheless it is preferable to interpret this act as a proof that the American forces entered into Mexican territory without the consent of the Mexican Government, and therefore ready to repel any aggression on the part of regular Mexican forces who were ignorant of their presence.

"All of the above facts demonstrate that there has been a great discrepancy between the protests of sincere friendly cooperation on the part of the American authorities and the actual attitude of the expedition, which, on account of its distrust, its secrecy regarding its movements, and the arms at its disposal, clearly indicated that it was a hostile expedition and a real invasion of our territory.

"27. The American Government has stated on different occasions that the Columbus expedition had no other object than to pursue and destroy the Villa bandits, and that as soon as this would be accomplished the expedition would be withdrawn.

"The facts, however, have shown that the intention of the American Government was not the same during the conferences at Ciudad Juarez and El Paso. It can not be explained otherwise that Gen. Scott should have insisted so emphatically on the signing of a memorandum stating that the American forces would not finish their withdrawal if any other incident occurred which would mortify the belief of the American Government in the ability of the Mexican Government to protect the frontier. The conclusion to be drawn from this inconsistency of Gen. Scott regarding the signing of this memorandum is that the Columbus expedition entered into Mexico promising to withdraw as soon as it should have destroyed the Villa band, but that it is the purpose to make use of it afterwards as an instrument to guarantee the protection of the frontier.

"28. The American Government justly desires that the frontier should be protected. If the frontier should be properly protected against incursions from Mexico, there would be no reason, then, for the existing difficulty. The American Government knows of the difficulties obtaining in the protection of a frontier line where there are no natural facilities to aid in its defense, and notwithstanding its immense resources, the American Government itself has not been able to render an effective protection along a line of more than 2,000 kilometers to be guarded.

"The Mexican Government proposed that the military chiefs in charge of the troops in one and the other country should discuss a plan of cantonments along the boundary line, and notwithstanding the protests of the American Government of its desire to solve its difficulties with Mexico, Gen. Scott did not accept the above plan of cantonments, which is the only thing rational and the only plan that can be carried into effect without invading the sovereignty or territory of one or the other country. The American Government prefers to keep its troops inactive and idle within the territory of Mexico instead of withdrawing them to post them along the frontier in accord with Mexican authorities, who would do likewise on their side. By this action the American Government gives room for the supposition that its true intention is to keep the troops it already has interned in Mexico, anticipating that it may make use of them later for future operations.

"29. The American Government has on all occasions declared its desire to help the Constitutionalist Government to complete the work of pacification, and its desire that this task should be carried into effect within the least time possible. The true attitude of the American Government in relation with these desires appears to be entirely incongruous, inasmuch as for some time back it has been doing things indicating that it not only does not render any assistance to the work of pacification of Mexico but that on the contrary it appears to place all possible obstacles to the execution of this task. As a matter of fact, without considering the great number of diplomatic representations made under the pretext of protection to American interests in Mexico, which are constantly embarrassing the task of the new Government, whose intention it is to recognize the political, economic, and social conditions of the country on a new basis, there is a great number of facts which cause the influence of the American Government to be felt against the consolidation of the present Government of Mexico.

"The decided support given at one time to Villa by Gen. Scott and the Department of State itself was the principal cause for the prolongation of civil war in Mexico during many months. Later on the continuous support which the American Catholic hierarchy have rendered to the Mexican Catholic clergy, which is incessantly working against the Constitutionalist Government, and the constant activities of the American interventionist press and business men of that country, are, to say the least, an indication that the present American Government does not wish or is unable to prevent all the works of conspiracy against the Constitutionalist Government being carried into effect in the United States.

"30. The American Government claims constantly from the Mexican Government an effective protection of the frontiers, and nevertheless the greater number of the bands which take the name of rebels against this Government is provided and armed, and perhaps also organized, on the American side under the tolerance of the authorities of the State of Texas, and, it may be said, even of the Federal authorities of the United States. The leniency of the American authorities toward such bands is such that in the majority of cases the conspirators, who are well known, whenever they have been discovered and imprisoned are released under insignificant bonds, permitting them to continue in their efforts.

"Mexican emigrants who are plotting and organizing incursions on the American side have now more facilities to cause injury than before, because, knowing that any new difficulty between Mexico and the United States prolongs the stay of American troops, they endeavor to increase the occasions for conflict and friction.

"31. The American Government claims to help the Constitutionalist Government in its task of pacification and urges that such a work be done within the least time possible, and that the protection of the frontiers be effected in the most efficacious way. And, nevertheless, on various occasions the American Government has detained shipments of arms and ammunition purchased by the Mexican Government in the United States which should be employed to hasten the task of pacification and to more efficaciously protect the frontier. The pretexts given for the detention of shipments of munitions consigned to this Government have always been futile and never have we been given a frank reason. It has been said, for example, that the munitions were embargoed because it was not known who the owner might be, or because of fear that they might fall into the hands of Villista bands.

"The embargo of war material consigned to the Mexican Government can have no other interpretation than that the Government of the United States wishes to protect itself against the emergency of a future conflict, and therefore it is endeavoring to prevent arms and ammunition which might be used against American troops from reaching the hands of the Mexican Government. The American Government would have the right to take this precaution against such emergency, but in that case it ought not to say that it is endeavoring to cooperate with the Mexican Government, and it would be preferable to give out a more frank statement concerning its procedure.

"The American Government either desires decidedly and frankly to help the Mexican Government to reestablish peace, and in this case it ought not to prevent the exportation of arms, or the true purposes of the American Government are to get ready so that in the case of a future war with Mexico the latter may find itself less provided with arms and ammunition. If this is the case, it would be preferable to say so.

"In any way the embargo on arms and ammunition consigned to the Mexican authorities under the frivolous pretext of preventing these arms and ammunition from falling into the hands of Villista bands is a clear indication that the actual acts of the American military authorities are entirely in conflict with the protestation of peace of the American Government.

"The Mexican Government can not wish war with the United States, and if this should occur it would undoubtedly be as a consequence of a deliberate purpose of the United States. For the time being the above precautionary acts of the American Government indicate that there is a purpose of preparedness for such emergency, of that which is the same, the beginning of hostility on the part of the United States toward Mexico.

"32. In conclusion, the New York Federal authorities, alleging that they act at the suggestion of a neutral peace society, have ordered the detention of several parts of machinery which the Mexican Government was forwarding to Mexico for its ammunition factory. It could not be conceived that this machinery could be used before several months after it had reached its destination. This action of the American Government tending to prevent the manufacturing of munitions in a remote future is another clear indication that its true purposes toward Mexico are not peaceful, because while millions and millions of dollars' worth of arms and ammunition are being daily exported for the European war, without the peace societies becoming impressed by the spectacle of that war, the New York authorities are showing exceedingly marked interest in seconding the purposes of the above-mentioned humanitarian societies whenever it is a matter of exporting to Mexico any machinery for the manufacture of arms and ammunition.

"Mexico has the indisputable right, just like the United States and all other nations in the world, to provide for its military necessities, especially so when it is confronting so vast a task as that of insuring the pacification of the interior of its country; and the action of the Government of the United States in detaining machinery destined for the manufacture of ammunition is indicative either that the United States wishes to place obstacles to its complete pacification or that this action is one of a series carried into effect by the American authorities as a matter of precaution in case of a projected war with Mexico.

"33. All of the above-mentioned circumstances indicate that the true purposes of the military authorities of the United States are in absolute contradiction with the continuous protests of amity of the American Government toward Mexico.

"34. The Mexican people and Government are absolutely sure that the American people do not wish war with Mexico. There are, nevertheless, strong American interests and strong Mexican interests laboring to secure a conflict between the two countries. The Mexican Government firmly desires to preserve peace with the American Government, but to that effect it is indispensable that the American Government should frankly explain its true purposes toward Mexico.

"It is indispensable that the above contradiction between the protests of amity on the part of Washington and the acts of distrust and aggression on the part of American military authorities should be brought to an end.

"The Mexican Government and people therefore are anxious to know what they should expect, and they want to be sure that the expressions so many times made by the Government of the United States should be really in keeping with the sincere desires for peace between the two countries, a friendship which should exist not only in declarations but should crystallize in deeds.

"The Mexican Government therefore formally invites the Government of the United States to cause the situation of uncertainty between the two countries to cease and to support its declarations and protests of amity with real and effective action which will convince the Mexican people of the sincerity of its purposes. This action, in the present situation, can not be other than the immediate withdrawal of the American troops which are now in Mexican territory.

"In complying with the instructions of the first chief, I avail myself of this occasion to offer your excellency the assurance of my highest consideration.

"C. AGUILAR, Secretary.

"His Excellency ROBERT LANSING,

Secretary of State of the United States of America,

Washington, D. C.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE SECRETARY OF FOREIGN RELATIONS OF THE DE FACTO GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO.

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, June 20, 1916.

"SIR: I have read your communication, which was delivered to me on May 22, 1916, under instruction of the Chief Executive of the de facto Government of Mexico, on the subject of the presence of American troops in Mexican territory, and I would be wanting in candor if I did not, before making answer to the allegations of fact and the conclusions reached by your Government, express the surprise and regret which have been caused this Government by the discourteous tone and temper of this last communication of the de facto Government of Mexico.

"The Government of the United States has viewed with deep concern and increasing disappointment the progress of the revolution in Mexico. Continuous bloodshed and disorders have marked its progress. For three years the Mexican Republic has been torn with civil strife; the lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed; vast properties developed by American capital and enterprise have been destroyed or rendered non-productive; bandits have been permitted to roam at will through the territory contiguous to the United States and to seize, without punishment or without effective attempt at punishment, the property of Americans, while the lives of citizens of the United States who ventured to remain in Mexican territory or to return there to protect their interests have been taken, and in some cases barbarously taken, and the murderers have neither been apprehended nor brought to justice. It would be difficult to find in the annals of the history of Mexico conditions more deplorable than those which have existed there during these recent years of civil war.

"It would be tedious to recount instance after instance, outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity, to illustrate the true nature and extent of the widespread conditions of lawlessness and violence which have prevailed. During the past nine months in particular, the frontier of the United States along the lower Rio Grande has been thrown into a state of constant apprehension and turmoil because of frequent and sudden incursions into American territory and depredations and murders on American soil by Mexican bandits, who have taken the lives and destroyed the property of American citizens, sometimes carrying American citizens across the international boundary with the booty seized. American garrisons have been attacked at night, American soldiers killed and their equipment and horses stolen; American ranches have been raided, property stolen and destroyed, and American trains wrecked and plundered.

"The attacks on Brownsville, Red House Ferry, Progreso Post Office, and Las Peladas, all occurring during September last, are typical. In these attacks on American territory, Carrancista adherents, and even Carrancista soldiers took part in the looting, burning, and killing. Not only were these murders characterized by ruthless brutality, but uncivilized acts of mutilation were perpetrated. Representations were made to Gen. Carranza and he was emphatically requested to stop these reprehensible acts in a section which he has long claimed to be under the complete domination of his authority. Notwithstanding these representations and the promise of Gen. Nafarrete to prevent attacks along the international boundary, in the following month of October a passenger train was wrecked by bandits and several persons killed 7 miles north of Brownsville, and an attack was made upon United States troops at the same place several days later. Since these attacks leaders of the bandits well known both to Mexican civil and military authorities as well as to American officers, have been enjoying with impunity the liberty of the towns of northern Mexico. So far has the indifference of the de facto government to these atrocities gone that some of these leaders, as I am advised, have received not only the protection of that government, but encouragement and aid as well.

"Depredations upon American persons and property within Mexican jurisdiction have been still more numerous. This Government has repeatedly requested in the strongest terms that the de facto government safeguard the lives and homes of American citizens and furnish the protection which international obligation imposes, to American interests in the northern States of Tamaulipas, Nuevo Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua, and Sonora, and also in the States to the south. For example, on January 3 troops were requested to punish the bands of outlaws which looted the Cusi mining property, 80 miles west of Chihuahua, but no effective results came from this request. During the following week the bandit Villa with his band of about 200 men was operating without opposition between Rubio and Santa Ysabel, a fact well known to Carrancista authorities. Meanwhile a party of unfortunate Americans started by train from Chihuahua to visit the Cusi mines, after having received assurances from the Carrancista authorities in the State of Chihuahua that the country was safe, and that a guard on the train was not necessary. The Americans held passports or safe conducts issued by authorities of the de facto government. On January 10 the train was stopped by Villa bandits and 18 of the American party were stripped of their clothing and shot in cold blood, in what is now known as "the Santa Ysabel massacre." Gen. Carranza stated to the agent of the Department of State that he had issued orders for the immediate pursuit, capture, and punishment of those responsible for this atrocious crime, and appealed to this Government and to the American people to consider the difficulties of according protection along the railroad where the massacre occurred.

"Assurances were also given by Mr. Arredondo, presumably under instructions from the de facto government, that the murderers would be brought to justice and that steps would also be taken to remedy the lawless conditions existing in the State of Durango. It is true that Villa, Castro, and Lopez were publicly declared to be outlaws and subject to apprehension and execution, but so far as known only a single man personally connected with this massacre has been brought to justice by Mexican authorities. Within a month after this barbarous slaughter of inoffensive Americans it was notorious that Villa was operating within 20 miles of Cusihuiriachic and publicly stated that his purpose was to destroy American lives and property. Despite repeated and insistent demands that military protection should be furnished to Americans, Villa openly carried on his operations, constantly approaching closer and closer to the border. He was not intercepted, nor were his movements impeded by troops of the de facto government, and no effectual attempt was made to frustrate his hostile designs against Americans. In fact, as I am informed, while Villa and his band were slowly moving toward the American frontier in the neighborhood of Columbus, N. Mex., not a single Mexican soldier was seen in his vicinity. Yet the Mexican authorities were fully cognizant of his movements, for on March 6, as Gen. Gavira publicly announced, he advised the American military authorities of the outlaw's approach to the border, so that they might be prepared to prevent him from crossing the boundary. Villa's unhindered activities culminated in the unprovoked and cold-blooded attack upon American soldiers and citizens in the town of Columbus on the night of March 9, the details of which do not need repetition here in order to refresh your memory with the heinousness of the crime. After murdering, burning, and plundering, Villa and his bandits, fleeing south, passed within sight of the Carranzista military post at Casas Grandes, and no effort was made to stop him by the officers and garrison of the de facto government stationed there.

"In the face of these depredations not only on American lives and property on Mexican soil but on American soldiers, citizens, and homes on American territory, the perpetrators of which Gen. Carranza was unable or possibly considered it inadvisable to apprehend and punish, the United States had no recourse other than to employ force to disperse the bands of Mexican outlaws who were with increasing boldness systematically raiding across the international boundary. The marauders engaged in the attack on Columbus were driven back across the border by American Cavalry, and subsequently, as soon as a sufficient force to cope with the band could be collected, were pursued into Mexico in an effort to capture or destroy them. Without cooperation or assistance in the field on the part of the de facto government, despite repeated requests by the United States, and without apparent recognition on its part of the desirability of putting an end to these systematic raids, or of punishing the chief perpetrators of the crimes committed, because they menaced the good relations of the two countries, American forces pursued the lawless bands as far as Parral, where the pursuit was halted by the hostility of Mexicans, presumed to be loyal to the de facto government, who arrayed themselves on the side of outlawry and became in effect the protectors of Villa and his band.

"In this manner and for these reasons have the American forces entered Mexican territory. Knowing fully the circumstances set forth, the de facto government can not be blind to the necessity which compelled this Government to act, and yet it has seen fit to recite groundless sentiments of hostility toward the expedition and to impute to this Government ulterior motives for the continued presence of American troops on Mexican soil. It is charged that these troops crossed the frontier without first obtaining the consent or permission of the de facto government. Obviously, as immediate action alone could avail, there was no opportunity to reach an agreement (other than that of March 10 to 13, now repudiated by Gen. Carranza) prior to the entrance of such an expedition into Mexico if the expedition was to be effective. Subsequent events and correspondence have demonstrated to the satisfaction of this Government that Gen. Carranza would not have entered into any agreement providing for an effective plan for the capture and destruction of the Villa bands. While the American troops were moving rapidly southward in pursuit of the raiders it was the form and nature of the agreement that occupied the attention of Gen. Carranza rather than the practical object which it was to attain—the number of limitations that could be imposed upon the American forces to impede their progress rather than the obstacles that could be raised to prevent the escape of the outlaws.

"It was Gen. Carranza who suspended, through your note of April 12, all discussions and negotiations for an agreement along the lines of the protocols between the United States and Mexico concluded during the period 1882-1896, under which the two countries had so successfully restored peaceful conditions on their common boundary. It may be mentioned here that, notwithstanding the statement in your note that 'the American Government gave no answer to the note of the 12th of April,' this note was replied to on April 14, when the department instructed Mr. Rodgers by telegraph to deliver this Government's answer to Gen. Carranza. Shortly after this reply the conferences between Gens. Scott, Funston, and Obregon began at El Paso, during which they signed on May 2 a project of a memorandum ad referendum regarding the withdrawal of American troops. As an indication of the alleged bad faith of the American Government, you state that, though Gen. Scott declared in this memorandum that the destruction and dispersion of the Villa band 'had been accomplished,' yet American forces are not withdrawn from Mexico. It is only necessary to read the memorandum, which is in the English language, to ascertain that this is clearly a misstatement, for the memorandum states that 'the American punitive expeditionary forces have destroyed or dispersed many of the lawless elements and bandits * * * or have driven them far into the interior of the Republic of Mexico,' and further, that the United States forces were then 'carrying on a vigorous pursuit of such small numbers of bandits or lawless elements as may have escaped.' The context of your note gives the impression that the object of the expedition being admittedly accomplished, the United States had agreed in the memorandum to begin the withdrawal of its troops. The memorandum shows, however, that it was not alone on account of partial dispersion of the bandits that it was decided to begin the withdrawal of American forces, but equally on account of the assurances of the Mexican Government that their forces were 'at the present time being augmented and strengthened to such an extent that they will be able to prevent any disorders occurring in Mexico that would in any way endanger American territory,' and that they would 'continue to diligently pursue, capture, or destroy any lawless bands of bandits that may still exist or hereafter exist in the northern part of Mexico,' and that it would 'make a proper distribution of such of its forces as may be necessary to prevent the possibility of invasion of American territory from Mexico.' It was because of these assurances and because of Gen. Scott's confidence that they would be carried out that he stated in the memorandum that the American forces would be 'gradually withdrawn.' It is to be noted that while the American Government was willing to ratify this agreement, Gen. Carranza refused to do so, as Gen. Obregon stated, because, among other things, it imposed improper conditions upon the Mexican Government.

"Notwithstanding the assurances in the memorandum, it is well known that the forces of the de facto government have not carried on a vigorous pursuit of the remaining bandits, and that no proper distribution of forces to prevent the invasion of American territory has been made, as will be shown by the further facts hereinafter set forth. I am reluctant to be forced to the conclusion which might be drawn from these circumstances that the de facto government, in spite of the crimes committed and the sinister designs of Villa and his followers, did not and does not now intend or desire that these outlaws should be captured, destroyed, or dispersed by American troops or, at the request of this Government, by Mexican troops.

"While the conferences at El Paso were in progress, and after the American conferees had been assured on May 2 that the Mexican forces in the northern part of the Republic were then being augmented so as to be able to prevent any disorders that would endanger American territory, a band of Mexicans, on the night of May 5, made an attack at Glenn Springs, Tex., about 20 miles north of the border, killing American soldiers and civilians, burning and sacking property, and carrying off two Americans as prisoners. Subsequent to this event, the Mexican Government, as you state 'gave instructions to Gen. Obregon to notify that of the United States that it would not permit the further passage of American troops into Mexico on this account, and that orders had been given to all military commanders along the frontier not to consent to same.' This Government is, of course, not in a position to dispute the statement that these instructions had been given to Gen. Obregon, but it can decisively assert that Gen. Obregon never gave any such notification to Gen. Scott or Gen. Funston or, so far as known, to any other American official. Gen. Obregon did, however, inquire as to whether American troops had entered Mexico in pursuit of the Glenn Springs raiders, and Gen. Funston stated that no orders had been issued to American troops to cross the frontier on account of the raid, but this statement was made before any such orders had been issued, and not afterwards, as the erroneous account of the interview given in your note would appear to indicate. Moreover, no statement was made by the American generals that 'no more American troops would cross into our territory.' On the contrary, it was pointed out to Gen. Obregon and to Mr. Juan Amador, who was present at the conference and pointed out with emphasis, that the bandits de la Rosa and Pedro Vio, who had been instrumental in causing the invasion of Texas above Brownsville, were even then reported to be arranging, in the neighborhood of Victoria, for another raid across the border, and it was made clear to Gen. Obregon that if the Mexican Government did not take immediate steps to prevent another invasion of the United States by these marauders, who were frequently seen in the company of Gen. Nafarrete, the constitutionalist commander, Mexico would find in Tamaulipas another punitive expedition similar to that then in Chihuahua. American troops crossed into Mexico on May 10, upon notification to the local military authorities, under the repudiated agreement of March 10-13, or, in any event, in accordance with the practice adopted over 40 years ago, when there was no agreement regarding pursuit of marauders across the international boundary. These troops penetrated 168 miles into Mexican territory in pursuit of the Glenn Springs marauders without encountering a detachment of Mexican troops or a single Mexican soldier. Further discussion of this raid, however, is not necessary, because the American forces sent in pursuit of the bandits recrossed into Texas on the morning of May 22, the date of your note under consideration—a further proof of the singleness of purpose of this Government in endeavoring to quell disorder and stamp out lawlessness along the border.

"During the continuance of the El Paso conferences Gen. Scott, you assert, did not take into consideration the plan proposed by the Mexican Government for the protection of the frontier by the reciprocal distribution of troops along the boundary. This proposition was made by Gen. Obregon a number of times, but each time conditioned upon the immediate withdrawal of American troops, and the Mexican conferees were invariably informed that immediate withdrawal could not take place, and that therefore it was impossible to discuss the project on that basis.

"I have noted the fact that your communication is not limited to a discussion of the deplorable conditions existing along the border and their important bearing on the peaceful relations of our Governments, but that an effort is made to connect it with other circumstances in order to support, if possible, a mistaken interpretation of the attitude of the Government of the United States toward Mexico. You state in effect that the American Government has placed every obstacle in the way of attaining the pacification of Mexico, and that this is shown by the volume of diplomatic representations in behalf of American interests which constantly impede efforts to reorganize the political, economical, and social conditions of the country; by the decided aid lent at one time to Villa by American officers and by the Department of State; by the aid extended by the American Catholic clergy to that of Mexico; by the constant activity of the American press in favor of intervention and the interests of American business men; by the shelter and supply of rebels and conspirators on American territory; by the detention of shipments of arms and munitions purchased by the Mexican Government; and by the detention of machinery intended for their manufacture.

"In reply to this sweeping charge I can truthfully affirm that the American Government has given every possible encouragement to the de facto government in the pacification and rehabilitation of Mexico. From the moment of its recognition it has had the undivided support of this Government. An embargo was placed upon arms and ammunition going into Chihuahua, Sonora, and Lower California in order to prevent their falling into the hands of the armed opponents of the de facto government. Permission has been granted from time to time as requested for Mexican troops and equipment to traverse American territory from one point to another in Mexico in order that the operations of Mexican troops against Villa and his forces might be facilitated. In view of these friendly acts I am surprised that the de facto government has construed diplomatic representations in regard to the unjust treatment accorded American interests, private assistance to opponents to the de facto government by sympathizers in a foreign country, and the activity of a foreign press as interference by the United States Government in the domestic politics of Mexico.

"If a denial is needed that this Government has had ulterior and improper motives in its diplomatic representations, or has countenanced the activities of American sympathizers and the American press opposed to the de facto government, I am glad most emphatically to deny it. It is, however, a matter of common knowledge that the Mexican press has been more active than the press in the United States in endeavoring to inflame the two peoples against each other and to force the two countries into hostilities. With the power of censorship of the Mexican press, so rigorously exercised by the de facto government, the responsibility for this activity can not, it would seem, be avoided by that government, and the issue of the appeal of Gen. Carranza himself in the press of March 12, calling upon the Mexican people to be prepared for any emergency which might arise and intimating that war with the United States was imminent, evidences the attitude of the de facto government toward these publications. It should not be a matter of surprise that after such manifestations of hostile feeling the United States was doubtful of the purpose for which the large amount of ammunition was to be used which the de facto government appeared eager to import from this country. Moreover, the policy of the de facto government in refusing to cooperate and in failing to act independently in destroying the Villa bandits and in otherwise suppressing outlawry in the vicinity of the border so as to remove the danger of war materials while passing southward through this zone falling into the hands of the enemies of law and order is, in the opinion of this Government, a sufficient ground, even if there were no other, for the refusal to allow such materials to cross the boundary into the bandit-infested region. To have permitted these shipments without careful scrutiny would, in the circumstances, have been to manifest a sense of security which would have been unjustified.

"Candor compels me to add that the unconcealed hostility of the subordinate military commanders of the de facto government toward the American troops engaged in pursuing the Villa bands and the efforts of the de facto government to compel their withdrawal from Mexican territory by threats and show of military force instead of by aiding in the capture of the outlaws constitute a menace to the safety of the American troops and to the peace of the border. As long as this menace continues and there is any evidence of an intention on the part of the de facto government or its military commanders to use force against the American troops instead of cooperating with them the Government of the United States will not permit munitions of war or machinery for their manufacture to be exported from this country to Mexico.

"As to the shelter and supply of rebels and conspirators on American territory, I can state that vigorous efforts have been and are being made by the agents of the United States to apprehend and bring to justice all persons found to be conspiring to violate the laws of the United States by organizing to oppose with arms the de facto government of Mexico. Political refugees have undoubtedly sought asylum in the United States, but this Government has vigilantly kept them under surveillance and has not hesitated to apprehend them upon proof of their criminal intentions, as the arrest of Gen. Huerta and others fully attests.

"Having corrected the erroneous statements of fact to which I have adverted, the real situation stands forth in its true light. It is admitted that American troops have crossed the international boundary in hot pursuit of the Columbus raiders and without notice to or the consent of your government, but the several protestations on the part of this Government by the President, by this department, and by other American authorities that the object of the expedition was to capture, destroy, or completely disperse the Villa bands of outlaws, or to turn this duty over to the Mexican authorities when assured that it would be effectively fulfilled, have been carried out in perfect good faith by the United States. Its efforts, however, have been obstructed at every point; first, by insistence on a palpably useless agreement which you admit was either not to apply to the present expedition or was to contain impracticable restrictions on its organization and operation; then by actual opposition, encouraged and fostered by the de facto government, to the further advance of the expedition into Villa territory, which was followed by the sudden suspension of all negotiations for an arrangement for the pursuit of Villa and his followers and the protection of the frontier; and finally by a demand for the immediate withdrawal of the American troops. Meantime conditions of anarchy in the border States of Mexico were continually growing worse. Incursions into American territory were plotted and perpetrated; the Glenn Springs raid was successfully executed, while no effective efforts were being made by Gen. Carranza to improve the conditions and to protect American territory from constant threat of invasion. In view of this increasing menace, of the inactivity of the Carranza forces, of the lack of cooperation in the apprehension of the Villa bands, and of the known encouragement and aid given to bandit leaders, it is unreasonable to expect the United States to withdraw its forces from Mexican territory or to prevent their entry again when their presence is the only check upon further bandit outrages and the only efficient means of protecting American lives and homes—safeguards which Gen. Carranza, though internationally obligated to supply, is manifestly unable or unwilling to give.

"In view of the actual state of affairs as I have outlined it above, I am now in a position to consider the conclusions which you have drawn in your note under acknowledgment from the erroneous statements of fact which you have set forth.

"Your Government intimates, if it does not openly charge, that the attitude of the United States is one of insincerity, distrust, and suspicion toward the de facto Government of Mexico, and that the intention of the United States in sending its troops into Mexico is to extend its sovereignty over Mexican territory, and not merely for the purpose of pursuing marauders and preventing future raids across the border. The de facto Government charges by implication which admits of but one interpretation, that this Government has as its object territorial aggrandizement even at the expense of a war of aggression against a neighbor weakened by years of civil strife. The Government of the United States, if it had had designs upon the territory of Mexico, would have had no difficulty in finding during this period of revolution and disorder many plausible arguments for intervention in Mexican affairs. Hoping, however, that the people of Mexico would through their own efforts restore peace and establish an orderly government, the United States has awaited with patience the consummation of the revolution.

"When the superiority of the revolutionary faction led by Gen. Carranza became undoubted, the United States, after conferring with six others of the American Republics, recognized unconditionally the present de facto Government. It hoped and expected that that Government would speedily restore order and provide the Mexican people and others, who had given their energy and substance to the development of the great resources of the Republic, opportunity to rebuild in peace and security their shattered fortunes.

"This Government has waited month after month for the consummation of its hope and expectation. In spite of increasing discouragements, in spite of repeated provocations to exercise force in the restoration of order in the northern regions of Mexico, where American interests have suffered most seriously from lawlessness, the Government of the United States has refrained from aggressive action and sought by appeals and moderate though explicit demands to impress upon the de facto Government the seriousness of the situation and to arouse it to its duty to perform its international obligations toward citizens of the United States who had entered the territory of Mexico or had vested interests within its boundaries.

"In the face of constantly renewed evidences of the patience and restraint of this Government in circumstances which only a Government imbued with unselfishness and a sincere desire to respect to the full the sovereign rights and national dignity of the Mexican people would have endured, doubts and suspicions as to the motives of the Government of the United States are expressed in your communication of May 22, for which I can imagine no purpose but to impugn the good faith of this Government for I find it hard to believe that such imputations are not universally known to be without the least shadow of justification in fact.

"Can the de facto government doubt that, if the United States had turned covetous eyes on Mexican territory, it could have found many pretexts in the past for the gratification of its desire? Can that government doubt that months ago, when the war between the revolutionary factions was in progress, much better opportunity than the present was afforded for American intervention, if such has been the purpose of the United States as the de facto government now insinuates? What motive could this Government have had in refraining from taking advantage of such opportunities other than unselfish friendship for the Mexican Republic? I have, of course, given consideration to your argument that the responsibility for the present situation rests largely upon this Government. In the first place, you state that even the American forces along the border whose attention is undivided by other military operations, 'Find themselves physically unable to protect effectively the frontier on the American side.' Obviously, if there is no means of reaching bands roving on Mexican territory and making sudden dashes at night into American territory it is impossible to prevent such invasions unless the frontier is protected by a cordon of troops. No government could be expected to maintain a force of this strength along the boundary of a nation with which it is at peace for the purpose of resisting the onslaughts of a few bands of lawless men, especially when the neighboring State makes no effort to prevent these attacks. The most effective method of preventing raids of this nature, as past experience has fully demonstrated, is to visit punishment or destruction on the raiders. It is precisely this plan which the United States desires to follow along the border without any intention of infringing upon the sovereign rights of her neighbor, but which, although obviously advantageous to the de facto government, it refuses to allow or even countenance. It is in fact protection to American lives and property about which the United States is solicitous and not the methods or ways in which that protection shall be accomplished. If the Mexican Government is unwilling or unable to give this protection by preventing its territory from being the rendezvous and refuge of murderers and plunderers, that does not relieve this Government from its duty to take all the steps necessary to safeguard American citizens on American soil. The United States Government can not and will not allow bands of lawless men to establish themselves upon its borders with liberty to invade and plunder American territory with impunity and, when pursued, to seek safety across the Rio Grande, relying upon the plea of their Government that the integrity of the soil of the Mexican Republic must not be violated.

"The Mexican Government further protests that it has 'made every effort on its part to protect the frontier,' and that it is doing 'all possible to avoid a recurrence of such acts.' Attention is again invited to the well-known and unrestricted activity of de la Rosa, Ancieto Piscano, Pedro Vinos, and others in connection with border raids, and to the fact that, as I am advised, up to June 4 de la Rosa was still collecting troops at Monterey for the openly avowed purpose of making attacks on Texan border towns, and that Pedro Vino was recruiting at other places for the same avowed purpose. I have already pointed out the uninterrupted progress of Villa to and from Columbus, and the fact that the American forces in pursuit of the Glenn Springs marauders penetrated 168 miles into Mexican territory without encountering a single Carranzista soldier. This does not indicate that the Mexican Government is doing 'all possible' to avoid further raids; and if it is doing 'all possible,' this is not sufficient to prevent border raids, and there is every reason, therefore, why this Government must take such preventive measures as it deems sufficient.

"It is suggested that injuries suffered on account of bandit raids are a matter of 'pecuniary reparation,' but 'never the cause for American forces to invade Mexican soil.' The precedents which have been established and maintained by the Government of the Mexican Republic for the last half century do not bear out this statement. It has grown to be almost a custom not to settle depredation of bandits by payments of money alone, but to quell such disorders and to prevent such crimes by swift and sure punishment.

"The de facto government finally argues that 'if the frontier were duly protected from incursions from Mexico there would be no reason for the existing difficulty'; thus the de facto government attempts to absolve itself from the first duty of any Government, namely, the protection of life and property.

"This is the paramount obligation for which governments are instituted, and governments neglecting or failing to perform it are not worthy of the name. This is the duty for which Gen. Carranza, it must be assumed, initiated his revolution in Mexico and organized the present Government, and for which the United States Government recognized his government as the de facto government of Mexico. Protection of American lives and property, then, in the United States is first the obligation of this Government, and in Mexico is, first, the obligation of Mexico, and, second, the obligation of the United States. In securing this protection along the common boundary the United States has a right to expect the cooperation of its neighboring Republic; and yet, instead of taking steps to check or punish the raiders, the de facto government demurs and objects to measures taken by the United States.

"The Government of the United States does not wish to believe that the de facto government approves these marauding attacks, yet as they continue to be made, they show that the Mexican Government is unable to repress them. This inability, as this Government has had occasion in the past to say may excuse the failure to check the outrages complained of, but it only makes stronger the duty of the United States to prevent them, for if the Government of Mexico can not protect the lives and property of Americans, exposed to attack from Mexicans, the Government of the United States is in duty bound, so far as it can, to do so.

"In conclusion, the Mexican Government invites the United States to support its 'assurances of friendship with real and effective acts' which 'can be no other than the immediate withdrawal of the American troops.' For the reasons I have herein fully set forth, this request of the de facto government can not now be entertained. The United States has not sought the duty which has been forced upon it of pursuing bandits who under fundamental principles of municipal and international law ought to be pursued and arrested and punished by Mexican authorities. Whenever Mexico will assume and effectively exercise that responsibility the United States, as it has many times before publicly declared, will be glad to have this obligation fulfilled by the de facto government of Mexico. If, on the contrary, the de facto government is pleased to ignore this obligation and to believe that 'in case of a refusal to retire these troops there is no further recourse than to defend its territory by an appeal to arms,' the Government of the United States would surely be lacking in sincerity and friendship if it did not frankly impress upon the de facto government that the execution of this threat will lead to the gravest consequences. While this Government would deeply regret such a result, it can not recede from its settled determination to maintain its national rights and to perform its full duty in preventing further invasions of the territory of the United States and in removing the peril which Americans along the international boundary have borne so long with patience and forbearance.

"Accept, etc.,

"ROBERT LANSING.

"JUNE 20, 1916"

Mr. LIPPITT. I also ask to have printed Carranza's note of July 5, 1916, to which I have referred, and the American reply of July 8, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Star, July 5, 1916.]

CARRANZA'S ANSWER DELIVERED BY ENVOY TO SECRETARY TO-DAY—DESIRE TO REACH FRIENDLY ADJUSTMENT OF DIFFICULTIES MAIN POINT MADE IN COMMUNICATION.

The reply of the de facto Government of Mexico to the demands of the United States, conciliatory in terms and giving assurances of a desire to reach a friendly adjustment of the difficulty between the two countries, was delivered to the State Department to-day by a Mexican embassy attaché.

The text of the note, as transmitted by Eliseo Arredondo, the Mexican ambassador designate, follows:

"Mr. SECRETARY: I have the honor to transmit in continuation the text of a note I have just received from my Government, with instructions to present it to your excellency:

"Mr. SECRETARY: Referring to the notes of June 20 and 25 last, I have the honor to say to your excellency that the immediate release of the Carrizal prisoners was a further proof of the sincerity of the desires of this Government to reach a pacific and satisfactory arrangement of present difficulties. This Government is anxious to solve the present conflict, and it would be unjust if its attitude were misinterpreted.

"POINTS AT ISSUE ARE SET FORTH.

"It was also the Mexican Government that earnestly suggested a plan for cantonments along the boundary line during the conferences of Ciudad Juarez and El Paso. This Government is disposed now, as it has always been, to seek an immediate solution of the two points which constitute the true causes of the conflict between the two countries, to wit: The American Government believes reasonably that the insecurity of its frontier is a source of difficulty and the Mexican Government on its part believes that the stay of American troops on Mexican territory, aside from being a trespass on the sovereignty of Mexico, is the immediate cause of the conflicts. Therefore the withdrawal of American troops, on one hand, and the protection of the frontier, on the other, are the two essential problems, the solution of which must be the directing object of the efforts of both Governments.

"The Mexican Government is willing to consider in a quick and practical way, and prompted by a spirit of concord, the remedies which should be applied to the present situation.

"IS WILLING TO NEGOTIATE.

"Several Latin-American countries have offered their friendly mediation to the Mexican Government, and the latter has accepted it in principle. Therefore, the Mexican Government only awaits information that the Government of the United States would be disposed to accept this mediation for the purpose mentioned above or whether it is still of the belief that the same results may be attained by means of direct negotiations between both Governments.

"In the meantime this Government proposes to employ all efforts that may be at its disposal to avoid the recurrence of new incidents which may complicate and aggravate the situation. At the same time it hopes that the American Government on its part may make use of all efforts to prevent new acts of its military and civil authorities of the frontier that might cause new complications.

"I avail myself of this opportunity to reiterate to your excellency the assurance of my most distinguished consideration.

"C. AGUILAR."

"Having thus complied with higher instructions of my Government, it affords me pleasure to reiterate to your excellency the assurance of my highest consideration.

"E. ARREDONDO."

[From the Washington Post, July 8, 1916.]

"UNITED STATES NOTE TO CARRANZA ACCEPTING PROPOSAL TO ADJUST DIFFERENCES.

"The text of the note of the United States Government replying to the message of Gen. Carranza, proposing the settlement of the differences between the Washington Government and Mexico by direct negotiation, delivered yesterday to Ambassador Designate Arredondo, follows:

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of July 4, 1916, in which you transcribe a note addressed to me by the secretary of foreign relations of your Government, and to request that you will transmit to him the following reply:

"Mr. SECRETARY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your courteous note, transmitted to me by Señor Arredondo on the 4th instant, in which you refer to my notes of June 20 and June 25, and to assure you of the sincere gratification of my Government at the frank statement of the difficulties which have unfortunately arisen in our relations along the international boundary, and the unreserved expression of the desire of your Government to reach an adjustment of the difficulties on a broad and amicable basis. The same spirit of friendship and of solicitude for the continuance of cordial relations between our two countries inspires my Government, which equally desires an immediate solution of the matters of difference which have long vexed both Governments.

"It is especially pleasing to my Government that the de facto Government of Mexico is disposed to give quick as well as practical consideration in a spirit of concord to the remedies which may be applied to the existing condition. Reciprocating the same desire, the Government of the United States is prepared immediately to exchange views as to a practical plan to remove finally and prevent a recurrence of the difficulties which have been the source of the controversy.

"Accept, Mr. Secretary, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration. I am, sir,

"Yours, very sincerely,

"ROBERT LANSING."

Mr. LIPPITT. I ask that the matter which I have had inserted in the RECORD may be printed in the usual RECORD type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me for a question?

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the Senator a question before he yields the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will be glad to reply to it if I can.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has criticized very extensively the policy of the present administration in Mexican affairs. My question is whether in the event the Republican Party is successful at the coming election it would be the purpose of the Hughes administration to declare war on Mexico or to intervene in its affairs?

Mr. LIPPITT. The question of the Senator from Colorado it is manifestly impossible for me to answer.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's opinion would perhaps be interesting.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will tell the Senator what my opinion is about the Mexican affairs. When a man is sick, and his doctor prescribes various remedies to him, all of which leave him in a worse condition than he was before, I imagine he would usually send for another doctor. My opinion about Mexican affairs is that the friends of the American people ought to send for another doctor to manage the situation.

Mr. THOMAS. Then the remedy is simply a matter of change of physicians.

Mr. STONE. Is the Military Academy appropriation bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and is being read for action on the amendments of the committee.

Mr. STONE. I desire to take the floor, and I may as well take it at one time as another.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I heard only a part of the speech delivered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I have no intention of attempting a reply to it. In fact I did not hear enough of it, being absent from the Chamber, to undertake to reply to it, but I did hear enough to show the character of the address. I take it to have been a mere criticism of the President and the State Department with respect to their conduct of our diplomatic affairs with Mexico. The general trend of the Senator's observations was to the effect that the President has been weak and vacillating, and the expression that the President has been "weak and vacillating" furnishes the pretext, if one be necessary, for doing what I am about to do—that is to read a short editorial from the Detroit News. The editorial covers the point made by the Senator. I do not often read editorials or other newspaper articles in the Senate, but this editorial so clearly expresses what I would like to say myself, and expresses it so much better than I could myself express it, that I adopt it.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator give the date?

Mr. STONE. I have just looked for the date, but through some inadvertence I have failed to preserve it. However, I can say it was printed in the early part of June of the present year. It is entitled "Wilson's weakness," and is as follows:

"WILSON'S 'WEAKNESS.'"

"It may not much matter who administers the next presidential period of the United States. But it does matter that fairness and balance of national thought characterize this presidential campaign above all others. And there are many gratifying signs that the Nation is disposed to judge calmly and with scrupulous justice between the claims of the two candidates and parties on the issues to be determined—especially the issues which concern our procedure in home and foreign matters as they touch the war.

"It appears from preliminary statements that the main Republican contention in the campaign is to be the alleged 'vacillating weakness' of President Wilson. It equally appears from the Democratic preliminaries that their contention will rest upon the alleged wisdom and strength displayed by the President.

"The difficulty in proving President Wilson to have been 'weak' is a very real one, since the alleged 'weakness' has not involved the Nation in actual difficulty. It would have been possible for Mr. Wilson to have asked Congress to declare war on Mexico or to have created such a state of affairs as to have compelled Congress to declare war—the day after he came into office. And that war would have been going on now, with possible complications arising in Mexico's behalf from European and South American nations. A war with Mexico would have thrown our Monroe doctrine into the world ring to be fought over, and the end of it no man could foresee. Of course, Mr. Wilson did not do that. This is part of the 'weakness' charged against him.

"Again, Mr. Wilson could have declared war on Germany the day after the Lusitania sunk. He would have had strong support from an angered country and an aroused Congress. For days the Nation was a dangerous mass of tinder, waiting only the igniting spark. The President knew that such heats of anger suddenly cool when the actual pressure of war begins to be felt, and that the people who cried loudest for war would be the very first to turn and rend the excitable President who gave them what they asked in a moment of irresponsibility. So the thought of war was not even countenanced by the administration. And that is another item in the alleged 'weakness' of the President.

"Every course must be judged by its results. Another course than that which the President pursued in every question he has had to handle would have meant war. President Wilson never had any other choice to make—it was always simply peace or war. He always chose peace; and for that he has been called a vacillating weakling.

"It is one of the strangest psychological exhibitions this country has ever offered to the analytical mind. Here is a Nation spared the unnamable horrors of modern war, and yet a part of it professes to be dissatisfied, and a whole political party asserts that it is right to be dissatisfied. Would Germany, surveying her loss of 700,000 young men killed and 1,300,000 men crippled for life—would Germany to-day be calling 'weakness' if, by the exercise of diplomacy and by 'the writing of notes,' the Kaiser had been able to stave off the war? Would France have called it 'weakness' in President Poincaré if he had been able to preserve France whole in the midst of world cataclysm? No; these men would have been hailed as being stronger than war itself! Well, in the same way, our own President has been stronger than war itself. He was strong enough to thwart the tricks of other nations to lure us into this war. He was strong enough to thwart the war party at home that tried its best to goad us into this war. If that is 'weakness,' to what shall we give the name of strength?

"A great deal of fun has been had over 'note writing,' although we used in other days to be fond of quoting, 'The pen is mightier than the sword.' But President Wilson had just two tools he could use—his pen with his brain behind it or your life. That is all he had. He could send notes or he could send human lives. He had to use either the tools of diplomacy or he had to use American fathers and brothers and sons, of whom you would likely have been one. Now, aside from partisan preferences, which would you prefer a President to risk first: his pen or your life? President Wilson tried his pen first. If the pen had failed through any weakness in its handling, he would have had to fall back upon the bodies of American men, offered as sacrifices on the altar of battle. But the notes did not fail, because they were not weak notes, and they were not written by a weak man. He succeeded. Again, if that is 'weakness,' where shall we look for strength?

"This is not a campaign editorial. Its object is not to make or hold a single vote for Wilson. The News believes that whichever candidate is elected the policies that have ruled until now are going to be continued, because they have proved themselves the wisest and safest policies. (The wise policy is always the safest.) The object of this writing is only to secure a fair state of mind in which to estimate the service that Woodrow Wilson has performed for the United States.

"In the circus one sometimes sees an athlete hold up 10 men. One man mounts his shoulders, another follows; he holds four men on his arms, two more brace themselves against his hips, two cling to his back and neck. And then the athlete begins to walk with them. He sways and strains. He chooses his footing with painful care. His limbs look as if they might collapse beneath him. But does anyone call that weakness? No; for they do not look at the swaying but at the tremendous burden borne.

"Likewise, in the more trying days of the past President Wilson may have seemed to sway under his burden, to walk with painful carefulness, to choose his footing with what seemed hesitation. Was it weakness? No; for look at the burden he was bearing. Strength is measured by what it does, by what it carries. By these tests, President Wilson was and is a strong man.

"Mr. Hughes may be just as strong. He may be even stronger. But that is not a good reason for miscalling President Wilson. Let the country be at least fair to the man who sent notes in order that he might not have to send men."

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which has been stated.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to perfect that amendment just a little. In lines 19 and 20, on page 2, I move to strike out the words "within 30 days after such application shall have been made," and to begin the next word, being the article "the," with a capital letter, so that the sentence will read, "The examination demanded shall be held." Then, I move to insert the words "at the next semiannual examination." The amendment then reads: "And if the cadet, being otherwise qualified, shall pass the same by compliance with the requirements existing at the time of the first examination, he shall be." I then move to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and to insert the words "readmitted to the academy."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon whether this amendment is recommended by the department?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; the amendment originated with the committee itself. There are a great many young men who seek to be reexamined, whose requests are denied. Sometimes the board discriminates between young men who fail; some are allowed to stand the examination over again and others are denied that privilege. It seemed to some members of the committee that there ought to be no discrimination in that respect; that they all ought to be placed on the same footing with reference to reexamination.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator that in the past upon one or two occasions I have been asked to intercede in behalf of cadets who had failed in two subjects, but whose marks had been only slightly below the required standard for passing. I was told on both occasions when I appealed to the officials that it was not advisable that cadets failing in two subjects should be allowed to take a further examination, and they gave as a reason—and it seemed to me a logical one; at any rate, I agree with it—that if a cadet understood that he could have a second examination in case of failure in two subjects there would be much more laxity on the part of the cadet in his studies than there would if he understood that there was to be no second examination. The officers of the department with whom I consulted seemed to think that if there were a second examination it would have a tendency to slacken the efforts of the cadets—of course, with some exceptions. There would not be the incentive to study from the day they enter the academy until the day they are graduated; and I thought, perhaps, Mr. President, the position was well taken. If it be well taken, I am inclined to think that it would be better for the academy to lose a few cadets who fail in two subjects than to grant the privilege of a second examination, with at least the danger of affecting a great number of cadets who enter the academy.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, would not that consume time also? For instance, if a cadet appointed by me should fail and knows he can take another examination, the interim between the time of his failure and the time when he takes the examination is entirely lost, so far as the appointment of another cadet is concerned; and he might fail also on the second examination.

Mr. SMOOT. The time would be entirely lost not only to the cadet himself but also to the Government of the United States, because no other cadet can be appointed in his place until after he has had his second examination.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the amendment which I have just suggested in order to perfect the original amendment is offered at the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who is a graduate of the academy, and while he does not entirely approve of the proposition, I understand he is willing to accept the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the amendment which the Senator has just offered improves the committee amendment, and I am not objecting to that at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Let me say to the Senator, in answer to his suggestion, that I suppose he does not hear as much in regard to this matter as I do. There are many young men who fail in one subject, and not a great many, but some, who fail in two subjects, and frequently it happens—I have a case in mind now—where during part of the year a cadet has been detained in the hospital for some reason or other beyond his control and his studies are interfered with to that extent. Yet when he makes application for reexamination he is not allowed the privilege, while it is allowed to others, to stand another examination.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I was about to refer to the question of sickness. I remember that that subject was referred to by the officer of the department who discussed the subject with me, and, if I recall aright, he said that wherever there was a cadet who was sick long enough to interfere with his passing the required examination, if he was up in his studies at the time he was taken sick, he would be allowed to continue his studies in the academy.

Mr. DU PONT. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Delaware says that is correct. I can see that, if it were not correct, there would be a great injustice done to many of the cadets, because there must be, of course, many young men out of the great number attending the academy who fall sick at times, but that being correct, then it does seem to me that, if by law we say to all of the cadets at the academy, "If you do not pass the examination and if you fail only in two subjects, you shall have another examination," we will interfere with the efficiency of the school itself. I rather think it will not only be a detriment to the cadet himself but will prove a loss to the United States if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I have only had an opportunity to examine very hurriedly the proposed amendment. I had not observed when I spoke to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in regard to the matter that the amendment provided that a cadet might have a reexamination who had failed in two studies. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to change the amendment so that it will read "in any one subject of instruction," for the reason that in the course of instruction of some of the classes there are really only three capital studies, and if a man fails in two it is evidently an indication either of pronounced mental deficiency or of a great deal of indolence. I think with that modification the amendment will not be very objectionable, although I do not approve of it. In certain cases there may be a young man who has great difficulty, for instance, in spelling, and fails in his English course or in some other particular study, although he may possibly be excellent in all other branches. It might be advisable, therefore, to give him a chance to retrieve himself if he fails in one subject.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will accept the amendment suggested by the Senator.

Mr. DU PONT. Now, Mr. President, a question was raised by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] a few moments ago as to whether appointments would not be affected by this provision. That thought had not occurred to me; but I think it is important that we should consider it before we go any further. John Smith, for instance, is found deficient next January at the examination and appeals to the academy board for reexamination. That reexamination will be held during the following June. In the meantime the Senator or Representative who is to make another appointment can not act until after June. That is going to deplete the number of cadets in the Military Academy.

Another thing I observe in examining the amendment is that there is no limit to the number of times an individual has a right to reexamination. I take it that it should be amended so as to provide that he shall have one opportunity, and only one.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, also, why a year should be given?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is too long.

Mr. GALLINGER. The language is—he shall have the right to apply for a second examination regarding such subjects by making written application therefor to the academic board within one year after being officially notified of such failure.

I should think he ought to make it immediately.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to shortening the time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think three months would be better.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be plenty.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There are a few I know of who failed in this last examination. Would it be time enough to let them in?

Mr. DU PONT. Why, yes. Under this provision they would be examined next January.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. So that it covers those who may have failed this time, I have no objection to shortening the time. Six months would be better.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in sympathy with the amendment. I have one case in mind, a young man from my own city, who made a very brilliant career in the academy, but who on the final examination failed by a mere scratch, as we would say, of getting through. He was thrown out. Through my intercession he was allowed another examination, and passed, and is now on a ship doing most excellent work. He was a very remarkable scholar.

I think they usually fail, or more ordinarily, in mathematics than anything else. To pass the examinations in the Military Academy, as I was once told by Prof. Bass, who was a famous mathematician in the academy, a man ought to be something more than a good mathematician; he ought to have the mathematical instinct to get through. These boys sometimes fail by a very small percentage to make their examinations good, and they ought to have another chance. There is no doubt about it in the world, and I think we ought to make that provision in the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think so, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I should think six months would be abundant time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am willing to amend it, if the Senator will suggest that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I suggest that "one year" be stricken out and "six months" inserted.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the Senate must face this question: Does it propose to hold up the appointments in all those districts where men have failed for six months or not? That is the question. If it does, it will inevitably diminish the number of admissions to the Military Academy. Or will you make these supernumerary men? It is a very serious objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I went through college in my younger days, and I know that this question of marking is like chasing moonshine. Here are the papers of two young men, presented to the same professor, or possibly to different professors. Some of the shades of difference are so very slight that it is a physical impossibility for a man to be exactly accurate. One of these young men is turned down and the other is advanced. These young men who fail have no appeal. I tried, at one time, to have a clause inserted in an appropriation bill allowing a young man to appeal from the academic board to the Secretary of War, but the members of my committee did not approve of it and it was not put in. So the only power that the Secretary of War has over the academic board is simply to approve or disapprove the finding. It is rather a supervisory control, and I can not help but think that they sometimes exercise an arbitrary power up there that ought to be reached in some way.

Take this last examination as an illustration: Quite a number of young men failed. They allowed some of those young men to take another examination, and others were turned down. Now, why?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I had the list of all the failures, showing the percentages in every subject. The examination board finally agreed that if any cadet fell below 2.35 per cent in a subject he could not take a reexamination. I know that there were a number of them that reached 2.32 per cent, but the examiners said that they had to make an arbitrary rate somewhere. The regular rate is 2.60 per cent, and in order to take in many of them that failed under the new system of examination they did cut that down to 2.35 per cent. That was the arbitrary percentage agreed upon by the board, and all that fell under the 2.35 per cent were denied a reexamination.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I could refer the Senator to a hearing had before the Military Affairs Committee a short while ago on two young men who failed in New Jersey. They gave members of that class an opportunity to be reexamined, but they turned down these two young men. They did not pretend that they were not just as much entitled to it as some of the others on the ground of their proficiency, but they put it on the fact that they lacked military appearance, or military bearing, or something of that kind, which was wholly unjust. It is to meet that class of cases that we suggested this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. If this amendment becomes a law, does the Senator understand that it will apply to those who are already denied reexamination?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Within the time limited by the act, of course.

Mr. DU PONT. It can not be retroactive.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it can not be retroactive. Certainly after it becomes a law this can not be retroactive in its nature. It will apply only to cadets that fall hereafter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wanted it to apply to those who failed at this last examination.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe it is worded so that it will apply to them. If it passes the way it is it will apply only to the cadets that fall hereafter and will not take in the cadets that have already been denied a reexamination.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Utah is right in that contention.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wanted it to cover those who failed at this last examination.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the Senator to let the amendment go over for the present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. We will see if we can not agree upon an amendment that will cover just what the Senator wants; but this certainly does not.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like the amendment as perfected up to this time read, so that we can see the basis of our action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oregon has proposed the following changes:

On lines 19 and 20, to strike out the words "Within 30 days after such application shall have been made," and to begin the following word—the word "the"—with a capital letter, at the beginning of the sentence; after the word "held," on line 21, to insert the words "at the next semiannual examination"; and, on line 23, after the words "shall be," to strike out the remainder of the amendment and insert the words "readmitted to the Academy." The Senator from Delaware has suggested, on line 15, to strike out the words "not more than two subjects" and to insert the words "any one subject."

Mr. DU PONT. "In any one subject."

The SECRETARY. The word "in" is already in the bill; and on line 17 he has proposed to strike out the word "subjects" and to insert the word "subject." The Senator from New Hampshire has suggested, on line 18, to strike out the words "one year" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "six months," so that if amended it would read:

Provided, That whenever a cadet shall fail to pass any required examination because deficient in any one subject of instruction he shall have the right to apply for a second examination regarding such subject by making written application therefor to the academic board within six months after being officially notified of such failure. The examination demanded shall be held at the next semiannual examination, and if the cadet, being otherwise qualified, shall pass the same by compliance with the requirements existing at the time of the first examination, he shall be readmitted to the academy.

Some Senator has also suggested a proviso at the end, to read:

Provided, That no cadet thus failing to pass the required examination shall have more than one such reexamination.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest to the Senator from Oregon that as it is evident that he will have to add a proviso or some language to cover those who failed at the last examination, the period of six months ought to be reduced to three months.

Mr. SMOOT. Not more than three months.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not more than three months for the future; and I would propose that amendment—to strike out "six months" and insert "not more than three months." Then the Senator can write a proviso covering those who failed at the last examination.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, there is another difference here that we might as well thrash out. If the amendment be modified so as to permit those who failed at the last examination in June to take a second examination, this will take place next January—the regular semiannual examination. They will be reexamined at that time on the subjects in which they should have been in June. A man who has been at West Point a year and fails at the June examination applies for reexamination in January, and is admitted. Of course he is examined on the curriculum that was before the academic board in June last. Now, he can only be admitted so as to enter the class below, and he will have six months again on the same studies that he pursued the year before.

Mr. SMOOT. That will not hurt him.

Mr. DU PONT. That may not hurt him.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No; it will not hurt him. It is better for him. It postpones his graduation one year, and it is good for him. That is what they do now when they grant reexamination.

Mr. DU PONT. Very well. I thought it had better be clearly understood; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 10, after the word "service," to insert "detachment," so as to read:

For pay of general Army service detachment: One first sergeant, $540:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 14, to strike out:

One hundred and eighty privates, $32,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 15, to insert:

Forty-five privates, first class, $9,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 16, to insert:

One hundred and thirty-five privates, $24,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 7, to strike out:

One hundred privates (Cavalry), $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 8, to insert:

Twenty-five privates, first class, $5,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 9, to insert:

Seventy-five privates, $13,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 24, to strike out:

One hundred and two privates, $18,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 7, to insert:

Thirty privates, first class, $6,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 1, to insert:

Ninety-seven privates, $17,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 16, to insert:

For pay of one battalion sergeant major, Infantry, $768: Provided, That the enlisted man in the headquarters, United States Corps of Cadets, performing that duty has the rank, pay, and allowance of that grade.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator explain the amendment on lines 17 and 18, and the necessity for it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In the House hearings, when Col. Townsley was on the stand, he testified in reference to the matter. There were formerly two men holding this position, and Col. Townsley said:

I can reduce that to $182.50, making that one man under the following conditions: On the top of page 16 I ask you to give us the pay for a battalion sergeant major. In other words, I want to promote one of these two men to a battalion sergeant major in the service.

Mr. McKENZIE. You will be satisfied to leave it just as you have it here?

Col. TOWNSLEY. No, sir; I can not say that I would. The point is here: That enlisted man is really performing the duty of a sergeant major of a regiment; he has charge of all the records and the correspondence—everything connected with the whole Corps of Cadets. He is performing duty in that position. We are using a man who has been at it for a considerable time. He is simply getting extra-duty pay amounting to $182.50 a year besides his regular pay. Of course, his regular pay, including continued-service pay, if he is made a sergeant major, will be $768.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of civilians," on page 12, after line 19, to strike out "For pay of one professional civilian instructor in gymnastics, athletics, and swimming, $1,500," and insert:

"For pay of two professional civilian instructors in gymnastics, athletics, and swimming, $3,000;

Provided, That hereafter these eight civilian instructors shall be entitled to public quarters when available and to the same allowances with respect to fuel and light as those of a second lieutenant when occupying public quarters.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the superintendent of the academy suggested that amendment. There are a number of men who can occupy these quarters, if they are not used for some other purpose, and it is only to give them that opportunity when these quarters are not used. The Senator will notice that it is not compulsory. It is not a right. It is only when they can do it without inconveniencing the academy. The reason for the increase of two professional civilian instructors is because of the increased number of cadets under the reorganization act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 1, after "$1,200," to insert: "Provided, That hereafter the chapel organist and choir-master shall be entitled to public quarters when available and to the same allowances with respect to fuel and light as those of a second lieutenant when occupying public quarters," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of chapel organist and choir-master, $1,200: Provided, That hereafter the chapel organist and choir-master shall be entitled to public quarters when available and to the same allowances with respect to fuel and light as those of a second lieutenant when occupying public quarters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 22, to insert:

For the purchase of the latest model sketching apparatus to complete the equipment of the drawing department necessary for the instruction of cadets in the course of topography, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," on page 26, line 1, after the word "barracks," to strike out "$3,879" and insert "$8,685," so as to make the clause read:

For supplying light and plain furniture to cadets' barracks, $8,685.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 5, to insert:

For one 8-ton road roller, $2,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 20, to insert:

For continuing the work of increasing the efficiency of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., in accordance with the general plan approved by the Secretary of War on January 27, 1904, and to provide for the enlargement, improvement, and extension of existing buildings, grounds, and roads, and for the erection of buildings and the improvement and extension of grounds and roads contemplated in said plan and in the supplementary plan of enlargement submitted by the board of officers appointed by the Secretary of War November 4, 1915, $1,000,000: Provided, That the entire cost of the construction, enlargement, improvement, and extension here authorized, due to supplementary plan of enlargement, shall not exceed $3,192,933: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall cause the work herein provided for to be done and performed by the Corps of Engineers under the direction and supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. One amendment was passed over on page 2. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended on page 2.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to insert after the word "Academy" the following additional proviso.

The Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That this proviso shall apply to those former cadets who failed in any two subjects during the current year.

Mr. SMOOT. I make that two instead of one for the reason that the late examination had at which so many failed was acknowledged to be a very severe examination, and in a way it was a change from all past examinations. The cadets were not notified of any contemplated change and were hardly prepared for it when it came. Therefore I ask that this proviso include two subjects instead of one, as provided in the first proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to have the whole amendment read as perfected.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That whenever a cadet shall fail to pass any required examination because deficient in any one subject of instruction he shall have the right to apply for a second examination regarding such subject by making written application therefor to the Academic Board within three months after being officially notified of such failure. The examination demanded shall be held at the next semi-annual examination, and if the cadet, being otherwise qualified, shall pass the same by compliance with the requirements existing at the time of the first examination, shall be readmitted to the academy: And provided further, That this proviso shall apply to those former cadets who failed in any two subjects during the current year: And provided further, That any cadet who thus failed to pass the required examination shall have no more than one reexamination.

Mr. DU PONT. I suggest that the word "thus" be eliminated, so as to read "And provided further, That any cadet who failed to pass."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. On page 5, line 8, I move to strike out "22 privates, at $180 each, $3,960," and to insert "6 privates, first class, $1,296; 16 privates, $2,880."

That is in accordance with the requirements of the reorganization act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I was requested by the department to suggest an amendment. I do not know anything further about it than is contained in a message from the President of the United States transmitting a report by the Secretary of State. I will ask that it be read, as it will explain it. It might be added as an amendment at the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct, and so recommended by the academic board: And provided further, That in the case of the said J. Ricardo de Borja the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to have the message and accompanying report read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[H. Doc. No. 1229, 64th Cong., 1st sess.]

J. RICARDO DE BORJA.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point at the expense of the Government of Ecuador.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point at the expense of the Government of Ecuador.

The Secretary of State points out that the passage of the resolution would be regarded as an act of courtesy by the Government of Ecuador, and that it would follow established precedents.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 20, 1916.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 17, 1916.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, in compliance with the request of the Government of Ecuador made through its minister at Washington, and with the assent of the Secretary of War, has the honor to submit for transmission to Congress a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point at the expense of the Government of Ecuador.

The passage of the resolution would be regarded by the Government of Ecuador as an act of courtesy, and it would be in accordance with established precedents.
Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Mr. J. Ricardo de Borja, a citizen of Ecuador, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the course in the various departments of instruction, and that the said J. Ricardo de Borja shall not be admitted to the academy until he shall have passed the mental and physical examinations prescribed for candidates from the United States, and that he shall be immediately withdrawn if deficient in studies or conduct, and so recommended by the academic board: And provided further, That in the case of the said J. Ricardo de Borja the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15774, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15774), making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, as to the bill, I wish to say that your committee have used every means available to them to get all the information possible in regard to the affairs of the District of Columbia. They were in session probably three or four weeks, and we gave hearings to possibly 100 or more witnesses in order that we might ascertain the facts pertaining to District of Columbia matters. We believe that we have thoroughly investigated the affairs of the District as pertaining to this bill and, according to our judgment, we have done the best we could for the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States.

I hope the Senate will take into consideration the trouble we have been to and the pains we have taken in getting at the facts in order to ascertain what is right and what should be put in the bill. I ask that the bill may be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, after line 2, to strike out:

That hereafter all appropriations made for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, including all sums appropriated in any general appropriation act indicated to be paid out of the District of Columbia revenues except amounts to pay the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of said District, shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that the same shall be sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The following sums are appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia to the extent that they are sufficient therefor and the remainder out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, namely:

And insert:

That one half of the following sums, respectively, is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the following expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, namely:

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, this amendment raises the very much debated question as to the half and half, which has been a matter of controversy ever since I have been in the Senate. That question was very thoroughly considered by a special committee appointed for that purpose. I have offered an amendment to the amendment of the committee that will raise the question of the half and half, not being satisfied with either the House provision or the amendment proposed by the Senate committee. I expect to discuss that question at some length. I ask the chairman of the committee to allow the amendment to be passed over for the present. If that is satisfactory, I will give notice that I shall address the Senate on this subject to-morrow morning. Is there any objection to passing over the amendment until to-morrow morning?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Very well; let it be passed over.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "General expenses," on page 4, line 4, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$25," so as to make the clause read:

For transportation, means of transportation, and maintenance of means of transportation, including allowances to inspectors for automobiles at the rate of $25 per month each and for horse and buggy at the rate of $25 per month, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 16, to insert:

Hereafter assessments of real estate in the District of Columbia for purposes of taxation shall be made biennially in the same manner as is now required by law for triennial assessments of real estate in said District; and the time for the completion of each biennial assessment, and the time in which appeals from such assessments may be taken to the board of equalization and review shall be the same as is now provided for the assessment of real property which has become subject to taxation and which has not been taxed, and for the assessment of new structures, as set forth in section 11 of the act approved August 14, 1894, entitled "An act to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real estate values in the District of Columbia; and also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896, and every third year thereafter, and for other purposes": Provided, That on and after the date of the approval of this act, all records and accounts in any way relating or pertaining to the book-keeping, accounting, and collection of taxes and assessments, now prepared and kept in the office of the assessor of the District of Columbia, shall be transferred to and kept in the office of the collector of taxes of said District; and the collector of taxes shall hereafter be charged with the duties heretofore required of the assessor in relation to the preparation and issuance of tax bills, and bills for special taxes and assessments, the preparation for public inspection of lists of all real estate in the District of Columbia heretofore sold, or which may hereafter be sold, for the nonpayment of any general or special tax or assessment; and said collector shall furnish, whenever called upon, a certified statement over his hand and official seal, of all taxes and assessments, general and special, that may be due at the time of making the said certificate; and he shall prepare the lists of taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation on which taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July of each year: Provided further, That on or before November 1 of each year the assessor shall prepare and deliver to the collector of taxes of said District tax ledgers in completed form, showing the assessed owners, amount, description, and value of real property listed for taxation in the District of Columbia; and on or before April 1 of each year the assessor shall prepare and deliver to the said collector personal-tax ledgers in completed form, showing the names and addresses of assessed owners, and the location and value of property assessed: And provided further, That in order to enable the assessor of the District of Columbia to make the biennial assessments of real property as herein provided, there are hereby appropriated the following sums for the employment of personal services, namely, record clerk, $1,800; record clerk, $1,500; draftsman, $1,600; 2 stenographers and typewriters, at $1,200 each; 5 field men, at $2,000 each; in all, $17,300.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the question of annual assessments was presented to the committee and considered by them?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from California that that question was presented to and considered by the committee; but the committee thought that, instead of an assessment every third year, two years would be better than either three years or one year, for the reason that property values change in a very slight degree during a year. We thought an assessment every two years was sufficient.

Mr. WORKS. I asked that question, Mr. President, because at the special hearings, to which I have referred, that matter was very thoroughly discussed, and there seemed to be a very general impression that the assessment should be made every year. I was myself rather impressed with the idea that it would be very much better if that were done.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Well, the committee thought differently. The committee thought that an assessment every two years was sufficient, because, as I have stated, property values change very slightly, if any, during a year, and that every two years was sufficiently often to make the assessments.

Mr. WORKS. I am not now prepared to say what position I shall take in reference to the matter, but I will ask to have the amendment passed over until I can look into the evidence which was placed before the committee, in order that I may determine whether or not I shall seek to amend the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator from California, in making his investigation he keep in mind the fact that if there is an annual assessment we shall have to provide a much larger force in office to look after that matter.

Mr. WORKS. I have no doubt about that, Mr. President; and that is a matter which was considered—whether it was worth the additional expense and the additional number of employees that would be necessary for the purpose. I shall certainly keep that in mind.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, when this matter was before the committee I remember raising the same point as that which has been raised by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], inasmuch as it was a rather strange proceeding to me—coming from Michigan, as I do, where we have annual assessments—to have assessments made here once in two years. I learned that heretofore the assessment had been made once in three years, and I thought the proposition for biennial assessments was an improvement upon that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The committee thought so, too.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I also learned, what was new to me, though I suppose it ought not to have been so, that many cities in the country have biennial assessments instead of annual assessments.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the Senator will find that a majority of the cities throughout the country have biennial assessments.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course it occurred to me then—and I am still of the opinion—that the only correct way to levy taxes which are levied every year was upon the present value of property, to be determined by annual assessment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the Senator from Michigan, on investigation, will find that a majority of the cities in the country have biennial assessments. This city heretofore has had triennial assessments, and we have changed that to biennial assessments, reducing the interval within which assessments are made.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee another question, and that is, whether any additional force has been provided for in the bill over what has been allowed in the past? I ask that question because it was perfectly evident to me, from the investigation that we made, that the assessments were not properly made because of the lack of a sufficient force to make the necessary examinations and assessments. Therefore I should like to know whether any better facilities have been provided for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am not able to say, so far as the force is concerned, whether it would be sufficient for an annual assessment; but the committee thought that it was important that there should be biennial assessments instead of triennial assessments, and therefore adopted the biennial plan.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the force is sufficient for the biennial assessments? It certainly, according to the evidence taken by the special committee, was not sufficient for an assessment every three years. The force was crippled because of the lack of numbers, and the assessments, in my judgment, were not fairly or properly made for that reason.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Did the Senator ask me whether the force would be sufficient for biennial assessments?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Undoubtedly; and possibly for an annual assessment. I think we have made arrangements for a force that, perhaps, could make annual assessments, if necessary.

Mr. WORKS. The question I asked was whether or not the force had been increased?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the amendment provides an additional force consisting of—record clerk $1,800, record clerk $1,500, draftsman $1,600, 2 stenographers and typewriters, at $1,200 each, 5 field men, at $2,000 each; in all, $17,300.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator know how many field men there are now?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say how many there are to-day, but the amendment provides for an increased force.

Mr. WORKS. The weakness was in the field force of assessors.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that we gave the commissioners the force which they asked for, according to their investigation and the information we obtained from them. I will consent that this amendment go over; but I do hope that Senators will let this bill proceed without carrying different matters over. I am perfectly willing to submit to that, if Senators think it advisable; but I do hope they will not interfere with the speedy consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the bill in the least, and I will be prepared to go on in the morning, as I have stated.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I will say, for the information of the Senator from California, that in the Senate hearing when Commissioner Brownlow was upon the stand he mentioned this increase of expense of $17,300, and said:

That would make a total of about $67,000—less than $70,000—which I think is a very reasonable charge on an assessment which produces about $7,000,000 annually.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, line 24, after "$11,600," to insert:

Provided, That the term of office of any member of the excise board whose nomination has been or may be rejected by the Senate shall be terminated by such rejection and no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any member of the board whose nomination has been rejected by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 24, after "$17,280," to strike out:

Provided, That hereafter no attorney for the District of Columbia shall retain any attorney fees taxed as costs in any litigation to which the District of Columbia is a party.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 18, after "$2,500," to strike out "assistants" and insert "inspectors"; in line 19, after the word "each," to strike out "one $1,000" and insert "two at $1,000 each"; in line 20, after the word "clerk," to strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,350"; and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$8,900" and insert "$10,050," so as to make the clause read:

Office of superintendent of weights, measures, and markets: Superintendent, $2,500; inspectors—three at $1,200 each, two at $1,000 each; clerk, $1,350; laborer, $600; in all, $10,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 12, after the words "assistant superintendent," to strike out "$1,350" and insert "$1,500"; on page 12, line 5, after the word "each," where it occurs the second time, to insert "one $720"; and in line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$177,970" and insert "$178,840"; so as to make the clause read:

Engineer Commissioner's office: Engineer of highways, $3,000; engineer of bridges, $2,250; superintendents—1 of streets $2,000, 1 of suburban roads $2,000, 1 of sewers $3,300; asphalt and cements—inspector $2,400; Provided, That hereafter the inspector of asphalt and cements shall not receive or accept compensation of any kind from or perform any work or render any services of a character required of him officially by the District of Columbia to any person, firm, corporation, or municipality other than the District of Columbia, assistant inspector $1,500; trees and parkings—superintendent $2,000, assistant superintendent $1,500; assistant engineers—2 at $2,200 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,600 each, 4 at $1,500 each, 2 at $1,350 each, 1 $1,200; transitmen—2 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,050; rodmen—4 at $900 each, 8 at $780 each; 12 chainmen, at $650 each; draftsmen—1 $1,500, 2 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,050; general inspector of sewers, $1,300; inspector of sewers, $1,200; bridge inspector, $1,200; inspectors—2 at $1,500 each, 5 (including 2 of streets) at $1,200 each, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; transitman, $1,200; foreman—12 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,050, 10 at $900 each; foreman, Rock Creek Park, $1,200; 3 subforemen, at $1,050 each; bridgekeepers—1 $650, 3 at $600 each; chief clerk, $2,250; permit clerk, $1,500; assistant permit clerk, $1,000; index clerk and typewriter, $900; clerks—1 at $1,800, 3 at $1,500 each, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,350 (now paid from lump-sum appropriations), 7 at $1,200 each (including 2 now paid from lump-sum appropriations), 2 at $1,000 each, 1 $900, 1 $840, 2 at $750 each, 1 $720, 1 $600; messengers—7 at $600 each; skilled laborers—1 $625, 2 at $600 each; janitor, $20; steam engineers—principal $1,800, 3 at $1,200 each, 3 assistants at $1,050 each; 6 oilers, at $600 each; 6 firemen, at $875 each; inspector, $1,400; storekeeper, $900; superintendent of stables, $1,500; blacksmith, $975; 2 watchmen, at $630 each; 2 drivers, at $630 each; in all, $178,840.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the amendment on page 12, line 5, reading "one, $720," is not a mistake, and should not be left out of the bill? I have it so marked in my copy of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is all right; and it should remain in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Then my memorandum is wrong. I have no amendment to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, line 4, after the words "in all," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$34,000," so as to make the clause read:

Public Utilities Commission: For salaries (including inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspectors of gas and meters—one $1,000, two at $900 each; messenger, $600, transferred from engineer commissioner's office); in all, $34,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, after the word "Commission," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$44,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Public Utilities Commission, $44,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 15, to insert:

Enforcement of child-labor law: For the enforcement of the provisions of the act "to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia," approved May 28, 1908, namely, for two inspectors, at $1,200 each, $2,400; Provided, That the existing provision of law requiring the detail of two privates of the Metropolitan police force for the enforcement of said act is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 5, to strike out:

For keeping the central library open 52 Sundays from 2 o'clock p. m. to 9 o'clock p. m., 5 holidays from 9 o'clock a. m. to 9 o'clock p. m., and for extra services on Saturday afternoons in July, August, and September; for keeping the Takoma Park branch open on holidays and for extra services there on Saturday half holidays, $2,000.

And insert:

For extra services on Sundays, holidays, and Saturday half holidays, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses," on page 17, line 22, after the word "cement," to strike out "$36,900" and insert "$41,900," so as to make the clause read:

For printing, checks, books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery; detection of frauds on the revenue; surveying instruments and implements; drawing materials; binding, rebinding, repairing, and preservation of records; maintaining and keeping in good order the laboratory and apparatus in the office of the inspector of asphalt and cement; damages; livery, purchase, and care of horses and carriages or buggies and bicycles not otherwise provided for; horseshoeing; ice; repairs to pound and vehicles; use of bicycles by inspectors in the engineer department not to exceed $800; and other general necessary expenses of District offices, including the sinking-fund office, Board of Charities, including an allowance to the purchasing officer and to the secretary of the Board of Charities of not exceeding $300 each per annum for maintenance of vehicle for use in the discharge of their official duties, excise board, personal-tax board; harbor master, health department, surveyor's office, superintendent of weights, measures, and markets office, and department of insurance, and purchase of new apparatus and laboratory equipment in office of inspector of asphalt and cement, $41,900; and the commissioners shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 19, line 9, after the word "vehicles," to strike out "$13,696" and insert "$23,860"; in line 20, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$700" and insert "$1,200"; in line 21, after the word "persons," to insert "except the automobile herein provided for the assessor's office, for which a limitation of $1,600 is hereby authorized"; in line 23, after the word "authorized," to strike out "$500" and insert "$600"; and in line 24, after the word "or," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "2,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for motor vehicles, $23,860. All of said motor vehicles and all other motor vehicles provided for in this act and all horse-drawn carriages and buggies owned by the District of Columbia shall be used only for purposes directly pertaining to the public services of said District, and shall be under the direction and control of the commissioners, who may from time to time alter or change the assignment for use thereof or direct the joint or interchangeable use of any of the same by officials and employees of the District; Provided, That no automobile shall be acquired hereunder, by purchase or exchange, at a cost, including the value of a vehicle exchanged, exceeding $1,200 for one seating more than two persons except the automobile herein provided for the assessor's office for which a limitation of $1,600 is hereby authorized, $600 for one seating not more than two persons, or $2,000 for a motor truck: Provided further, That all motor vehicles and all horse-drawn carriages and buggies owned by the District of Columbia shall be of uniform color and have painted conspicuously thereon, in letters not less than 3 inches high and markedly contrasting in color with the body color of the vehicle, the words "District of Columbia."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest that a semicolon be inserted in place of a comma after the word "authorized," in line 23, page 19.

The SECRETARY. Following the word "authorized," in line 23, page 19, it is proposed to strike out the comma and insert a semicolon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, after line 11, to insert:

For the purchase or condemnation of a site and for the erection of a central garage thereon, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum: For maintenance and operation, $20,000. Upon the passage of this act the terms of the members of the present board of directors shall terminate, and thereafter the board shall consist of the Surgeon General of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and one Senator, and two Representatives in Congress, to be appointed by the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, each for the term of a single Congress and be eligible for reappointment, and five members, who shall be residents of the District of Columbia, to be appointed by the commissioners. Of the number of directors appointed by the commissioners first after the passage of this act, one shall serve for one year, two for two years, and two for three years; all subsequent appointees of said commissioners shall serve for three years, except that appointments to fill vacancies occurring during a term shall be for the unexpired term. The said board shall have full power to appoint all officers and employees of said hospital, including the medical staff. There shall be two female members upon said board. The said hospital shall continue to operate as a hospital (and dispensary) for the treatment of diseases peculiar to women and lying-in asylum, and shall continue to furnish board, lodging, medicine, and medical attendance gratuitously to those unable to pay therefor, when so duly certified by the Board of Charities of the District, and to be paid for by the said Board of Charities. It shall also receive patients who are willing to pay their expenses, and all money received from said patients shall be paid monthly to the collector of taxes of the District, to be deposited by him to the credit and to constitute a part of the annual appropriation for support and maintenance of said hospital, which money, together with all appropriations made for said hospital, shall be expended under the direction of the board of directors of the hospital.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have supervision of the said hospital, and the board of directors thereof shall account for all receipts and expenditures to them, in such manner and at such times as they, the said commissioners, may prescribe, and all estimates for appropriations to be made by the Congress for the operation and other expenses of the hospital shall be submitted by the board of directors to the District Commissioners and by them submitted to Congress in the same manner as all other estimates for the operation of the District government are now submitted.

And insert:

Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum: For the care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum by the Board of Charities, not to exceed $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 25, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$14,000" and insert "$16,000," so as to make the clause read:

For care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with Children's Hospital by the Board of Charities, not to exceed $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 7, after the word "Charities," to strike out "$17,000" and insert "$19,000," so as to make the clause read:

For emergency care and treatment of, and free dispensary service to, indigent patients under a contract or agreement to be made with Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital by the Board of Charities, $19,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 17, after the word "Charities," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000," so as to make the clause read:

For care and treatment of indigent patients under a contract to be made with Georgetown University Hospital by the Board of Charities, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 20, after the word "Charities," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000," so as to make the clause read:

For care and treatment of indigent patients under a contract to be made with George Washington University Hospital by the Board of Charities, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 22, after "$600," to insert "assistant resident physician, $300"; in line 24, after "$300," to insert "and the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 shall not apply to the payment of this salary"; and on page 97, line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$18,960" and insert "$19,260," so as to make the clause read:

Tuberculosis Hospital: Superintendent, $1,800; resident physician, $600; assistant resident physician, $300; pharmacist and clerk, superintendent of nurses, and engineer at $720 each; pathologist, $300, and the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 shall not apply to the payment of this salary; matron, dietician, chief cook, assistant engineer, laundryman, and eight graduate nurses, at $600 each; assistant cooks—one, $360; two at $240 each; assistant engineer, $480; elevator conductor, $300; three laundresses, at $240 each; farmer, laborer, night watchman, three orderlies, and assistant laundryman, at $360 each; two ward maids, at $240 each; four servants, at $240 each; in all, $19,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 17, to insert:

For erection of buildings to afford additional accommodations for indigent cases, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 20, after the word "accessories," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,360," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of X-ray machine and accessories, $2,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, line 22, after the word "Hospital," to strike out "$57,960" and insert "$60,620," so as to make the clause read:

In all, Tuberculosis Hospital, $60,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 22, to insert:

Gallinger (Municipal) Hospital: Toward the construction of the Gallinger Hospital, including grading of the site, to be located on land now owned by the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia, at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets NW., in accordance with plans and specifications prepared under the authority contained in the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915, $150,000, and the limit of cost of the construction of said hospital and accessory buildings is hereby fixed at $500,000: Provided, That said hospital shall be constructed with a view to making future additions as the exigencies may demand.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that that item be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary homes," on page 101, after line 15, to insert:

For a new municipal lodging house, of which amount not more than $10,000 shall be used for purchase of land, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 6, to strike out:

Southern Relief Society: For care and maintenance of indigent and infirm men, women, and children under a contract to be made with the Southern Relief Society for the support of those under its care by the Board of Charities, $6,000.

And insert:

Aid to Confederate veterans, their widows and dependents: For care and maintenance of indigent and infirm Confederate veterans, their widows and dependents, to be disbursed by the Board of Charities under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War, $6,000.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that the Senate disagree to the committee amendment, restoring the paragraph stricken out, and that it be amended by striking therefrom the word "indigent" and inserting the word "needy," and striking out "$6,000" and inserting "$10,000," in line 11, so as to read:

Southern Relief Society: For care and maintenance of needy and infirm men, women, and children under a contract to be made with the Southern Relief Society for the support of those under its care by the Board of Charities, $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator why strike out the word "indigent" and insert the word "needy."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will reply to that by asking the Senator why there should be any objection to striking out the word "indigent" and inserting the word "needy."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can give the Senator the explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. I can answer the Senator of Maryland right now if he wants an answer.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I happen to know, I do not know whether it has been communicated to the Senator from Maryland or not, that a question of the construction of the word "indigent" has been raised and there has been a disposition to decide that the word "indigent" means a person with nothing whatever; for instance, that a man might have $10 a year and he would not be indigent. Yet he could not live on that sum. It was to meet that possibility, to help the needy and not those absolutely in destitution without anything whatever that the word "needy" was substituted for the word "indigent," because the question had been raised by the auditing officer of the Government who held that "indigent" means absolute destitution, without anything whatever.

Some of these old and helpless people did have something; for instance, one had $24 a year coming to him in some way for himself and his wife. The question was whether that family could have anything from this appropriation when they had $24 a year. They were not indigent, but certainly they were needy, and they could not live on $24 a year. The substitution of the word "needy" for the word "indigent" was made to meet that construction, which I think is wrong, and still we were confronted with a view of that sort from the auditing officer of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. The word "indigent" is so often used that it seems to me it is generally understood by all classes of people.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree with the Senator, but here we are confronted with a decision of the auditing officer. The Senator knows how arbitrary the Auditor of the Treasury is. He decided that "indigent" meant absolute destitution, without any particle of property or assistance of any kind whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know what the auditor is going to decide when we change "indigent" to the word "needy"? He may decide that a person is not needy if he has $50, or he may decide that a person who has $600 may be needy.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The best way to do was to meet the objection he made. We hope that this will do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the auditor recommend the word "needy"?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not sure about that, but he objected to the word "indigent," and thought a party would not be indigent who had anything whatever. It is not the correct interpretation, I agree with the Senator. It is absolutely wrong; it is arbitrary and unreasonable, but it was easier to correct it by substituting the word "needy" than to have them enter into strife with the auditor.

Mr. SMOOT. Last year the appropriation was for $6,000. I understand it is now proposed to raise it to $10,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator, it is our wish that it be raised to $10,000. There are a number of these old people here; they are not eligible to admission into the soldiers' home, or the home of the Confederates, or of the Union people in Virginia and Maryland. They are stranded here in Washington. The ladies who are in charge of this work raised a good deal of money to help out, but $6,000 has proved entirely inadequate to relieve the immediate distress of these aged and infirm people, who are on the kindness of their neighbors here in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the history of the organization, and I know the good work they have done in the past. As the Senator knows, the officers have appeared before the committee a number of times. I was in hearty sympathy with the first appropriation made for this purpose and voted for it, but I have not heard of any request on the part of the officers of the organization for any increase in the appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The ladies of the association came to me and said they had contributed largely and had raised money and were doing a great deal to aid these people, but they could not get along with charity and the assistance they got and their own efforts on $6,000 and asked us to give them $10,000. I am sure nobody will begrudge those helpless people the extra $4,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Because of some disagreement on the part of the people who were the beneficiaries under that clause in the bill the amendment was changed somewhat from its form last year, but I think probably it ought to be changed back so far as to recognize the Southern Relief Society. I have drafted an amendment which I will read, if the Senator will permit me:

Southern Relief Society: For care and maintenance of needy and infirm Confederate veterans, their widows, and dependents, under a contract to be made with the Southern Relief Society by the Board of Charities—

Then the amount, whatever it may be. It is a recognition of the society, which the language in the bill does not give, and I think we ought to deal with that society. I will ask the Senator if he does not think so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is satisfactory, Mr. President. It is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know about these people, so far as their domicile is concerned. I will ask the Senator if there will be any objection to say "residents in the District of Columbia."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. None whatever.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will add that to it. If agreeable to the Senator from Virginia I will submit the following as a substitute for what has been offered:

Southern Relief Society: For care and maintenance of needy and infirm Confederate veterans, their widows, and dependents, resident in the District of Columbia, under a contract to be made with the Southern Relief Society by the Board of Charities, $10,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that will meet the objections that have been raised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be disagreed to without objection, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 16, to insert:

AID TO THE BLIND.

National Library for the Blind: For aid and support of the National Library for the Blind, located at 1729 H Street NW., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 20, to insert:

Columbia Polytechnic Institute: To aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, located at 1808 H Street NW., to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Militia of the District of Columbia," on page 108, line 22, after the word "tickets," to strike out "not to exceed $50," and in line 24, after the word "service," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$46,850," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, and for the payment of commutation of subsistence for enlisted men who may be detailed to guard or move the United States property at home stations on days immediately preceding and immediately following the annual encampments, for damages to private property incident to encampments, instruction, practice marches and practice cruises, drills and parades, fuel, light, heat, care, and repair of armories, offices, and storehouses, practice ships, boats, machinery and dock, dredging alongside of dock, telephone service, horses and mules for mounted organizations, street car tickets necessarily used in the transaction of official business, and for general incidental expenses of the service, $46,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 3, after the word "militia," to strike out "$16,900" and insert "$21,125: Provided, That the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the lease of an armory, stable, drill shed, and warehouse for Cavalry, Field Artillery, Signal Corps, and Hospital Corps troops in one building or separately, for a period not to exceed five years, renewable at the option of the said commanding general for an additional period of not exceeding five years at an annual rental not to exceed $8,805: Provided further, That the said commanding general may renew for the fiscal year 1917, or a portion thereof, the building known as 230 First Street NW., now occupied as an armory for mounted and other troops, at an annual rental of $3,900, and the building known as 457 to 460 Virginia Avenue, used as stables and warehouses, at an annual rental of $780, paying therefor a rental not in excess of the current rentals," so as to make the clause read:

For rent of armories, offices, storehouses, stables, and quarters for noncommissioned officers of the Army detailed for duty with the militia, $21,125: Provided, That the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the lease of an armory, stable, drill shed, and warehouse for Cavalry, Field Artillery, Signal Corps, and Hospital Corps troops in one building or separately, for a period not to exceed five years, renewable at the option of the said commanding general for an additional period of not exceeding five years at an annual rental not to exceed $8,805: Provided further, That the said commanding general may renew for the fiscal year 1917, or a portion thereof, the building known as 230 First Street NW., now occupied as an armory for mounted and other troops, at an annual rental of $3,900, and the building known as 457 to 460

Virginia Avenue, used as stables and warehouses, at an annual rental of $780, paying therefor a rental not in excess of the current rentals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 21, after the word "armories," to strike out "$600" and insert "$8,000," so as to make the clause read:

For lockers, furniture, and gymnastic apparatus for armories, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 23, after the word "postage," to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the clause read:

For printing, stationery, and postage, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Refund of Erroneous Collections," on page 110, line 16, after the date "nineteen hundred and eleven," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,500," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the commissioners, in any case where special assessments, school-tuition charges, rents, fees, or collections of any character have been erroneously covered into the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts, to refund such erroneous payments, wholly or in part, including the refunding of fees paid for building permits authorized by the District of Columbia appropriation act approved March 2, 1911, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for such refunds of payments made within the past three years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Parks," on page 111, after line 6, to insert:

For the acquisition for a public park of the tract of land known as the "Patterson tract," assessed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as parcel 129 2, lying north of Florida Avenue northeast and bounded on the east by the grounds of the Columbia Institute for the Deaf, on the west by New York Avenue and the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., and on the north by Fairview Avenue, containing 81 acres, more or less, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $500,000.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before that amendment is acted upon by the Senate, I should like, if the Senator from Maryland would permit me at this point, to offer—not to be voted upon until the committee amendments are disposed of—an amendment in order that it may be printed for convenience to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I agree to that; but we can not now agree to any amendments offered because the understanding is that the bill is to be temporarily laid aside after we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. STONE. I do not wish to interfere with that, but I wish merely to have the amendment printed. I should like, following line 24, on page 111—we have not yet reached that point—but I should like there to insert as a paragraph the amendment which I send to the desk, though it need not be read.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri may be offered to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. It may be inserted in the Record and printed now. If the Senator will permit me just a moment, I desire to say that this amendment is intended to make an appropriation of $173,641.43 for an addition to the National Zoological Park. I can not go further into the matter without breaking in on the Senator's plan, but I want to offer the amendment, and I shall say something about it at that time. I should like to have the Senator from Maryland pass over the next paragraph relating to the Dean tract.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I can see no reason for that. The Senator from Missouri will have the privilege of offering his amendment, and it may follow the amendment to which he refers. I should like to have these amendments adopted this evening. That will not in any way interfere with any amendment which the Senator may see proper to offer.

Mr. STONE. Certainly I can offer the amendment as an amendment, but I am thinking somewhat about offering it as a substitute for the clause to which the Senator from Maryland refers.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator can offer his amendment and let this amendment be adopted as it is and go to conference.

Mr. STONE. Then I wish my amendment also to go to conference.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Let this amendment be adopted as it is now, and let us get through with the committee amendments. If we start in putting other amendments on the bill this afternoon, it will be in violation of the understanding.

Mr. STONE. I am not proposing to put the amendment on now.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator from Missouri may offer his amendment to-morrow. Let us now get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. STONE. Would not the Senator be willing to pass over the paragraph relating to the Dean tract until to-morrow?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I prefer, as I have stated, that the committee amendments shall, if possible, be agreed to this afternoon.

Mr. STONE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Readjustment of National Zoological Park boundaries: For acquiring, in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913; for the condemnation of land for an addition to the National Zoological Park, all the lots, pieces, or parcels of land, other than the one therein excepted, that lie between the present western boundary of the National Zoological Park and Connecticut Avenue, from Cathedral Avenue to Klinge Road, $66,441.43, together with the sum of $107,200 appropriated for this purpose by the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913, which is hereby reappropriated, both sums to be available until used, and said land, when acquired, together with the included highways, to be added to and become a part of the National Zoological Park; in all, $173,641.43.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee is agreed to, without objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 111, after line 16, to insert:

For the acquisition for a public park of the tract of land known as the "Dean tract," assessed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as lots A, S15 and S19, in square 2535, containing 404,425 square feet, more or less, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $625,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maryland to allow that amendment to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 112, after line 5, to strike out:

WATER SERVICE.

The following sums are appropriated wholly out of the revenues of the water department for expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances and for expenses of the water department, namely:

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT.

For operation, including salaries of all necessary employees, maintenance, and repair of Washington Aqueduct and its accessories, McMillan Park Reservoir, Washington Aqueduct Tunnel, the filtration plant, the plant for the preliminary treatment of the water supply, authorized water meters on Federal services, vehicles, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including not exceeding $700 for the purchase of one new motor vehicle, $120,000.

For ordinary repairs, grading, opening ditches, and other maintenance of Conduit Road, $5,000.

For emergency fund, to be used only in case of a serious break requiring immediate repair in one of the more important aqueduct or filtration plant structures, such as a dam, conduit, tunnel, bridge, building, or important piece of machinery; all expenditures from this appropriation shall be reported in detail to Congress, $5,000.

For continuation of parking grounds around McMillan Park Reservoir, $3,000.

And to insert:

WATER DEPARTMENT.

The following sums are appropriated to carry on the operations of the water department, to be paid wholly from its revenues, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, line 13, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen," so as to make the clause read:

For the fiscal year 1918 and annually thereafter estimates in detail shall be submitted for the appropriations required for continuing the extension and maintenance of the high-service system of water distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, after line 15, to strike out:

SEC. 6. That hereafter no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for the payment to the Washington Gas Light Co. or the Georgetown Gas Light Co. for any gas furnished by said companies for use in any of the public buildings of the United States or the District of Columbia at a rate in excess of 70 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 119, after line 22, to strike out:

SEC. 7. That all fees, assessments, rents, and all other receipts now required when collected, to be paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the credit of the United States, shall hereafter when collected be paid into the Treasury and credited wholly to the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 120, after line 3, to strike out:

SEC. 8. That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to assess and collect rent from all users of space occupied under the sidewalks and streets in the District of Columbia, which said space is occupied or used in connection with the business of said users.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 120, after line 8, to strike out:

SEC. 9. That hereafter the half cost of the paving or repaving of a roadway between the side thereof and the center thereof with sheet asphalt, asphalt block, granite block, vitrified block, cement concrete, bituminous concrete, macadam, or other form of pavement shall be assessed against the property abutting the side of the street so improved, such assessments to be levied and collected as now provided as to alleys and sidewalks: Provided, That the advertisement by publication of the commissioners' intention to do such work and the formal hearing in respect thereto required by law as to alley and sidewalk improvements shall not be required as to roadway improvements.

There shall be included in the area the cost of which is assessable hereunder only the roadway area abutting the property between lines normally projected from the building line of the street being improved at the points of intersection with the building lines of intersecting streets.

There shall be excluded from the cost of the roadway work to be assessed hereunder:

First. The cost of all such work beyond a line 20 feet from the side thereof.

Second. The cost of all such work within the space within which street railway companies are required to pave by law, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as relieving street railway companies from bearing all the expense of paving and repairing streets and avenues between lines 2 feet exterior to the outer rails of their tracks, as required by section 5 of the act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 121, line 14, to change the number of the section from 10 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, line 17, to change the number of the section from 11 to 7.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Maryland if he will not permit the bill to be laid aside at this time?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I merely want to offer three or four committee amendments, so as to complete the committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator from Maryland not do that to-morrow morning?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It will not take five minutes. The amendments which I intend to propose are in connection with other committee amendments, though I did not offer them as the consideration of the bill progressed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "the assistant principal who shall be dean of girls of the Central High School," and insert "the assistant principal of the Central High School, dean in charge of girls of the Central High School."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That merely makes the language conform to previous provisions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, line 23, before the word "drivers," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and in lieu thereof to insert "twenty-four."

Mr. SMOOT. What is the effect of that?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say in regard to that amendment that we had provided for the purchase of motor vehicles, but have not provided for any drivers for them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I also offer an additional amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 111, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized to effect an adjustment of boundaries and an exchange of lands in the District of Columbia with the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad, in accordance with the plat or drawing on file in the Office of the Chief of Engineers and designated E. D. 12968/531, whereby on the left bank of the Anacostia River said railroad company shall release, quitclaim, and convey to the United States the certain lands along the Anacostia River riverward of the line shown on said plat and needed for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, and the United States shall release and quitclaim to said railroad company any right, title, interest, or claim in or to certain lands shoreward of said line, as shown on said plat, and will permit the extension of said company's right of way to include the triangle of land 262.10 feet on the hypotenuse lying at the junction of the railroad bridge and the original shore line of the said river, as shown on said plat, and whereby, on the right bank of the Anacostia River, the United States shall permit the rights of way of the said railroad company for its entrance into the city of Washington to be consolidated, between the bulkhead of the railroad bridge at the Anacostia River and the south line of L Street south, into one right of way of equal top width, according to the lines of said plat, and the United States and the said railroad company shall reciprocally release, quitclaim, and convey to each other the portions of square south of 1080, so called, and the accretions to the same lying respectively, northward and southward of the division line shown on said plat, and the said railroad company shall release, quitclaim, and confirm to the United States the title to all land along and adjacent to the Anacostia River from the bulkhead of the present railroad bridge to Fifteenth Street east, exterior to the portion of square south of 1080 to be released to said railroad company as shown on said plat, together with all appurtenances and riparian rights, privileges, and advantages and subject only to the consolidated right of way as hereinbefore stated and delineated on said plat.

And the Secretary of War is further authorized and directed on behalf of the United States to make, execute, and deliver and to accept from said railroad company such deeds of conveyance of quitclaim or other assurances of title as, in the opinion of the Attorney General, may be necessary or appropriate to effect such adjustment of boundaries and exchange of lands. Provided, That all expenses of recording such deeds and other expenses incidental to the execution of such exchanges shall be borne by the said railroad company: Provided further, That upon the effectuation of the adjustment of boundaries and exchange of lands herein provided for, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to close that portion of L Street south lying between Water Street and the Commodore Barney Circle, and to permit the use and occupation of the same by the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railroad Co. in connection with the consolidated right of way authorized by this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I offer another amendment, to follow the amendment just agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert the following:

In connection with the said reclamation and development of the river and flats the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire, for and on behalf of the United States, by purchase or by condemnation, for highway and park purposes, the fee simple and absolute title to all lands, required for said objects and not now owned by the United States, in and along the Anacostia River from the Anacostia Bridge to the center line of East Capitol Street, embraced within the area lying between the lines, one on each side of the river, following approximately the contour of 10 feet elevation above the plane of mean low water at the United States Navy Yard; and the Secretary of War is further authorized to acquire for the United States, by purchase or condemnation, for highway and park purposes, in connection with the said reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, the fee simple and absolute title to all lands, required for said objects and not now owned by the United States, in and along the Anacostia River in the section thereof running from the center line of East Capitol Street to the northeast boundary line of the District of Columbia, embraced within the limits designated "Taking Line," one on each bank of the river in said section, as indicated on the map entitled "Reclamation Anacostia River Flats, D. C., Land Map," approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and the Secretary of War, as attested and authenticated by their respective signatures and the seal of the War Department, bearing date the 24th day of May, 1916, recorded and filed in the office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, under Engineer Department File No. 12968/525; and the appropriation herein made for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, and all appropriations heretofore made for said purpose are hereby made available for the purchase or condemnation of all of the said lands hereinbefore authorized to be acquired and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages for said lands and the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings in the event that it is necessary to institute such condemnation proceedings: Provided, That if said lands or any part thereof can not be acquired by purchase from the owners thereof at a price satisfactory to the Secretary of War, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon request of the Secretary of War, shall institute condemnation proceedings to acquire such lands under the provisions of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he will not allow the bill to be temporarily laid aside at this time so that I can move to take up the calendar?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will agree to lay the bill aside temporarily, so that the Senate may take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that at not later than 6.30 o'clock this evening the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with order No. 452, where we left off the last time the calendar was under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, while not objecting as yet, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he will not consent to go back to the beginning of the calendar, and take bills up from that point?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I can not do that.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I want to state the situation in just a word or two.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? If there is an objection, that is the end of it. If there is none, then we are losing time. Is there any objection?

Mr. STERLING. I will not object now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 13391) to amend an act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by adding a new section, was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency not being present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

STEAMSHIP "REPUBLIC."

The bill (S. 5985) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the steamship Republic to be enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the steamship Walkure, admitted to American registry as the steamship Republic, which was sunk in the harbor of Papeete, Tahiti, raised and repaired by American enterprise, capital, and labor, to be enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS ON RECLAMATION ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 5014) to amend section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912, providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "or," to insert "final"; and in line 9, after the word "until," to strike out "all sums due the United States on account of such land or water right at the time of issuance of final homestead or desert-land certificate or water-right certificate have been paid" and insert "after the payment of all sums due the United States on account of such land or water right at the time of the submission of proof entitling the homestead or desert-land entryman to such patent or the purchaser to such final water-right certificate," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso to section 1 of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 265), entitled "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes," be amended to read as follows:

Provided, That no such patent or final water-right certificate shall issue until after the payment of all sums due the United States on account of such land or water right at the time of the submission of proof entitling the homestead or desert-land entryman to such patent or the purchaser to such final water-right certificate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN IDAHO.

The bill (S. 1740) to repeal an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and to revoke the grant made thereby, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It repeals an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, certain lands for reservoir purposes," approved June 7, 1912, and the grant thereby made to the city of Twin Falls, Idaho, for the benefit of said city is revoked and declared of no effect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

The bill (S. 5496) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908 (35 Stat., 169), so as to read as follows:

Sec. 5. That at any time after any sale of unentered lands has been made in the manner and for the purpose mentioned in this act patent shall issue to the purchaser thereof upon payment to the receiver of the minimum price of $1.25 per acre, or such other price as may have been fixed by law for such lands, together with the usual fees and commissions charged in entry of like lands under the homestead laws. But purchasers at a sale of unentered lands shall have the qualification of homestead entrymen, and not more than 160 acres of such lands shall be sold to any one purchaser under the provisions of this act. This limitation shall not apply to sales to the State, but shall apply to purchases from the State of unentered lands bid in for the State. Any part of the purchase money arising from the sale of any lands in the manner and for the purposes provided in this act, which shall be in excess of the payments herein required and of the total drainage charges assessed against such lands, shall be paid to the county treasurer of the county in which the land is situated to be used for the construction and maintenance of canals, ditches, and other work connected with the drainage of swampy, wet, and overflowed lands in such county.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 1061) to allow additional entries under the enlarged homestead act was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, after line 10, to insert:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to soldiers' additional homestead entries made under section 2306, United States Revised Statutes, or acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person otherwise qualified who has obtained title under the homestead laws to less than one quarter section of land may make entry and obtain title under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for enlarged homesteads," approved February 19, 1909, for such an area of public land as will, when one-half of such area is added to the area of the lands to which he has already obtained title, not exceed one quarter section: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to apply to soldiers' additional homestead entries made under section 2306, United States Revised Statutes, or acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF HOMESTEAD ACT.

The bill (S. 2383) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 2291 and 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 14, after the words "not less than," to strike out "$150" and insert "$300," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions pertaining to cultivation by entrymen of homestead lands as set forth in the section of the act approved June 6, 1912, entitled "An act to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads," be amended to read as follows:

Provided further, That the entryman shall, in order to comply with the requirements of cultivation herein provided for, cultivate not less than one-sixteenth of the area of his entry, beginning with the second year of the entry, and not less than one-eighth, beginning with the third year of the entry, and until final proof, except that in the case of entries under section 6 of the enlarged-homestead law double the area of cultivation herein provided shall be required: And provided further, That whenever the lands entered are covered with a growth of poles, brush, and scrub timber the entryman in lieu of cultivation required herein may make improvements upon his entry by slashing, clearing, or in any other way preparing the land for cultivation, said improvements to aggregate an amount of not less than $300: And provided further, That the above provision as to cultivation shall not apply to entries under the act of April 28, 1904, commonly known as the Kinkaid Act, or entries under the act of June 17, 1902, commonly known as the reclamation act, and that the provisions of this section relative to the homestead period shall apply to all unperfected entries as well as entries hereafter made upon which residence is required."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOISE & ARROWROCK RAILROAD.

The bill (H. R. 11156) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be appraised and to sell the Boise & Arrowrock Railroad, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The bill (S. 6116) providing for the taxation of the lands of the Winnebago Indians and the Omaha Indians in the State of Nebraska, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all of the lands in the State of Nebraska belonging to the members of the tribe of Winnebago Indians held under trust patents of allotments, and upon which the 25-year trust period shall have expired, or shall expire, and which trust period shall have been or shall be extended as provided by law, shall be, and the same are hereby, made subject to appraisal and assessment for the purposes of taxation and subject to taxation for local, school district, road district, county, and State purposes, as provided by the laws of the State of Nebraska now in force or to be hereinafter enacted.

That all of the lands in the State of Nebraska belonging to the members of the tribe of Omaha Indians now held under trust patents of allotments issued in 1885 or subsequent thereto, and upon which the 25-year trust period shall have expired, and which trust period shall have been extended, as provided by law, shall be, and the same are hereby, made subject to appraisal and assessment for the purposes of taxation and subject to taxation for local, school district, road district, county, and State purposes, as provided by the laws of the State of Nebraska now in force or to be hereinafter enacted: Provided, That any of the lands described in section 1 and section 2 of this act, so long as the same shall be held under trust patents, shall not be subject to levy and tax sale, as provided under the laws of the State of Nebraska for the collection of such taxes; but if such tax shall not be paid within one year after the same shall become due and payable, as provided by the laws of the State of Nebraska, then the list of such unpaid and delinquent taxes on the lands of the Winnebago Indians and Omaha Indians, as above provided, shall be certified by the county treasurer of the county in which such lands are situated to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall be authorized to pay the same from any funds belonging to the Indian allottees owning such lands so taxed and arising from the rentals thereof or under his control; and in the event that no such funds shall be in the possession or under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, he shall certify that fact to the said county treasurer, which certificate shall operate as a full release and discharge of the tax assessed against the land of the Indian so without funds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 1024) for the relief of Allen M. Hiller was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1161) authorizing the promotion of an officer on the retired list of the Army who served in the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over. The matter is taken care of in the Army bill. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if this bill might not go over under Rule IX, so as to take it off the calendar under Rule VIII?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; it might just as well go over under Rule IX.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go to Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why not indefinitely postpone it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; why not indefinitely postpone it?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.

The bill (S. 1579) to correct the military record of Jacob Nice was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over. I just want to find out whether he is a deserter or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5437) to further amend the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, to extend the same to elections for United States Senators and for presidential electors, and to regulate, control, and limit campaign and other contributions and expenditures in connection with such elections, and to define corrupt practices in connection therewith, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

The bill (S. 21) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "district," to strike out "or in the Lighthouse Service generally, $150,000," and insert "$120,000," so as to read:

Constructing or purchasing and equipping a lighthouse tender to replace tenders worn out in service in the third lighthouse district, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 22, after the word "Charles," to insert "City," so as to read:

Improving lights and fog signals leading to Cape Charles City, Va., $12,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 9, to strike out: Improvements at Detroit, Mich., lighthouse depot, $53,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 11, to strike out:

Light station and fog signal at or near Sand Hills, Mich., $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 22, to insert:

SEVENTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

For the establishment of aids to navigation and improvement of existing aids in Washington and Oregon, seventeenth lighthouse district, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 8, after the words "ninety thousand dollars," to insert:

Provided, That arrangements shall be made to use for the purposes herein lands and property now belonging to the United States and being used by the Navy for naval purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 3, after the word "that," strike out "hereafter"; in line 5, after the word "purchase," strike out "equipment" and insert "and necessary equipment of one motorcycle and the"; and in line 6, after the words "operation of," to strike out "motor-propelled vehicles for transporting passengers or freight" and insert "the same," so as to read:

Sec. 4. That the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," shall be available for the purchase and necessary equipment of one motorcycle and the repair and operation of the same for use of the Lighthouse Service in the Hawaiian Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which was offered by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] some time ago, and it has the approval of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

Improving the light station, moving the fog signal, and constructing a keeper's dwelling at Great Salt Pond Light Station, R. I., $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third time, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE AT NOGALES, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 4058) making an appropriation for the construction of a bridge at Nogales, Ariz., was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

PUNISHMENT FOR FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

The bill (S. 5899) to punish persons who make false representations to settlers and others pertaining to the public lands of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have that bill read.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to take just a second to say to the Senate that the passage of that bill is recommended very strongly by the Interior Department. In fact, it was prepared by the Interior Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have not a particle of objection to the bill, but if it is going to lead to any discussion I do not want to interfere with the passage of other bills on the calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. MYERS. I do not see why it should lead to any discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Because the Senator from Missouri has just asked that it be read.

Mr. MYERS. It corrects a very bad practice in the Western States.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Missouri wants it read; that is all.

Mr. STONE. I do not know that I desire to discuss the bill, but there have been so many absolutely abominable prosecutions against people in this country of late on the charge of misrepresenting this thing and the other that I want to know what I am voting on when I vote for a bill of this type.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the objection be withdrawn long enough to let the bill be read, and then let the Senate decide whether they want it considered or not.

Mr. STONE. It will come up again.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the objection to the reading of the bill, but if it is going to lead to any discussion I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who, for a reward paid or promised to him in that behalf, shall undertake to locate for an intending purchaser, settler, or entryman any public lands of the United States subject to disposition under the public-land laws, and who shall willfully and falsely represent to such intending purchaser, settler, or entryman that any tract of land shown to him is public land of the United States subject to sale, settlement, or entry, or that it is of a particular surveyed description, with intent to deceive the person to whom such representation is made, or who, in reckless disregard of the truth, shall falsely represent to any such person that any tract of land shown to him is public land of the United States subject to sale, settlement, or entry, or that it is of a particular surveyed description, thereby deceiving the person to whom such representation is made, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $300 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOWN SITE OF TUTTLE.

The bill (H. R. 10791) for the relief of the occupants of the Tuttle town site was announced as next in order.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that that bill be passed over, because I am of the impression that the same matter was incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REPEAL OF FOREST HOMESTEAD ACT.

The bill (H. R. 10668) to repeal section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1906, known as the forest homestead act, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves," as amended by the act of February 8, 1907 (34 Stat. L., p. 883), and by the act of July 3, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 188), and that all lands within national forests in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, in South Dakota, shall be and remain subject to all other provisions of the said act of June 11, 1906, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 698) to correct the military record of John L. O'Mara and grant him an honorable discharge was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The beneficiary is a deserter. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 5504) for the relief of Louis Blanchette, alias Lewis Blanchard, alias Louis White was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. This man has too many aliases. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6097) to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope my colleague will not object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. LANE. I understand that it will lead to a prolonged discussion; and if that is so, there is no use in taking up time with it during this hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2846) to provide compensation for accidental injuries to employees of the United States resulting in disability or death was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over, Mr. President. I want to state that my reason for asking to have it go over is that this is a Senate bill, and we have a House bill on the same subject that will be reached farther on, with a favorable report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS AGAINST CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

The bill (S. 5427) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CURTIS subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Utah withdraws his objection to the consideration of Senate bill 5427.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the bill to which the Senator wants to offer one amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes. It is a bill to settle a claim against the Indians, not against the Government. It was unanimously reported from the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. So as to provide that they shall pay interest?

Mr. CURTIS. That they shall pay interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have not any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are we to take up the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "adjudicate," to strike out "all" and insert "the following," so as to read:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear, consider, and adjudicate the following claims of J. F. McMurray, as assignee, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "rendered," to strike out "expenses incurred and paid and disbursements made," so as to read:

For professional services rendered for said nations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 22, after the word "set-off," to insert "against either the assignors or the assignee of said claim, all statutes of limitations against said set-offs or counterclaims being hereby waived," so as to read:

Provided, That as to any such claims so sued upon the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or either of them, shall be permitted to interpose all proper defenses by way of counterclaim or set-off against either the assignors or the assignee of said claim, all statutes of limitations against said set-offs or counterclaims being hereby waived.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 25, after the word "owing," to insert "calculated upon a fair and equitable basis," so as to read:

Provided further, That any amount found to be owing, calculated upon a fair and equitable basis, by the said J. F. McMurray to the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations upon coal-mining leases held by him may be offset against any judgment that may be rendered in his favor upon such claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 5, after the word "claims," to insert:

Provided further, That if any of such leases are found not to be underlaid with merchantable coal, and all leases upon which royalties are not paid within 30 days after the final settlement of these matters, the same shall be canceled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, after the word "within," to strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty," and on line 18, after the word "States," to insert "any or," so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to adjust, by mutual agreement with the interested parties herein, under the terms of this act and within 60 days after its approval by the President of the United States, any or all of the matters covered by the above provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 2, after the words "expiration of," to strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty," so as to read:

And provided further, That no suit shall be instituted in the courts under this act until the expiration of 60 days after its approval by the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed, on page 2, line 24, after the word "waived," to insert the following words: "and all amounts found due to said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations under the above provision shall bear interest at the legal rate." The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution 210, to print the manuscript entitled "Command of the air" as a Senate document.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the resolution?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state to the Senator that the article is a very graphic one on the subject of aerial navigation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 6369) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 6370) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

PERMANENT EXHIBIT IN CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 3444) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. As that bill will lead to some discussion, I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

JOSEPH A. BUCKHOLDT.

The bill (H. R. 2536) for the relief of Joseph A. Buckholdt was announced as next in order.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, this is a very worthy case, and I hope the bill will be passed.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Joseph A. Buckholdt, of San Antonio, Tex., $3,000, in full compensation for injuries received by him by reason of an accident which occurred on January 26, 1914, while in the employ of the United States Government on the Panama Canal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNVEILING OF M'CLELLAN STATUE.

The bill (S. 2292) to acquire the manuscript of Charles Chaillé Long, containing an account of the unveiling of the McClellan Statue, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

TIMBER FOR MINING PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 5992) authorizing the cutting of timber for mining purposes by corporations organized in one State and conducting mining operations in another was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that had better go over.

Mr. PITTMAN. I trust there will be no objection to the consideration of this bill. It changes the law, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, in only one particular. A mining corporation in our State may cut timber for mining purposes, but foreign corporations can not. There are many corporations in our State that were organized in Colorado, Wyoming, and elsewhere.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well; I will withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," approved June 3, 1878, chapter 150, page 88, volume 20, United States Statutes at Large, and section 8 of an act entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1891, chapter 559, page 1093, volume 26, United States Statutes at Large, and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, extended so that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits to corporations incorporated under a Federal law of the United States or incorporated under the laws of a State or Territory of the United States, other than the State in which the privilege is requested, said permits to confer the same rights and benefits upon such corporations as are conferred by the aforesaid acts upon corporations incorporated in the State in which the privilege is to be exercised: Provided, That all such corporations shall first have complied with the laws of that State so as to entitle them to do business therein; but nothing herein shall operate to enlarge the rights of any railway company to cut timber on the public domain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LASSEN VOLCANIC NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (H. R. 348) to establish the Lassen Volcanic National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the State of California, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN STATES LUMBER CO.

The bill (S. 5439) for the relief of the Southern States Lumber Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the Southern States Lumber Co., a corporation, Pensacola, Fla., $603.79.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 5612) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "made," to insert "or shall make"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "will," to insert "hereafter"; in the same line, after the word "due," to strike out "within one year from the approval of this act, and may thereafter obtain extensions of time within which to pay one-half the amount of any installment which becomes due"; in line 7 to strike out "extended" and insert "due and for the period of the desired extension"; in line 14, before the word "years," to strike out "ten" and insert "eight"; in line 15, after the word "entry," to insert "nor will any extension be made for less than one year"; in line 16, after "further," to strike out the following: "That any person who hereafter makes homestead entry under said act may pay the purchase money not required at the time of entry in nine equal annual installments, commencing one year from the date of entry: And provided further," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has made or shall make homestead entry under the act approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 558), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana," etc., may obtain extensions of time within which to pay installments of purchase money, which have become due and are unpaid or which will hereafter become due by paying to the register and receiver of the land office for the district in which the lands are situated interest in advance on the amounts due and for the period of the desired extension at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and any payment so extended may at its maturity be again extended in like manner: Provided, That payment of interest on installments now due must be made in order to secure the extension; interest payments must hereafter be made at or before the maturity of the payments to be extended, and no payment will be postponed for more than eight years from the date of entry nor will any extension be made for less than one year: Provided further, That if commutation proof is submitted all the unpaid payments must be made at that time.

Sec. 2. That in case any entryman fails to make the payments, or any of them, when due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payment at or before its maturity, unless it is again extended, all rights in and to the land covered by his entry shall cease and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled.

Sec. 3. That moneys paid as interest, provided for herein, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians, the same as moneys realized from the sale of the lands.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TETON NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (H. R. 12208) adding certain lands to the Teton National Forest, Wyo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to add an additional section, as follows:

Sec. 2. That any lands within the following-described areas found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow may be included within and made a part of the Wyoming National Forest by proclamation of the President, said lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests:

Sections 9 to 15, inclusive, and sections 22, 23, and 24, all in township 25 north, range 116 west, sixth principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ELLEN B. WALKER.

The bill (S. 5974) for the relief of Ellen B. Walker was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that this bill comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs. All such claim bills ought to go to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims has a regular rule which it has been following in providing for such claims. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

MARCUS P. NORTON'S PATENTS.

The bill (S. 391) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870, authorizing the Postmaster General to continue in use in the postal service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand-stamp patents, or otherwise, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that bill will take considerable time in discussion. Let it go over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. OVERMAN. I said I think it would take considerable time, and it should not be considered now.

Mr. TOWNSEND. A similar bill has been passed by the Senate, and it has been reported favorably several times in previous Congresses. I certainly hope it will be allowed to pass.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has been before our committee for about 14 years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; time and time again.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object because it will take some time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Unless the Senator wants to discuss it it will not take time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

PILLAGER BANDS OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 6016) for the relief of the Pillager Bands of Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That said attorneys shall enter into proper contracts to be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSEBUD SIOUX RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 13298) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make payments to certain Indians of the Rosebud Sioux Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, who were enrolled and allotted under decisions of the United States district and circuit courts for the district of South Dakota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (H. R. 11958) to provide for the sale of certain Indian lands in Oklahoma, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior, upon application therefor, to sell to the county of Tillman, State of Oklahoma, at $1.25 per acre, not exceeding 160 acres, for county farm purposes, and to the town of Grandfield, Okla., not exceeding 40 acres, for cemetery purposes, of vacant undisposed-of lands within the town-site reserves in the State of Oklahoma, withdrawn by Executive orders under the act of March 20, 1906 (34 Stats. L., p. 80), the money received from the sale of said lands to be deposited in the Kiowa Indian Agency hospital fund, and to draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR DISTRICT OF MONTANA.

The bill (S. 789) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "appoint," to insert "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate"; in line 5, after the word "Montana," to strike out "by and with the consent of the Senate"; in section 2, page 1, line 12, before the word "ninth," to strike out the word "the," and after the word "ninth" to strike out the word "district" and insert the word "circuit"; and in section 3, page 2, line 6, before the word "appertaining," to strike out the word "duty" and insert the word "duties," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge for the district of Montana, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That in case of disagreement in relation thereto between the judges of said district court the senior circuit judge of the ninth circuit shall make all rules for the transaction of the business of said court and all necessary orders for the division of the work and the assignment of cases for trial.

SEC. 3. That the clerk of the district court for the district of Montana and the marshal and district attorney for said district shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said court.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

The bill (S. 3025) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. That bill was inadvertently reported from the committee. I ask that it be recommitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BLACKFEET INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 5912) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain Indian lands necessary for reservoir purposes in connection with the Blackfeet Indian reclamation project was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to expend the sum of $22,400 from any money now available for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation, in Montana, in the purchase of lands embraced in the allotments of George W. Cook and David La Breche, described as lots 3 and 5, section 27, and lots 1 and 2, section 34, township 32 north, range 13 west, together with all the improvements thereon, in consideration of the relinquishment by the allottees of all their right, title, and interest in and to said lands and improvements, and of their right to select lien land under the provisions of section 14 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., pp. 855, 859), and the release of all their claims whatsoever against the United States or the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians by reason of said lands being required for reservoir purposes in connection with the irrigation system on the aforesaid Indian reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS SMART.

The bill (S. 1361) to correct the military record of Thomas Smart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Thomas Smart, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been present with his company and regiment from the 27th day of February, 1864, to May 27, 1864: Provided, That other than as above set forth no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Thomas Smart."

EDWARD S. FARROW.

The bill (S. 1691) for the relief of Edward S. Farrow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments in line 8, after the article "a," to strike out "major" and insert "first lieutenant"; and in line 11, after the word "of," to strike out "major" and insert "first lieutenant," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the laws regulating appointments in the Army be, and they are hereby, suspended only for the purpose of this act. And the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the consent of the Senate, appoint Edward S. Farrow, late first lieutenant, Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, a first lieutenant of Infantry in the Army of the United States, and thereupon place him, the said Edward S. Farrow, upon the retired list of the Army with the rank, grade, pay, and allowances of first lieutenant, without regard to the number now authorized by law of said retired list.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 15957) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and the widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 1, line 7, before the word "Volunteer," to insert "Indiana."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 1, after line 9, to strike out:

The name of Alice E. Knapp, dependent mother of Steth B. Knapp, alias Seth B. Knapp, late of Troop B, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of Charles E. Shermer, late of Company K, Thirty-fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 10, to strike out:

The name of James J. McHale, late of Company M, Forty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Harry E. Brooks, late of Company F, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 10, after the word "and," to strike out "Musician Band" and insert "band," and, in line 11, before the word "Volunteer," to strike out "United States" and insert "Georgia," so as to make the clause read:

The name of George E. Grubbs, late of Company B, and band, Second Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 22, after the words "United States," to strike out "Army" and insert "Navy," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 15, after the words "Troop D," to insert "Fifth Regiment," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Jacob Amberg, late of Troop D, Fifth Regiment, United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 21, to strike out:

The name of William C. Winslow, late of Company I, Second United States Volunteer Engineers, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of John Shannon, late of Troop B, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senate not to agree to that amendment. The report shows that this man served from March 17, 1876, to March 16, 1881. It also shows from the medical records of the War Department the following hospital treatment:

August 19 to September 10, 1876, inflammation of the internal ear; February 11 and 12, 1879, vaccine fever; July 13 to August 28, 1880, headaches. No additional record found.

The report further states:

Two witnesses testify in 1915 that they have known the soldier since March, 1881, date of discharge, and that he was then quite deaf in one ear and has been so ever since.

Several other witnesses in 1915 testify they know soldier has been deaf for last 30 years.

Three doctors testify that the drum of left ear is ruptured and deafness has ensued and hearing of right ear is much impaired. One of these states that the present condition could easily result from such an injury as alleged in 1876, and subsequent abscess which soldier describes.

I do not think there is any question that technically this soldier is entitled to a pension, and the report of the House committee clearly shows that he has been suffering from this trouble for 30 years.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, from what report has the Senator been reading?

Mr. CURTIS. I am reading from the report of the committee of the other House.

Mr. THOMAS. There appears to be no report submitted by the Senate committee. Can the Senator inform me why the item was stricken out by the Senate committee?

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, the Senate committee struck out the item because of the fact that the soldier had delayed filing a claim for pension on the ground that his disability was the result of his Army service until 1913; but the records of the War Department show that he was treated in the hospital for inflammation of the internal ear, and, as I have stated, several witnesses testify that they know he has been deaf for 30 years. That is all set out in the House report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee disagreed to the item because of the fact that it is not shown that the man's ailment was of service origin. For the same reason the other items in the bill, on all fours with this case, have been stricken out; and if we reject the committee amendment and reinsert this item, then we ought to restore all the other items which have been stricken out of this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Any parallel or similar case can be taken care of in conference.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I did not object to this bill because it was a House bill. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions is not present; but, from what the Senator from Utah says, I think the action of the Senate committee is justified. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, but I think there is a great deal of force in the statement of the Senator from Utah, and if we begin to reinsert items which have been stricken out by the committee we will practically undo the work of the committee. I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill if the amendments of the Senate committee are to be rejected.

Mr. CURTIS. Rather than have the bill go over, I will not make the request, but will let the matter be acted on in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. It will go to conference anyhow.

Mr. THOMAS. The item will go to conference, having been stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator is going to object, I withdraw my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 12, line 26, before the words "per month," to strike out "$17" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Robert Trexler, late of Company K, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 6, to strike out:

The name of Simeon D. Morrison, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 23, to strike out:

The name of Richard Thrash, late of Troop A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 7, before the words "per month," to strike out "$17" and insert "$12," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Arthur Magoon, late of Company L, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 23, before the words "Company I," to strike out "formerly" and insert "late," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Effa M. Rule, widow of William H. Rule, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 18, to strike out:

The name of Reuben Solomon (insane), late of Company F, Fourth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month. Pay to duly appointed guardian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 22, to strike out:

The name of Daniel H. Gerald, late of Company L, Third Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 20, after the surname "Beckham," to strike out "deceased," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Charlotte M. Beckham, widow of Robert H. Beckham, late captain and commissary of subsistence, United States Volunteers, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said Robert H. Beckham until she reaches the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to strike out:

The name of Carrie A. Stillions, widow of Robert E. Stillions, late of Troop E, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the two minor children of the said Robert E. Stillions until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Lily D. Murphy, widow of Frank T. Murphy, late of Battery K, Third Regiment United States Artillery, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 14, after the words "late of," to insert "captain," and in line 16, before the words "per month," to strike out "$20" and insert "$24," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Cordelia Mulford, widow of Jacob Mulford, late of Capt. Lindsley's company, New Jersey Militia, War of 1812, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 4, to strike out:

The name of Mary A. Scott, widow of Jephtha Scott, late of Capt. Grant's company, Georgia Volunteer Mounted Infantry, Florida Indian War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I move to amend, on page 8, line 12, by striking out the figures "$30" and inserting the figures "$50." It is the case of John W. Lattimore.

Mr. President, this is one of the most pathetic cases that I have run across in all my experience. The man is entirely helpless, being totally blind and paralyzed, and is being cared for by his wife. He has no means of support. I merely want to read a few words from the affidavit of the attending physician as it appears in the report of the committee:

The present physical state, as you can see by the photographs, is that of total blindness of both eyes, a progressive paralysis of the body with an atrophy and emaciation, both progressive, of all the muscle groups. The general nervous system is completely shattered. The man is absolutely helpless, and has been for several years, and does now have to be waited upon like a baby by his wife.

I understand that this amount was limited because of a rule of the committee in the House; but the Senate has not been bound by that rule.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if the disabilities of this man were the result of his service?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; they were the result of gunshot wounds. I will ask to have the Secretary read the letter which I send to the desk.

Mr. THOMAS. I will take the Senator's word for it.

Mr. WORKS. Very well; I will not take the time to have it read, then. The disabilities were the result of wounds received in the war.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, I will say to the Senator that he is entitled not only to $50 but to $72.

Mr. WORKS. Very well; I will change my motion, then.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I say if that were the case, he would not be here asking for it in this bill. The Pension Department would allow him that.

Mr. WORKS. The reason—

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, evidently this matter will not be voted on at once, and it is very important that we should have a very brief executive session. I have been talking to several Senators, and it has been suggested that the consideration of the calendar should run until 10 minutes before adjournment time. It is a little past that now.

Mr. WORKS. I hope there will be no objection to this increase. It is a perfectly plain case, to my mind. The reason why he has not received his pension under the regular law—

Mr. STONE. It will be the first matter to be reached when we take up the calendar again.

Mr. WORKS. It can be disposed of in a second.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I will not object to letting this increase go into conference. It will be in conference if we adopt it.

Mr. STONE. Let it be voted on, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 6375) to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Aroline.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15947) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a resolution inviting the Members of the Senate to attend the unveiling of the pediment on the east front of the House wing of the Capitol at 10.30 o'clock Wednesday morning, August 2, 1916.

UNVEILING OF PEDIMENT ON HOUSE WING OF CAPITOL.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the House of Representatives has passed the following resolution (H. Res. 328):

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library shall arrange for appropriate exercises at the unveiling of the pediment on the east front of the House wing of the Capitol at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, August 2; and be it further

Resolved, That the Members of the Senate be invited to be present at the exercises.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur with this resolution:

That the Senate learns with pleasure of the invitation extended to its Members by the House of Representatives to be present at the unveiling of the pediment on the east front of the House wing of the Capitol at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, August 2, and accepts the invitation with gratification.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Caroline Ladd Crew, of Mount Holly, N. J., and the petition of Frank M. Leavitt, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Amalgamated Lithographers of America, American Federation of Labor, and a petition of Local Branch, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Glens Falls, N. Y., praying for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

LENIENCY TO IRISH PRISONERS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask leave by unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, which I will ask to have read; it is only about 10 lines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submits a report, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report (No. 740), as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, having considered the following resolutions referred to the said committee, namely:

S. Res. 236. Requesting the President to ask the British Government to exercise clemency in treatment of Irish political prisoners;

S. Res. 237. Requesting the President to advise the United States ambassador to Great Britain to use his influence, unofficially, to obtain commutation of the sentence of death of Sir Roger Casement; and Amendment to S. Res. 237, proposed by Mr. STERLING; adopted the following resolution, which I am directed to report:

Your committee deem it inexpedient that the Senate should adopt any of these resolutions at this time, and are of opinion that they would not tend to accomplish the purpose sought by them. Your committee therefore report back the resolutions and recommend that none of them be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be placed on the calendar.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRADY submitted an amendment authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to acquire the land requisite for the preservation of the Klinge Ford Valley, in the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 15774), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted an amendment providing that the Chief of Engineers be directed to appoint a board of engineer officers to collaborate with the Commission of Fine Arts in preparing and reporting a plan for the artistic and utilitarian development of the commercial water front of Washington, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that certain lands when acquired shall be a part of the park system of the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—LEORA L. MACAREY.

On motion of Mr. THOMAS (for Mr. SHAFROTH) it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 3017, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, granting a pension to Leora L. Macarey, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

STANDARDIZATION OF LIME BARRELS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5425) to standardize lime barrels having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person to sell or offer for sale lime imported in barrels from a foreign country or to sell or offer for sale lime in barrels for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia unless there shall be stencilled or otherwise clearly marked on one or both heads of the small barrel the figures '180 lbs. net' and of the large barrel the figures '280 lbs. net' before the importation or shipment and on either barrel in addition the name of the manufacturer of the lime and where manufactured, and if imported the name of the country from which it is imported."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Sec. 3. When lime is sold in interstate or foreign commerce in containers of less capacity than the standard small barrel, it shall be sold in fractional parts of said standard small barrel and the net weight of lime contained in such container shall by stencil or otherwise be clearly marked thereon, together with the name of the manufacturer thereof, and the name of the brand, if any, under which it is sold and, if imported, the name of the country from which it is imported."

And the House agree to the same.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, Mr. FERRIS presiding as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, for all the great thinkers and actors of the past and present, who have added here a little, there a little, to the progress of mankind, physically, intellectually, morally, spiritually, through science, philosophy, literature, art, government, and religious attainments, all of which have broadened our conceptions of Thee and the possibilities resident in man, which make clearer our relationship to Thee and to all mankind. Continue thus, we beseech Thee, to inspire, control, and guide us, that we may move forward to yet larger attainments in all that contributes to life. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, July 25, 1916, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural credits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on rural credits. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following House concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 50.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, requested to cancel their respective signatures to the enrolled bill (H. R. 12197) entitled "An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew."

That, upon the cancellation of said signatures, the Clerk be directed to reenroll said bill with amendments as follows: On page 1, line 8, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four"; in line 9, strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5172) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN APPROPRIATIONS DURING AUGUST.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 27, 1916.

A bill (H. R. 17172) further extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia under certain contingencies.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies," approved June 30, 1916, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of August, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, can we not have a statement in reference to it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, at the present time the following appropriation bills have not been enacted into law: The Agricultural bill, which is now in conference between the two Houses; the Army bill, which is pending in the Senate; the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which is also pending in the Senate; the Military Academy bill, which has the same status; the naval bill, which is pending, with Senate amendments, in the House Committee on Naval Affairs; and the Post Office appropriation bill, which has been presented to the President, but has not been signed.

Of these bills, the Post Office appropriation bill, of course, will become a law before the 1st of August, but it is not probable that any of the others will; and the matter that has just been read at the Clerk's desk continues the last year's appropriations for the current fiscal year for the month of August as to such bills as have not yet become law.

Mr. MANN. I approve of the limitation at least for August, although I have no doubt that at the end of August we shall have another resolution or bill extending the time for the month of September; and I do not feel at all confident that at the end of September we will not have another resolution extending the time for the month of October.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I would be sorry to have to serve notice on the country that that is going to keep us here for any such length of time. I think by the end of August we will have all these appropriation bills enacted into law, and there will be no necessity for another continuing resolution.

I considered the feasibility of having this bill so worded that it would be for the first 15 days of the month of August, but upon reflection and consultation I thought it was entirely safe and wiser to make it cover the entire month of August. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while I am perfectly willing to speed our party, and have done what I could to that effect, I feel that we are kept here unreasonably long. But there is some slight consolation in the fact that over in another body, which is delaying us, a majority of those who have to stay are Democrats, some of whom are up for reelection. If they wish to stay in Washington, I am quite willing. If the President wants to keep them here, I am quite willing. I will take my chances. We ought to have been away a month ago. I think we will be here two months longer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PAGE of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the judgment of Judge Hand, dismissing the writ of habeas corpus in the case of H. Snowden Marshall against Robert B. Gordon, Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, in which an appeal has been taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the judgment of Judge Hand, dismissing the writ of habeas corpus in the case of H. Snowden Marshall against Robert B. Gordon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the judgment referred to:

At a term of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, held in the post-office building in the city of New York on the 21st day of July, 1916.

Present: The Hon. Learned Hand, judge.
United States, ex rel. H. Snowden Marshall, against Robert B. Gordon, Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives of the United States.

A writ of habeas corpus having been issued out of this court, granted by Hon. Augustus N. Hand, one of the judges, directed to Robert B. Gordon, the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives of the United States requiring him to produce the body of H. Snowden Marshall before this court, and the said Sergeant at Arms having, pursuant to the writ, produced said H. Snowden Marshall and made a return to the writ from which it appears that he arrested said Marshall by virtue of a warrant duly issued by the House of Representatives of the United States, and signed by the Speaker of the House; and the court having ordered, on consent of both parties, that the return might be amended and that further and supplemental return to the writ might be made by the Sergeant at Arms as he or the House might be advised; and the court having directed that said H. Snowden Marshall should be allowed to go upon his own recognizance pending the hearing of the writ; and the said Robert B. Gordon, Sergeant at Arms, as well as for himself and as the respondent herein on behalf of the House of Representatives, having made and filed an amended and further return to the said writ of habeas corpus, and no traverse thereto having been made by the relator; and the hearing on said writ having duly and regularly come on to be heard,

Now, after hearing John C. Spooner and Charles P. Spooner, Esqs., of counsel for the relator in support of said writ, and D. Cady Herrick, Martin W. Littleton, and Henry M. Goldfogle, Esqs., of counsel for the respondent in opposition thereto, and upon reading and filing the said writ, the petition of H. Snowden Marshall, on which it was granted, and the return of the respondent and the several orders made thereon, and the amended return of the respondent herein, and due deliberation having been had thereon,

It is, on the motion of D. Cady Herrick, Martin W. Littleton, and Henry M. Goldfogle, Esqs., the attorneys for the respondent,

Ordered, That the aforesaid writ of habeas corpus be and it hereby is dismissed; and upon the motion of said relator it is Further ordered, That the relator be retained in the custody of the court on his own recognizances until the 1st of December, 1916, and if no appeal be taken on or before August 15, 1916, he be on that day remanded to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms; and if an appeal be taken on or before that day he be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant at Arms on the 1st day of December, 1916.

LEARNED HAND, District Judge.

United States district court, southern district of New York. Filed July 22, 1916.

A true copy.

ALEX. GILCHRIST, Jr., Clerk.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POUL. Mr. Speaker, from time to time during this Congress we have read very bitter attacks made upon the Secretary of the Navy. It has been noticed, no doubt, that these attacks were general in their character. It is easy to say mean generalities about any man. It is easy to ridicule men. The charges against this man have all been general in their character. There has not been one single charge that specified anything dishonorable ever done by Josephus Daniels, now Secretary of the Navy.

I wish that all the people of the United States knew this man as his home people know him. He is a clean man. He is a good man. He will never do anything dirty. Never in his life have his hands been soiled by dishonor, and I think I can properly bestow upon this loyal American the beautiful tribute bestowed by Secretary Thomas F. Bayard upon Mr. Cleveland—he presides over a typical American home, for around his fireside are gathered innocent and guileless childhood, gracious and refined womanhood, lofty integrity and perfect manhood. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the remarks of Senator THOMAS, delivered in the Senate of the United States on June 21, on naval management and discipline.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the speech of Senator THOMAS. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman from North Carolina to ask to insert in the RECORD the speech delivered by Senator THOMAS in the Senate. That speech has already been printed in the RECORD. What good does it do to duplicate it now? In other words, the speech having been printed in the RECORD in large type in its proper place, what advantage is it now to insert it in the RECORD again in nonpareil type, which nobody can read.

Mr. POUL. I do not remember exactly how it comes about, but it was stated to me there is some saving to the Government by this procedure.

Mr. MANN. There can not be any saving to the Government by inserting it in the RECORD a second time. Mr. Speaker, this is an unheard-of proposition to insert in the House proceedings a speech that has already been delivered in the Senate of the United States and printed in the record of the Senate proceedings. I shall have to object for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

PEDIMENT ON THE EAST FRONT OF THE HOUSE WING.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution authorizing the Committee on the Library to arrange for the ceremony of the unveiling of the pediment, which has just been completed on the east front of the House wing of the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. Let the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 328.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on the Library shall arrange for appropriate exercises at the unveiling of the pediment on the east front of the House wing of the Capitol at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, August 2; and be it further

Resolved, That the Members of the Senate be invited to be present at the exercises.

Mr. MANN. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that where it says "Resolved by the House of Representatives" the words "by the House of Representatives" be omitted. This is a House resolution.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "by the House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. My attention was diverted when the first part of the resolution was read. Does this authorize the Committee on the Library to make the arrangements?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman state to the House what is likely to be the plan?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the exercises that have been provided for are very simple. Except a very few remarks by myself, the only address will be delivered by the Speaker of the House, Mr. CLARK. At the suggestion of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building, Mr. Woods, the Speaker's platform and seats for the accommodation of Members of the two Houses will be put out here under the big elm east of the House wing.

Mr. MANN. As I understand from talking with the people who have been taking an interest in this matter, including the distinguished gentleman from Texas, it is the expectation that there will be chairs put out here under the elm just east of the House wing of the Capitol, and that the exercises will be held out of doors at a place where people can see the statuary that will be unveiled.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is correct; and, if the gentleman will pardon me, the hour was suggested by the artist, Mr. Bartlett, because at that time there will be a better view of the statuary.

Mr. MANN. The sun will be shining on the statuary if it is not cloudy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If it should be raining I suppose they will be likely to come inside here after the unveiling. I understand that the Superintendent of the Capitol expects to put about 1,000 chairs out here on the grounds and that Speaker CLARK will make a speech and that the Marine Band will be there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is it exactly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MEXICO.

Mr. McLEMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a resolution adopted at a meeting of 300 American citizens who are refugees from Mexico.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD, as an extension of his remarks, a resolution adopted by some 300 Americans who are refugees from Mexico. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE DEMOCRACY OF THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by Hon. Daniel C. Roper at Alexandria Bay, N. Y., on June 27, at a convention of postmasters held there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by Hon. Daniel C. Roper, First Assistant Postmaster General. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, when was this speech delivered?

Mr. RAGSDALE. On June 27, 1916, at Alexandria Bay, N. Y.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back to the House the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), together with the Senate amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. (H. Rept. 1049.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill, with the Senate amendments, will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill, with the Senate amendments, and to disagree to all of the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), to disagree to all of the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I want to submit an inquiry to the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not think it will embarrass him as a conferee to answer it. It is with reference to an amendment adopted by the Senate providing for a lump-sum appropriation of $250,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Navy Department here in the District of Columbia. That is a matter which, under the rules of the House, belongs to another bill and another committee. Personally I do not doubt that more clerks will be needed in the Navy Department by reason of the increased appropriations and work provided for by Congress, but I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has recently had before it representatives from the Navy Department on the subject of the additional clerks who will be needed. That matter is now under consideration by that subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and I have no doubt they will present to the House a report which will give to the House and Senate an opportunity to directly pass on the number of clerks who will be necessary, and not by way of a conference report. In addition to that, it seems to me the matter ought to come up in the regular way, so that the House may know what clerks will be needed, and not pass a lump-sum appropriation of $250,000, giving to the Navy Department the right to name clerks and fix salaries without an opportunity for the Congress to express an opinion on the subject. I want to ask the gentleman if, under these circumstances, he will assure the House that if the Senate conferees are not willing to strike that amendment out of the bill, he will give the House an opportunity to pass on it? Certainly it ought not to be considered by two committees.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. FITZGERALD, spoke to me about it, and said that his committee was considering that matter and expected to report a bill caring for the matter. I said to him that that being the fact, I was sure the conferees on the part of the House would govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does that mean, I will ask the gentleman, that if the conferees of the Senate are unwilling to yield on the matter the House conferees will come back to the House and permit the House to express itself on the proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. It does.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Following the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, I understand, or have been given to understand, that the Senate conferees are already instructed not to recede. Does that instruction apply to the building program only, or does it apply to the entire bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I have no information on the subject at all, except the conversation I heard between the gentleman and a Member of the House relating to the building program.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Senate conferees have been instructed on the building program?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not; all I heard in reference to it is the conversation that I have referred to.

Mr. BRITTEN. That was information given to several Members of the House that the Senate conferees had been instructed on the building program.

Mr. MANN. Instructed by whom?

Mr. BRITTEN. By the Senate.

Mr. MANN. If they were instructed by the Senate, it should have accompanied the message.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then I have been entirely misled, and the instruction must have come from the White House.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what the gentleman refers to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. I do not like to object to the bill, but I would like six or eight minutes to call the attention of the chairman and others to several amendments.

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield for the gentleman to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have 10 minutes to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have 10 minutes to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when this bill passed the House it carried an appropriation of approximately $269,000,000. With the Senate amendments, it now carries upward of $315,000,000. The Senate has added 250 amendments to the House bill. In short, the Senate has rewritten the bill from lid to lid.

Mr. Speaker, I am for the preparedness program. I shall not put myself, nor permit anyone else to put me, in the position of opposing a reasonable preparedness program. I shall not object to this bill going to conference, nor shall I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present when the bill goes to conference. And while I am not going to make any threats to the members of the Naval Committee or the men who will serve as conferees on the part of the House, I want to say to them now, and give them fair notice and fair warning, that if the conferees yield upon some of the Senate amendments there must be a quorum here when the conference report is finally adopted.

I realize that there is no quorum present in the city to-day, and very likely we will be far short of a quorum when the conference report is finally brought to the House. I am not responsible for absenteeism of the House. I am always here, and will be when the conference report comes back.

I want briefly to call the attention of the House, as I did the other day, to Senate amendment No. 89, which provides for an addition of 82 new rear admirals. That number is out of all proportion to a well-balanced navy. Twenty-five or thirty rear admirals, at most, would make a well-balanced and well-constituted navy, as far as the officers of the line are concerned. There are to-day 145 rear admirals on the retired list, now drawing a salary of $4,500 per year. There are 757 naval officers to-day on the retired list, and this bill carries an item of $3,500,000 to pay retired officers. If this amendment returns here substantially in the shape that it now it, with a provision for 82 new rear admirals, I reiterate that it must take a quorum to pass it. I shall demand a yea-and-nay vote.

I want to call attention of the conferees to amendment 98, which is short, brief, and peculiar. I am well satisfied that no Senator put that amendment into the bill. The House provision was all right. I undertake to say that no Senator wrote this amendment. Somebody connected with the Navy Department looking after an easy job, looking after an opportunity to draw money from the Government, even though he may have brought on his sickness as a result of his own vicious habits.

I want to call attention to amendment 107, which the chairman of the Naval Committee said the other day that the Comptroller of the Treasury decided wrongfully and in violation of the law. I do not know what would befall this country if it was not for the Comptroller of the Treasury. For 16 years that great office was presided over by a man from my district, Robert J. Tracewell, a Republican, a man who was able and honest, a man who held up President Roosevelt when he was trying to put across something not on the square. He was followed by a gentleman from the fourth Indiana district, the Hon. George Downey, equally able and fearless, and now the office is presided over by a brave, competent, efficient, and able comptroller, Mr. Warwick.

Mr. Speaker, I read the debates on amendment 107 when it was going through the Senate. They said it only applied to one person, and that was the clerk of the Naval Committee of the House. This is not so. This is not a matter easy for me to talk about, but I made up my mind to call a spade a spade. Amendment 107 is covered all over with graft.

It is literally reeking with it. The clerk of this Naval Committee, a competent man, able, efficient, is a graduate of Annapolis. It cost the people of this country between $50,000 and $60,000 to graduate him. He is now a retired naval officer. How much his retired pay is I do not know, but I imagine somewhere in the neighborhood of $2,000, and he is now the clerk to this great committee. I undertake to say that if he is able to handle the details of this great bill, then he is perfectly able to work for Uncle Sam and repay the money that the people of this country have paid for his education.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I can not yield now. The Senate was wrong. I am reliably informed that instead of amendment 107 applying only to the clerk of the Naval Committee it applies to between 20 and 30 men occupying the same or similar positions to the clerk of this committee. Briefly, I want to call attention to one gentleman, Gen. Marshall, who for years was Chief of the Bureau of Engineers in the War Department, at a salary of $6,000 a year. He was retired, as I recollect, a year ago upon a salary of $4,500 per year. Gen. Marshall is to-day the consulting engineer in the Interior Department for the reclamation projects out West upon a salary of $5,000 a year, making a total of $9,500 per year. When he was Chief of the Army Engineers he never handled a project to exceed $50,000,000 a year, but as chief of the engineers of the Reclamation Service he is handling projects involving $200,000,000.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Is he not worth $9,500 a year, then?

Mr. COX. We have already expended $100,000,000 on those projects; we will have to put $100,000,000 more in them before they are completed, and if Gen. Marshall is able to be consulting engineer of those projects, the head of that great department, why is he not able to still serve his country as Chief of the Board of Army Engineers?

Mr. Speaker, sometimes the Senate does a wise thing, not often, but sometimes it makes a mistake and passes real, genuine, efficient legislation. Last spring it incorporated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill what is known as section 6. This section prohibits a person from drawing two salaries where the aggregate of the two exceeds $2,000 per annum, but it provided that it should not apply to retired officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps whenever they may be appointed or elected to public office or whenever the President shall appoint them to office, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and so forth. Amendment 107 proposes to repeal section 6, so far as it applies to any Army or Navy officer, or any marine officer, and so forth. The proposed Senate amendment is class legislation of the worst sort. It is favoritism, unheard of in legislation. Many score of these 757 retired Navy officers are under 50 years of age. Scores of them are between 38 and 45 years of age. Some way the officers after being graduated at Annapolis at public expense find themselves afflicted with some imaginary disease, and immediately begin to pull every string known to them to retire in order to get retired pay. But the usual and, I think, almost universal rule is that on being retired and placed on the pay roll is a quick cure, a "sure-shot" remedy for all their aches and ills, because no sooner are they retired than they begin to cast about to seek other lucrative employment with the Government of the United States or with private employers. Their sickness or injury received by them in line of duty soon disappears upon retirement, drawing a good, fat salary from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, recently I had the legislative reference bureau of the Library to look up some data for me. I made a mistake the other day in giving the ages of some of the great European generals now commanding the armies of Europe, and I want to correct it. Let me compare our retirement Army and Navy list with that of some of the great European nations now involved in that frightful conflict. Gen. von Hindenburg, Germany's great field marshal, who for nearly two years has held back the horde of Russians 175,000,000 strong, is 69 years of age. Gen. von Mackensen, his right-hand man, is 67 years of age. Gen. von Kluck, who led the German Army into France, is 70 years of age. Gen. Joffre, the hero of all France, if not the world, is 64½ years old. Paul Pau, a man who went through the Franco-Prussian War, who lost an arm in that conflict, is 68 years of age. Lord Kitchener at the time of his death was 66 years of age—the man who took England's army from a mere army on paper and raised it to a fighting machine of 4,000,000 units in 18 months' time. In our country all these great generals—every one of them, without exception—would be retired, drawing their $4,500 per year retired pay, although they may be in perfect physical and mental health; but not one of these generals of our Army would be on the firing line; not one would be in the danger zone; all would be safe at home on the Government pay roll. We retire our Army and Navy officers at the ages of 62 and 64.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, 64 years of age for the Army.

Mr. COX. Sixty-two and sixty-four. I have looked the question up, and I am right.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the gentleman stated—

Mr. COX. I looked up the question, and I refuse to be interrupted. We retire our Army and Navy officers in this country at the ages of from 62 to 64.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COX. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for five minutes—if for nothing more than to set himself right on his figures, for I know he wants to be correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there is another graduate of Annapolis, 42 or 43 years of age, who is drawing down twenty-three or twenty-four hundred dollars a year in retired salary. After the taxpayers of this country spent upon him in educating him at Annapolis between $50,000 and $60,000, he is now drawing down a salary of $2,400 in the subtreasury at the city of Philadelphia. There is another man down in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing on a per diem of $4.50 per day, a retired officer, drawing down a good fat slice of retired pay; and another at the White House—they are all around, everywhere—and yet the Senator told us in debate that there was only one man who would be affected by amendment No. 107, and that man was the clerk to the House Naval Committee, and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs undertakes to tell the House that the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury was wrong. I undertake to say that the decision of the comptroller was right, and that it is within the law. What does amendment No. 107 provide? Section 6, mentioned in that amendment, provides that it shall not apply to officials of the Army and Navy or Marine Corps when appointed or elected to a public office, or whenever the President shall appoint them to office by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. That is what section 6 provides. It does not apply to those two classes of men. The Clerk of the Committee on Naval Affairs does not come within either of these two exceptions. Gen. Marshall does not come within these exceptions, nor does the man in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, nor the man working at Philadelphia, or the 20 or 25 others.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fault is not so much with these men, although I insist that patriotism would tell these men to get on the firing line for their country instead of seeking to get private or public jobs. I hope the time will come when there will be a military and a naval committee appointed in this House that will have the nerve and the strength to back it up, to remodel, remold, and revamp all of our retired list and not to permit our officers of the Army and Navy to retire before they reach the age of 70 years. Last summer two Army men in the very prime of life, graduates of West Point, long before they reached the age of 64, were permitted to retire and hire themselves to private manufacturers making powder and other munitions of war, no doubt at an enormous salary. They are now drawing, at the expense of the people, a large salary as retired officers. It cost the people of the country between $50,000 and $60,000 to educate them. Mr. Speaker, it is unjust to the people to permit these men to retire before they reach the proper age and accept private employment. A Member of the House said to me yesterday, "Oh, Cox, that is a little thing, I would not mention it." Little! Let me say to you gentlemen that the $315,000,000 that is to be raised by taxation is not paid in lump sums by the taxpayers, but it is paid in small amounts. I hope, when these conferees meet, that amendment 89 will not come back to this House in the shape in which it is now written.

I said the other day that it made an addition of 82 new rear admirals. If I am wrong, criticize Victor Blue and not myself, because he is the man who figured it out for me and told me there were 82 new rear admirals provided for in this amendment.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COX. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BRITTEN. Surgeon Gen. Blue is not in the Navy.

Mr. COX. Well, Victor Blue is the man who figured it out for me; he is in the Navy, no doubt about that.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to one other amendment. It is the amendment relating to the Charleston Navy Yard. I think every Secretary of the Navy for the past 20 years, with one exception, has recommended the abandonment of the Charleston Navy Yard for the purpose of building big battleships in it. Even Capt. Hobson, of Alabama, whom we all thought crazy on the question of a big Navy; but we are out Hobsoning Hobson in this navy yard proposition. The last session of Congress in which he was a Member he vigorously opposed the enlargement of this navy yard; and this is the report of every naval constructor who knows anything about the building of battleships, that big battleships can not be built in this navy yard because of the shallowness of the water; and yet there is an amendment which appropriates $1,085,000 for the enlargement of this navy yard. We had just as well pour this money into the Atlantic Ocean for all the good it will do as to undertake to equip this navy yard to build big battleships in. Mr. Speaker, I am for an honest increase in preparedness of our Navy, because I know it is the first line of defense of any nation, but I am opposed to the "deadwood and graft" in this bill. Every dollar of it ought to be cut out of here. It is my earnest desire that the House conferees will see to it that every Senate amendment agreed to will bring the people a hundred cents worth of preparedness in return.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The question is on the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have three minutes, or five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the first line of defense, the Navy. I am in harmony with the Senate amendments that would speed the construction of battleships and cruisers and necessary auxiliaries. It will cost something, yes. I should be glad if in administration and legislation we could have legislation that will bring the men to operate the Navy, not only officers but seamen. We have not enough now to man the ships we have. I trust that conditions will be taken into consideration. Having said that much I shall not object to this bill going to conference, but I want to say to you that from a hasty examination of this bill in my judgment there are millions of dollars to be appropriated, unless the conferees may lop off the matters that will not aid the preparation of the first line of defense. To particularize I will give you one. Gentlemen are quite familiar with the Charleston Navy Yard. How many millions of dollars has it cost, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. PADGETT. I think there have been appropriated something like six or seven million dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Six or seven million dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the chairman adding to that the three or four million put on by the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. No; I am speaking in the past. Now, then, the Charleston Navy Yard has not been utilized, and in my judgment, without being an engineer and from inquiry, it never will be utilized. For dredging, for a dry dock, there was something from a million to a million and a half provided for in the Senate amendment to this bill for this navy yard—a useless expenditure. I trust the House conferees will not agree to this amendment, but there are real improvements that should be agreed to.

Take Pensacola. I believe it is intended to be made a principal aviation station. I have nothing to criticize, but we must leave to the conferees the selection of the proper site. We need aviation. Now, if we are going loony about anything in these matters it is the scientific commissions. We have a Bureau of Standards at Washington that has a world-wide reputation, and a great deal of money has been expended upon it. It is doing a great work. Why, under the leadership of Admiral—I believe that was his title—Melville, in 1896, an experimental engineering station was created at Annapolis. I have no reason to criticize it. I presume it does good work.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Illinois may be given 5 additional minutes; would the gentleman like 5 or 10?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, if I could get 10—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. That is, at Annapolis. Now this bill carries, page 149, for maintenance of engineering station at Annapolis, $105,000, for the coming fiscal year. We have war colleges, naval colleges, engineering stations, here, there, yonder. I believe expenditures for further plants will be money thrown away. We have more plants now than can be utilized. Mr.

Speaker, I especially call attention to Senate amendment 68, on page 45 of the bill, for experimental and research laboratory, to be located at the city of Washington, at a cost not exceeding $2,000,000 on land owned by the Government.

I believe and charge that this is a useless expenditure and will duplicate work now being done at many stations owned by the Government. The Senate amendment is hitched on to a provision in the bill as it passed the House and was subject to a point of order, being legislation on a general appropriation bill under the rules of the House, but escaped the point of order by a special rule making it in order without any consideration whatever in the House of Representatives—

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. That provision that it should be placed at Washington was offered in the Senate and was adopted upon the motion of Senator GALLINGER.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care who offered it; it passed.

Mr. PADGETT. And the House conferees will give due consideration to it in the conference committee.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care upon whose motion it passed, but we are rich in naval stations and navy yards, war colleges and scientific and engineering plants. What we need, in my opinion, is real work for defense without further squandering money upon useless navy yards and plants.

I wish to emphasize my belief that we are rich in engineering ability in both the Army and the Navy. We have places in which to house them, and if they are to be efficient, as you create new buildings, together with new commissions to be created in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, you take from the plants that exist in order to man the new ones. So I could run along here through these amendments. And I say that if this was being considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or if it had been considered last January, when this bill should have been reported, under the five-minute rule, we could have had intelligent discussion and consideration of the bill.

It is said in the public prints—I do not know whether it is so or not, but if it is not, any gentleman can deny it—that the decree has gone forth by your President—and he is my President, and the President of all of us—that this bill is to be agreed to without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t" in the Senate amendments.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that I have never heard anything of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. I have read it in the public prints, and I was credulous enough to believe that it might be true, when I knew that so far as the Democratic Party is concerned in this House and in the Senate, when the President of the United States directs legislation, although you may resort to profane swearing in the cloakrooms, it is written into law.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman understand that the report from the White House relates only to the building program in the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand that it was so stated. I am for the cruisers and battleships and necessary auxiliaries for the first line of defense. The "busy bees" will get in their work all along the line to make pork-barrel legislation and appropriation. Talk about the pork-barrel river and harbor bill! In my judgment, from the hasty examination of pork barrels proposed in this bill, it makes the river and harbor bill respectable.

Now, that is all I want to say. You ask me if I antagonize it? No. I say, again, I am for the battleships and the cruisers and necessary auxiliaries for the first line of defense, upon which we must depend, and I have made these remarks with the desire—I can scarcely say the expectation—that useless items in the bill may be cut out in conference.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRITTEN. I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the conferees of the House will see that the Members of the House get an opportunity to vote at least on the building program and on the personnel increase embodied in this bill as sent over by the Senate; and I say that for this reason, namely, that the increases in this bill as passed by the Senate are very largely in accord with the amendments offered by the Republican side, the minority of the House, during the five-minute debate on the bill. The minority contended all along for 8 ships this year. We also desired 8 ships the next year—a 16 first-line ship program that would put our Navy in second place as quickly as possible, at the hands of the present Congress; 8 ships this session and 8 ships next session. The amendment offered at the time by my friend from Massachusetts and colleague on the committee [Mr. ROBERTS] provided for the personnel increase, or substantially what the Senate bill now provides. They were defeated, it is true, in the House, but I think on matters so important as the personnel increase and the building program designated in the bill they at least should come back to the House and be voted on. The "small-navy" men, so called, in the House are in favor of a vote. They represent certain constituencies who desire to know where their Members stand in Congress. The so-called "big-navy" men have certain constituencies who desire to know where they stand on this bill; and I am more or less reliably assured by our conferees on the committee that the House will have an opportunity to vote on these sections in the bill.

My good friend from Indiana [Mr. COX] a few moments ago criticized certain Navy and Army officers who are drawing pensions and who are on some Government pay roll. He indicated that these gentlemen, with their good health and their knowledge which the country has paid to give them, should insist on going back into the military service. He knows just as well as you and I do that they can not go back in the service if they wanted to. They have been retired for specific reasons, and now they are giving the Government the best that is in them, and for which the Government has in part paid. He refers to an expenditure of $50,000 or $60,000 for educating these men. In our wildest dreams in committee we have never understood it cost that much to educate a man at Annapolis.

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] referred to the Charleston Navy Yard, and that recalls to my mind that most of the good amendments provided in this bill by the Senate were minority amendments offered on the floor of this House and defeated. Of course, no amendment was offered by us to improve the Charleston Navy Yard. The Senate has appropriated a million for dry-dock extension there.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not believe for a moment that the House conferees will yield on that Charleston Navy Yard appropriation?

Mr. BRITTEN. I think they will.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not think they ought to do so?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I do not think they ought to do so.

Mr. COX. I quite agree with the gentleman on that. Even Capt. Hobson in his wildest dreams of a big Navy openly fought the Charleston Navy Yard the last session he was here.

Mr. KELLEY. Does the gentleman also notice that the Senate struck out the provision authorizing a commission to study the Atlantic seaboard with a view of determining a suitable base south of Cape Hatteras?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I have observed that.

Mr. KELLEY. Which seems to indicate that it is their intention to make Charleston that base.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will say to my colleague on the committee [Mr. KELLEY] that there is no question about what the House and Senate intend to do with the Charleston Navy Yard. It will be made a big-ship yard. That is perfectly evident in this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Here is what occurred on the Charleston yard appropriation. Not before the entire Committee on Naval Affairs was the matter discussed, but it was discussed in the subcommittee, and a matter of $175,000 was put in the bill in the House for dredging the Cooper River.

Now, anybody who knows anything about the Charleston yard knows that you will have to spend anywhere from $75,000 to $175,000 a year in keeping the silt out of the Cooper River. Otherwise its depth will decrease to 6 or 7 feet. You can not get a rowboat up there.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. BRITTEN. In a moment. Now, what has the Senate done? We appropriated $175,000 to dredge the Cooper River, and I said at that time that this was merely a step in the direction of making the Charleston yard a battleship yard. I was laughed down by the members of the committee, and they said, "Oh, no; we are only going to improve the Cooper River."

What occurred on the Senate side? A million dollars is proposed for extending the dry dock. What does that mean? It means that they are going to make a battleship yard out of the Charleston Navy Yard, that has been laughed at and scoffed at by every naval expert in the history of our Government. I say that advisedly. I defy any man on the floor of this House to find any expert advice indicating that the Charleston yard will make a reasonable battleship yard.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. COX. Has it not been recommended for abandonment by several Secretaries of the Navy?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; it has been repeatedly recommended for abandonment.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. In a moment. It can now be used to advantage as a base for destroyers and light-draft vessels; but when you talk of making the Charleston Navy Yard a battleship yard, when without dredging there is but 6 or 7 feet of water, then you are running into an expense of from $75,000 to $250,000 annually for dredging alone for all time to come. Another item of $200,000 for a foundry indicates clearly the intention to make that a battleship yard.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. Will you kindly tell your authority for the statement that it would cost from $75,000 to $175,000 a year to dredge the channel?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; Admiral Stanford's testimony, contained in the hearings.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is mistaken about the amounts. I am not saying that I am for or against, but the gentleman's figures are entirely wrong.

Mr. WHALEY. Let me give the gentleman the figures.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will yield to the gentleman as soon as I answer his question. When the Chief of the Bureau of Yards the dredging of the Charleston yard. At one time the appropriation of $20,000. That is the regulation appropriation for the dredging of the Charleston Yard. At one time the appropriation was not made, and the silt came in, and within a few months you had only 7 feet of water in front of the yard.

Mr. WHALEY. As a matter of fact, only $12,000 has been appropriated for dredging the silt, and not more than $9,000 was ever expended, and that included the dredging in the pier slips at the torpedo station, as well as at the mouth of the dock where the silt accumulates. It has cost only $9,000 to run the dredge the whole year. The place the gentleman is speaking of with reference to the silt is in the mouth of dock—

Mr. BRITTEN. I am not talking about the silt in the dock—

Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman is talking about the silt in the mouth of the dock.

Mr. BRITTEN. Directly south of the dock. That is not in the dock.

Mr. WHALEY. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman know that it is not the silt in the river at all, but the water flowing over the mud banks south and north of the dock where there are no concrete walls that causes the trouble? That matter has been thrashed out here time and time again, and if the gentleman has not the knowledge he can find it by reading Admiral Edward's report (S. Doc. 957, 63d Cong., 3d sess.) that it is true; $9,000 for dredging covers all at the yard—slips, dock, etc. In the Philadelphia yard and other yards it costs vastly more to carry on the dredging than it does at the Charleston yard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, may I proceed for a couple of minutes more in order to answer this question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Speaker, has refreshed my memory as to the amount. I asked Admiral Stanford, who was before the committee, how much it would cost to keep the Cooper River open for heavier draft vessels, on the assumption that the shortening and widening of that torpedo-boat pier, originally intended for light-draft vessels and finally made larger for heavy-draft vessels, presaged a battleship yard down there. The record here is very plain. It will show that Admiral Stanford said that $75,000 would be required annually.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. Does not the gentleman know that the east end of the torpedo pier which has just been erected—the river end of it—is in 33 feet of water at low tide?

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman tell the House whether that is a torpedo pier or a big ship pier?

Mr. WHALEY. It is a torpedo pier; but Admiral Stanford, for whose opinion I have not much respect, although the gentleman seems to quote him, made it a torpedo and battleship pier, and under his direction of the Bureau of Yards and Docks the plans and specifications were made and executed. He alone is responsible for the pier being the length it is and the mismanagement in its erection. A battleship can dock in the outer wall; torpedo boats berth in the basin.

Mr. BRITTEN. Now, the truth of the matter is that originally the House appropriated for a 1,600-foot torpedo pier; but after Josephus Daniels became Secretary of the Navy, on March 4 or 5, 1913, two days later correspondence was started, probably on the advice of some distinguished gentleman at the other end of this Capitol, and that 1,600-foot pier was cut down to about 400 feet. A short, heavy pier for big ships. Is not that true?

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BRITTEN. In order to accommodate heavy ships—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes, in order that I may give him some accurate information, which he sadly lacks.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho demands the regular order.

Mr. WHALEY. I should like to give the gentleman a little information, of which he is in need.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I withdraw the request.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I acquiesced, as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, in an expenditure, provided in the House naval bill, of more than $100,000,000 more than is necessary at this time to be expended for the Navy. I did this believing that by so doing I was saving the people fifty or sixty millions of dollars; but now the Senate has increased it to $315,000,000. I am convinced that instead of increasing the expenditures for the Navy they should be diminished, for the reason that any possible foes of the United States are engaged to the limit of their resources, and when this European war ends will have their resources so exhausted that, when they have time to reason sanely, they will not permit themselves to be involved in another war in the next 50 years.

On Tuesday I objected to unanimous consent to the conferees being appointed. I did so for the purpose of delay. I realize how weak and ineffectual my efforts are going to be to defeat this most infamous outrage being committed on the people of America. I felt, however, that I wanted in some way to exercise some influence somewhere that it might attract the attention of the peace-loving people of the country, so that they might be aroused to exercise an influence to stop this raid on the Government Treasury. I will say, however, that I do not expect to be able to accomplish this. We have now under consideration in another body the Army appropriation bill, which will also be increased, because these vicious influences are working for this unnecessary expenditure. In fact, the expenditure of the money is the least harm in it. This thing is being advocated for the purpose of blinding the people to the real issue and the real interest of the people to-day. This system wants to continue its plunder in the way of abnormally high prices. It does not want the attention of the people attracted to that, so the columns of the papers are being kept full of war and of this preparedness agitation. What I say will probably have no effect upon the Members of this body, but it may go out over the country to people who will give sober and sane thought to the fact that this military-preparedness propaganda that is going on in this country is not desired for the protection of this country by the real promoters down behind it—the invisible power that has brought it to the front. That power does not want it for the protection of this country against any foreign enemy, but it is going to be used against the working people of this country; and if the great leaders of the American labor movement to-day are going to continue to permit their activities to be chloroformed and are going to acquiesce in this by inactivity against it, they will be rudely awakened. Perhaps it will not be a year when this mobilization of the National Guard throughout the country will have its real purpose disclosed in case, forsooth, the railroad men of the country find it necessary to go on strike to enforce the reasonable and just demand which they are making at this time. I warn the laboring people of this country to give thought to this question and see whether it does not appeal to them—that there may be danger in this militarism that seems to have made almost everybody mad. It seems that both in high places and low places this military hydrophobia has been effective; and all I can do is to keep in peace with my own conscience, exercise my influence the best I can, and contribute my little, weak effort to stop this most infamous and malicious outrage that has been committed on the people of America.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to-day to make any further objections in regard to this bill. I have in a way accomplished the purpose that I had in mind; and while I did think about making further objection and perhaps make it necessary to have a quorum here, I have decided not to do so, on account of the inconvenience to which it might put some Members of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTAGUE). The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, some of us, with considerable mental reservation, voted for the naval bill as it passed the House. We doubted the wisdom of some of the legislation placed in the bill in the House. I doubted the wisdom of a part of the building program. It seemed to me that it was quite large enough all along the line, and unnecessarily large in some respects. Yet I desired to vote for the naval bill, which provides for our defenses upon the high seas, and without regard to my objections to certain features of the bill I did vote for it. The bill has gone to another body. The legislation we placed on it has been made the reason or excuse for much additional legislation, some of which, if it be parliamentary to say so, may be best characterized as scandalous. The enormous increase in the building program is coupled with a three-year building program, as though in the excitement of to-day we feared the sober judgment of next year, and therefore were endeavoring to pledge the country to something that a year from now we might not approve of. In this condition of affairs those who feel as I do would naturally prefer to have these matters discussed in the House and thrashed out here in Committee of the Whole. I would vote for the conference report on the naval bill, even though it contained some items of legislation and appropriation I did not approve, if the House had been given an opportunity to vote on these items separately. If, however, no opportunity is given us to vote on these objectionable items and they are retained by the conferees, some of us will feel under the necessity of voting against the conference report.

But I realize the necessity of getting this bill into conference. I have confidence in the conferees. I realize that the majority of the conferees may not hold the views that I do in regard to all these matters, but I have confidence in their desire to do the right thing, in their knowledge of the situation, and of their desire to meet what they believe to be the views of the House and the needs of the service in connection with our Naval Establishment. Therefore I shall not object to the bill going to conference, hoping, however, that if the conferees find that the Senate is insistent upon some of the legislation, and upon some of the appropriations that so very greatly exceed and vary from the provisions of the House bill, before the conferees yield they will give the House an opportunity to vote on those questions.

I realize that the conferees can make no definite promise. I am not disposed to ask them to make any such promise. I do hope, however, that before this enormous continuous program shall be yielded to, before this legislation, much of it questionable, is written into law, if that should be the unfortunate outcome, we at least shall have the opportunity of expressing the judgment of the House upon these various matters separately and in detail.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTAGUE). The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House, in the main, are based on long experience, and in a general way advantageous in securing good legislation; and usually a departure from the rules, while the occasion may seem appropriate at the time, often leads to difficulties unseen when the departure is first taken.

We passed the naval appropriation bill in the House under a rule—a rule which took it out from under the rules of the House, and which prevented consideration of the items which were in the bill, and which introduced into the naval bill many matters which could never have gotten into the bill under the ordinary rules of the House. We made a departure from the old well-settled rules in reference to legislation on appropriation bills, and we did it with some degree of innocence, idly dreaming at the time that we could go as far as we desired and then stop. We put some items in the appropriation bill which we had some hesitation about. It comes back to us from the Senate with fifty-odd pages of amendments, most of them on matters that never have received any consideration whatever in the House, and have not received any consideration to speak of, at this session of Congress, at least, in the Committee on Naval Affairs. They comprise matters of great importance.

Now, human nature is human nature; it has not been changed materially for a good many thousand years, and is not likely to be in our day. The men in the Navy are devoted to their country's service. They are willing to fight and die for the honor of our country, equally willing to fight and die for its protection. But when it comes to legislation which affects them personally they are like other human beings; they will get the best of it if they can, not because they are designedly taking advantage of the Government but because they look at it in this way: They are interested, and when they have written a naval bill there have always been things in the bill which most of us would not be for, purely in the interest of the officers in the Navy.

There never will be a more conspicuous example in the history of this country than there will be in this naval bill when it is signed and becomes a law. There is no way out of it. When we decided to pass the naval bill under a special rule, making everything in order which the Committee on Naval Affairs had put in the bill, we opened the door so wide that it is impossible to close it. The Senate added provisions to the bill that nobody in the House knows anything about, and, in my judgment, nobody in the Senate knows very much about them. They were written by somebody connected with the Naval Establishment, and inserted as an easy matter in the Senate because they said it goes to conference and will receive consideration there. When the distinguished conferees meet it will be impossible for finite minds to understand all of these intricate subjects in the space of time they will have before them. They have to dispose of matters about which they know little upon somebody's say so, and the say so is some one who is personally interested. I am in favor of sending the bill to conference. I think it is better to have it before the conferees long enough for them to try and find out something about it rather than to have it floating around the House with no one studying the subject. But I have no confidence in this method of legislation. All of these things that are of a special nature ought to come before the House in individual bills, where they can receive the consideration of the House. [Applause.] And where we have an opportunity to protect the Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). The question is on agreeing to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALBOTT, Mr. ESTOPINAL, Mr. BUTLER, and Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HAWAIIAN NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, and I ask unanimous consent that the conference report may be considered at this time without its being printed under the rule and laying over for a day. The reason I ask that is that the Senate has receded from the amendment that it made, and there is nothing else in dispute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will make a statement in reference to it, or permit me to do so, I will state that this is the Hawaiian National Park bill in which the House placed a provision limiting the appropriations authorized in the future to not exceeding $10,000 a year. The Senate, through inadvertence, agreed to an amendment striking out that limitation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. The conferees have receded from that amendment striking out the limitation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; the bill is in the identical form in which it passed the House.

Mr. MANN. And it contains a limitation on the appropriations.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. This is a bill for the Hawaiian National Park, which the House passed. The Senate agreed to the bill, but added an amendment. The House placed upon the bill a provision limiting the authorization of appropriations for the maintenance of the park, I believe, to $10,000 a year. The Senate agreed to an amendment striking that out, apparently, if one may judge, thinking that it was an appropriation of $10,000 instead of a limitation.

Mr. COX. I was misinformed in my own mind in respect to it. I had in mind that this was a general park bill.

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 9525, notwithstanding the rule that it shall be printed in the RECORD and lay over for a day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1050).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, having met, after full and free conference agree to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its insistence upon its amendment striking out the following in lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 on page 8 of said bill:

"Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, and improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law; and."

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
IRVINE L. LENROOT,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
JNO. W. KERN,
MILES POINDEXTER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9525) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, submit the following statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

There was only one amendment made in the Senate, which provided for the striking out of the limit of the annual appropriation for the maintenance of the park. The Senate receded from that amendment and accepted the bill as it passed the House, consequently there is nothing further left to consider and the bill remains identically as it passed the House.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
IRVINE L. LENROOT,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

STEAMSHIP "AROLINE."

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate bill 6375, to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Aroline, on the Speaker's desk be laid before the House, and that it be passed in lieu of a similar House bill on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House Senate bill 6375, which the Clerk will report, there being a similar bill on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon the application of the owner, the Pacific Alaska Navigation Co., of Portland, Me., to change the name of the steamship Aroline, official No. 211426.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to state that on Monday next in the city of New York Mr. Hughes is to be notified officially of his nomination for the Presidency. I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that on Saturday he ask to have the House adjourn over until the following Tuesday, or perhaps Wednesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is my intention to ask on Saturday that the House adjourn over until Wednesday, and I may as well do that now. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in addition to my other request, that when the House adjourns on Saturday it adjourn to meet on the following Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next, and that when it adjourns on Saturday next it adjourn to meet on the following Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of labor legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the occasion of our recent trip to Niagara.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of a visit to Niagara. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing therein a list of antisocialist books.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing therein a list of books for socialism and against socialism.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD a list of books, both pro and con, upon the subject of socialism.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that these requests are coupled together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to reserve the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LONDON. I did not rise to object, Mr. Speaker. I thought the request had been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the question is on the request of the gentleman from Washington. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not like to object to these things, but I do not see how any good can be accomplished.

Mr. CANNON. What is the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to publish a list of about 50 antisocialist books in the RECORD. The reason for the request is this: Children throughout the country are being asked from day to day to debate the question of socialism. They go to the public libraries in all of the towns of from 5,000 inhabitants up, to get literature upon the subject, and although they do not know it, they discover that the Socialist Party has placed from 20 to 50 books in these libraries at its expense, advocating socialism, and some of them explaining anarchism. The children are unable to take out anti-socialist books. Even the library directors are unable—

Mr. COX. That shows the Socialists are on the job; now let the other fellow get on the job.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am trying to give the other fellow a chance to get on the job.

Mr. COX. But at public expense, and I shall object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKMON. Would it be in order for those gentlemen who desire to speak to be allowed to speak during days when the House is in recess?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLACKMON. Would it be in order to allow those gentlemen who desire to speak to do so during the time we are in recess; for instance, to-morrow? Would it be in order to allow those gentlemen who want to make so many remarks to come here and speak to-morrow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, when the House is not in session. Without objection, the bill H. R. 16647, the corresponding House bill to the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being unanimous-consent day, the Clerk will report the first bill.

SECTION 20, ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

The first business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 653) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen want to be heard on this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable to me.

SPRINGS, STREAMS, AND WATER HOLES ON PUBLIC LANDS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill does not look right to me at all, or the report does not look right. Now, there is a provision in the gentleman's bill—I have not got it before me at this time, but it is in my files—and I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether or not the language in the bill is broad enough to permit the Secretary of the Interior to provide fountains, pumps, and employ persons at all these places for the purpose of furnishing water?

Mr. RAKER. That is not the real purpose of the bill.

Mr. COX. But is not the language broad enough for that?

Mr. RAKER. Well, those who have given the matter thought do not believe that.

Mr. COX. What is the gentleman's construction; he is the author of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. No; this bill comes from the department, but Senator WORKS has given the matter much consideration, and it passed the Senate, and the House committee amended it so as to limit it, hoping to give a starter upon this most valuable work. The people in the Western States, to which this bill applies, out on these deserts, who have seen and had some personal experience, believe, and I think the gentleman would believe, that a knowledge of these water holes ought to be had, and I think if the gentleman knew all the circumstances of the case that he would be strongly in favor of the bill. The water holes and places where water can be had should be marked so the traveling public might reap the benefit of such designation and marking.

Mr. COX. No doubt there are hardships out there, like in my country and everywhere else; if it is not a question of water it is something else. Now, I call the gentleman's attention to page 2, section 1, to this language:

Also to provide convenient and ready means, apparatus, and appliances by which water may be brought to the earth's surface at said water holes for the use of such persons.

Now, is not that language broad enough for the Secretary of the Interior to fix fountains if he wanted to do so, or sink a well, or put a pump in there, and employ some persons to stay there to look after it? What is the gentleman's construction of that language?

Mr. RAKER. At many of those places a hydraulic ram can be put in that will raise the water in a tank, and many places can be walled up with cement so the water can be used. Where it can not be, of course, if the travel justifies it, a pump could be put in. No men stay there; it is simply a means of raising the water so that people can go there and use the pump or whatever it is. A good many lives would be saved at a very little expense.

Mr. COX. The gentleman says a good many lives could be saved. I have read the report, which seems to be very voluminous, and it does not say that many lives have been lost out there.

Mr. RAKER. The report is very modest and very short. If the gentleman was familiar with the history of the past 20 years, he would be astounded—

Mr. COX. I see the Secretary of the Interior was in favor of increasing the amount to $25,000 and the committee put it in $10,000. It will not hit the Senate Chamber until that amount is raised to $25,000. When you embark upon this kind of legislation I can see the finish of it, and at the end of four or five years we will be expending a great many thousands of dollars in this kind of work.

Mr. RAKER. At these places at which they are trying to locate to get the proper results on the proper domain, where once established, the public will take charge of it and all these expenses will be paid and it will be a great development.

Mr. COX. If the time ever was when any State, county, or municipality took charge of anything that the Federal Government had undertaken to do, I have never been able to find it.

Mr. RAKER. I will say to the gentleman we are expending out in these Western States for the improvement of travel upon the public highways.

Mr. COX. That is exactly what I think. The States ought to do this.

Mr. RAKER. They can not do it. It is on the public domain. Give the Secretary of the Interior a chance to start this work with this modest sum, and good results will come from it.

Mr. COX. I would not object to this present appropriation of $10,000. That in itself is a little sum and does not amount to much. But I have seen these little $10,000 propositions start here time and again, and in a few years multiplied many times. And if this language is not stricken out, and I am given positive assurance that it will stay out, the bill will not go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. So far as I am concerned, I will consent to striking it out. I do not think the appropriation will be increased. I think we are willing to take that appropriation.

Mr. COX. I am sure the gentleman is, but I read in the Secretary's report here the following:

I would therefore emphasize the recommendations of the department in regard to this subject and suggest that section 2 of the proposed bill (H. R. 242) be so amended as to authorize the expenditure of $25,000 for the contemplated work.

I have at least grounds to justify me in believing that this bill, as quick as it gets to—

Mr. RAKER. They have only given $10,000. They have not made it a continued appropriation. This work has not been done. And I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that this not only applies to the West, but thousands of people are traveling over this country to develop it, and it is a resource to this country and gives a chance to develop.

Mr. COX. Well, I think the Government has been generous in developing its resources.

Mr. RAKER. It is your land.

Mr. COX. It has been generous in its Reclamation Service, in the good-roads bill, and in everything else. Now, I can not, as I stated a moment ago, stand for this language in this bill unless I am given the assurance that if the bill goes to conference this language will stay out of it.

Mr. RAKER. What particular language?

Mr. COX. The language found in lines 10, 11, 12, and part of line 13.

Mr. RAKER. I have no objection to the gentleman striking it out if you give unanimous consent to its going to conference.

Mr. COX. What assurance am I going to get—

Mr. RAKER. I would like to see the principle started, and I am willing to do what I can to get the benefit of proper legislation, and if a few words would defeat the bill, let us strike them out, and get what we can and develop so far as possible.

Mr. COX. I do not know whether the gentleman gets my position or not. I want to know whether or not when this bill goes to conference and comes back here this amendment is going to be put back in here?

Mr. RAKER. I will do what I can with the conferees and before the House, to the effect that they had better leave it out rather than defeat the bill.

Mr. COX. I understand that. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINING FOR METALLIFEROUS MINERALS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 12426, to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations in the State of Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I regard this as a rather important bill, applying to millions of acres of Indian land, and is one that I think should not be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar because of its very importance.

Mr. HAYDEN. If there was any other way of obtaining consideration, I would not have put it on that calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's committee will be called in due season.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not think it will be called in this Congress; and if there is anything in the bill that the gentleman does not understand and on which he would like explanation, I will be glad to enlighten him on the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, we are seeking by this bill to appropriate the lands of Indians, as far as leasing for 50 years is concerned.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am trying to establish a system of leases for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations in order that the Indian may get some benefit out of his land, and in order, on the other hand, that there may be a development of the mineral resources of the reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the term of the lease is very long. It is virtually appropriating the Indian land. The term is 50 years, and it seems an unusually long time to tie up the unallotted lands of Indians where they have no say during the term of the lease.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman will remember that when we discussed the water-power and other bills here it was generally thought that a 50-year term was a proper term for leases where there was a large risk in the business. There is no enterprise into which a man can enter in which there is more risk than in metalliferous mining. I adopted that term because I thought it was the opinion of the House that the term should be 50 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being, I object. But if the gentleman will ask to have it passed over without prejudice, I will not object. In less than two weeks we will have another Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objects.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MEMPHIS, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12999) extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee how far advanced is the work of construction on this bridge? This act seeks to extend the time of construction.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand it is very far advanced.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if we are going to act upon the committee substitute, it should be reported instead of the original bill. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the substitute proposed by the committee be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of a bridge now in the course of construction across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., which the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors or assigns, was authorized to construct, maintain, and operate by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912," be, and the same is hereby, extended to the 1st day of April, 1917.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee substitute.

The question was taken, and the committee substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled 'An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved August 23, 1912.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are several bridge bills on the calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. I have them here, all ready.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be advisable to pass them now. It will take only a few minutes. I ask unanimous consent that—

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I have all those bills here ready.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that we first take up for disposal the so-called bridge bills on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that out of their order, and immediately following this one, the House take up the rest of the bridge bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Georgia all the bills there?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. I have them all here, but I do not think they are in the proper order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unanimous Consent Calendar No. 302, I believe, is the first one. Then others follow.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think there are one or two there that were reported too late to get on this calendar, but I hope they will be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first one.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED LAKE RIVER, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16380) granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I noticed in reading the report on this bill that the War Department did not think it necessary for Congress to grant any authorization, because the stream over which the bridge was authorized is a purely intrastate stream. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the policy of the committee in reporting bills when the War Department virtually recommends adversely to the measure?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, usually when the State has authorized it, and that is shown to the committee, we concur with the War Department that it is unnecessary. The act of 1899 provides that the special consent of Congress is not necessary when the State authorizes it over a stream. But leaving that aside, Congress has not divested itself of the power to grant it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, Congress is assuming needless work when it grants authorization for the construction of a bridge when its authority is not required.

Mr. ADAMSON. This is one of the cases where, under the State law, it was stated they were not ready to go to the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it intended by the passage of this bill that they will not resort to the authorization of the State for the construction of the bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. It will not be necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it a good policy for the National Government to preempt the authority of the States when it is not required?

Mr. ADAMSON. It does not do that. It does nothing but consent, provided the local authorities want a bridge built there. We do not authorize them to deal with the local conditions. We merely consent, so far as the rights of navigation are concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I question the propriety of Congress going into that policy, but I shall not object.

Mr. ADAMSON. We never report a bill unless there is some special reason for it—a bill of that sort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of supervisors of Highland Township, Pennington County, Minn., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red Lake River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the section line between sections 28 and 29, township 153 north, range 40 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Pennington, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS WEST BRANCH SUSQUEHANNA RIVER, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16534) to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboisstown, Lycoming County, Pa.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation where Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., would reach said river, if prolonged southwardly, to a point on the south side of said river about 20 rods west of the confluence of Mosquito Creek and the said river in the borough of Duboisstown, Lycoming County, Pa., said point being near where a small sawmill formerly stood, and where High Street, in the borough of Duboisstown, Lycoming County, Pa., if prolonged northwardly, would reach said river, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out the word "and" after the word "construct" and inserting after the word "maintain" the words "and operate."

Mr. ADAMSON. That ought to be there, Mr. Speaker. It is an inadvertence. It ought to be in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out the word "and" after the word "construct" and inserting after the word "maintain" the words "and operate."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will wait until they are all finished, and then I will ask to reconsider and lay on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS WEST BRANCH, SUSQUEHANNA RIVER, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16604) to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or about where the public road or highway known as Second Street reaches said river, near the residence formerly owned by John Knorr, now owned by Harvey Smith, in the borough of Montgomery, to a point in public road on the east side of said river about 400 feet northeast of the residence formerly owned by S. B. Menges, now occupied by A. B. Koons, and where said public road reaches said river in the township of Muncy Creek, county of Lycoming, in the State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS WEST BRANCH OF THE SUSQUEHANNA RIVER, PA.

The next bridge bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16764) to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, Pa., and their successors in office, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or about where Second Street in the borough of Watsonstown, Northumberland County, Pa., would reach said river if prolonged in a westerly direction to a point on the westerly side of said river near where the White Deer Creek discharges into the said West Branch of the Susquehanna River in White Deer Township, Union County, Pa., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS FLINT RIVER, GA.

The next bridge bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16875) granting the consent of Congress to Crisp County, Ga., to construct a bridge across Flint River, Ga., between Crisp and Sumter Counties.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Crisp County, Ga., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Flint River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Huguenin's Ferry, in the county of Sumter, in the State of Georgia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MAHONING RIVER, OHIO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bridge bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 16912) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct a bridge across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of Warren, in the county of Trumbull, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "the county commissioners of."

Page 4, after the word "Ohio," insert the words "its successors and assigns."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER, N. Y.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the next bridge bill (H. R. 16554) is not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, but it is No. 155 on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 16554) to extend the time of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation for the commencement and completion of its bridge across the Hudson River, in the State of New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation, under the provisions of the act approved March 13, 1914, be extended to and including the 13th day of March, 1920.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "and including" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the 30th day of March, 1918, and."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "twenty," insert the word "respectively."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. MARYS RIVER, FLA.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is one other bridge bill, No. 154 on the House Calendar, a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 6242) authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to build, maintain, and operate a bridge across the waters of the St. Marys River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Kolars Ferry, about 2 miles below the Atlantic Coast Line Railway bridge, between the States of Florida and Georgia, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which the several bridge bills were passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will resume the Unanimous Consent Calendar and call the next bill.

MARCUS A. JORDAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 888) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to confer upon Marcus A. Jordan the life-saving medal of the first class.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF NAVY AND WAR DEPARTMENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9548) to regulate the wages of certain employees employed in or under the Navy and War Departments of the Government.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

SETTLERS ON NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The next business of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10115) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on the Moqui and Navajo Indian Reservations in the State of Arizona.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute S. 2500, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs and is identical with the House bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent to consider S. 2500 in lieu of H. R. 10115. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill (S. 2500) authorizing the adjustment of rights of settlers on a part of the Navajo Indian Reservation in the State of Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire, if these claims go back to the year 1900, why they were not presented earlier?

Mr. HAYDEN. The President of the United States issued an Executive order withdrawing all of these lands from sale and settlement and making it a part of the Indian reservation. It is usual in orders of that kind to reserve to the settlers on the land the right to perfect their title, but no reservation in the order was made, and so it is necessary to pass an act of this kind. The people are residing in the country now on this land.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what I wish to inquire, whether they are bona fide settlers or stragglers who are coming in and appealing to claim agents to have the bill passed 16 years after the Executive order was made.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill can only apply to settlers who were then and are now on the land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all lands which were occupied by settlers or persons who were entitled to make entries thereof, and submit final proof under the provisions of the general homestead law of the United States prior to the hereinafter mentioned Executive order and upon the making and approval of the public surveys of such lands, said Executive order being of date January 8, 1900, "Extending the boundaries of the tract of country lying west of the Moqui and Navajo Indian Reservation in the Territory of Arizona," and which lands were included in the said Executive order, are hereby excepted from the operations thereof, and such settlers are hereby granted authority at any time within 90 days from the approval hereof to make homestead entry of not to exceed 160 acres of such land, and submit final proof of the existence of their rights at the date of such Executive order of extension, and patents therefor shall issue upon payment to the United States of the legal fees and purchase price.

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend the bill on page 1, line 9, after the word "hundred," by striking out the period and all down to and including the word "Arizona," in line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the words "and withdrawing from sale and settlement a tract of country lying west of the Navajo and Moqui Reservations in Arizona."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona if it is the intention of the gentleman to authorize parties who were located as intending homestead settlers at the time of the Executive order to now make their entries and at the proper time make final proof, or is it the intention only to relieve people who at the time of the issuance of the Executive order had already sufficiently complied with the homestead law to make proof then?

Mr. HAYDEN. I think the bill speaks for itself—that the land occupied by the settlers entitled to make entry are entitled now to make entry.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the language of the bill:

That all lands which were occupied by settlers or persons who were entitled to make entries thereof—

So far, so good—and submit final proof under the provisions of the general homestead law of the United States prior to the hereinafter mentioned Executive order.

The bill as it stands would only relieve, if strictly construed, those who at the time of the issuance of the Executive order were not only in position to make entry but who had so far complied with the homestead law that they were in a position to offer final proof.

Mr. HAYDEN. I think that was the fact—the settlers had resided there for a number of years and could not make entry because the land was unsurveyed.

Mr. MONDELL. It was not the intention of the bill to relieve anyone who at that time had not been on the land long enough to make a homestead proof?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; I am satisfied with the bill as it is.

Mr. MONDELL. All right; if the gentleman is satisfied, I am.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FORT ASSINNIBOINE RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assinniboiné Military Reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, or I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. STOUT. I would like to have an opportunity to have the bill considered to-day, and I would like to have the gentleman's grounds for his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. My reason is because the land described in the bill does not conform to the recommendation of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior. It does not include all the land that he claims is needed for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. STOUT. I am under the impression that it is the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. I examined it two weeks ago, and I am certain that it is not.

Mr. STOUT. It comprises fractions of townships 28 and 29.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the report closely, and I find it does not conform because it leaves out some of the land that the assistant secretary thought necessary for the Indians.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is, although I have not examined the case for some time, that it provides for two townships or sections, and the Indian Office thought that this would not be enough to support the Indians and wanted more. I do not see why that is any objection to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because we are giving away a portion of the land that the Interior Department believes is necessary for the support of the Indians.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that we are giving it away.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is public land.

Mr. MANN. This is to divert a certain amount of public land from the reservation for the Indians in Montana, and the less we give them the more land we have.

Mr. MONDELL. And the better it will be for this particular band of Indians.

Mr. MANN. The question is whether we ought to give them as much as this bill does.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department recommends that a certain amount of land be given to these impoverished Indians, and this bill does not give it to them, but seeks to deprive them of a portion of it.

Mr. MANN. We do not deprive them of anything; we are making them a present. The department thinks that we ought, for instance, to give them $10,000, and we say that we will give them $8,000. I think if we give them this amount of land and let them work, they are better off.

Mr. STAFFORD. The department says that they need such an acreage of land, and that the amount conveyed by this bill is not sufficient to support them.

Mr. STOUT. The bill has been amended in the Senate to conform with the recommendations of the department.

Mr. MANN. I think we are giving them too much here.

Mr. STAFFORD. In these bills I think we should follow the recommendation of the department.

Mr. MANN. This is a recommendation of the Indian Office.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will yield, I will say that if we follow the recommendations of the Indian Office about giving Indians lands there will not be anything left for white people to live upon.

Mr. STOUT. They recommend that fractional townships 29 north, ranges 14 and 15, be given, and the bill provides that fractional townships 28 north, ranges 15 and 16 east, be given.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. How many individuals are there in the Rocky Boy Tribe?

Mr. STOUT. I want to talk about that for a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. We are not under any obligations to them.

Mr. STOUT. Oh, no; they are a band of Canadian Chippewa Indians that came down here, and we have sent them back two or three times, but they have come back, and they wander around, and the people of Montana for several years have supported them by private charities. The people went down into their pockets and kept them, and the Government for some two or three years has been appropriating some $10,000 for the support of this band of Indians. They have no claim upon this Government of any sort, except that they are here, and we can not very well get rid of them.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not the opinion of the gentleman that the tracts proposed to be given them are really more than they actually need?

Mr. STOUT. We propose to give them here some 56,000 or 57,000 acres of land, which will be easily 160 acres per Indian, or a little better. This land is not all agricultural land. Most of it is not. I will say to the gentleman—and I speak from personal knowledge of the land, because I have been over it a number of times myself—that it is the finest grazing land in the whole State of Montana. That is the kind of land that these Indians require. They are naturally and exclusively stock-raising folks. They would not cultivate the Nile Valley if you were to send them down there. There is no use trying to give them a great lot of agricultural land. They should have sufficient for gardens and to raise the things necessary, but we are giving them the very kind of land that they are best fitted by training and heredity and natural inclination to make use of.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, coming to the question which is uppermost in my mind, of whether this bill conforms to the recommendations of the Interior Department, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. STOUT] says that it does, and I claim that it does not. I direct the gentleman's attention to page 3 of the report, in which the department recommends the following language:

On fractional townships 28 north, ranges 14, 15, and 16.

And I now call attention to the phraseology of the bill on page 2, section 10:

Fractional townships 28 north, ranges 15 and 16 east—

Thus leaving out 14, as recommended by the department. Am I correct in my original statement that the bill does not conform to the recommendations of the department?

Mr. STOUT. I think the gentleman is correct. It was a mistake, however.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman is willing to have No. 14 incorporated?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is, I am not. It will not be done by unanimous consent. I think that they have too much now.

Mr. STOUT. I agree with the gentleman that he is correct in his contention. I thought the bill contained that amount of land, but I also agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that we have ample land here to take care of these Indians, and I want to put it up to the gentleman in another way.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will submit this inquiry to the gentleman. What guide are we to follow in these matters pertaining to Indian affairs—the claims of the individual representatives, which I submit are entitled to the greatest weight if they have personal knowledge of the conditions, or the recommendations of the department that has sent men out there to investigate the conditions?

Mr. STOUT. I think we are always safe in following closely the recommendations of the department, but I think that we are getting pretty close to the recommendations of the department. In all humility and modesty I submit to the gentleman that I have personal knowledge of this matter. I have been over this land, and I know this bunch of Indians. Old Rocky Boy himself has been gathered to the fathers. He died a few weeks ago. Another chief is dead, and they are all dying pretty rapidly, partly for the lack of care and attention, simply wandering around over the country, eating out of swill barrels and making existence the best they can. The reason I am somewhat insistent in getting action upon this bill to-day is this: It will probably be the last opportunity at this session of Congress that we will have, and if we do not get the bill through now it will perhaps not get through at this Congress. I would like to have the matter underway so that we can get these Indians located down there on that tract of land before another winter comes, which may wipe a good many of them out of existence.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has stated matters on his own knowledge and information, which, of course, I accept as worthy of consideration, and more so than the recommendation of any subordinate connected with the Indian Office. If he says that the tract provided in this bill is ample to provide for the sustenance of these Indians I will withdraw my objection and not follow the report of the Interior Department.

Mr. STOUT. I thank the gentleman, and I assure him that that is absolutely the fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill proposes to set aside two townships as a permanent reservation for Rocky Boy's band of Chippewa Indians, and such other homeless Indians in the State of Montana as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to locate thereon, and so forth. We do not owe these Indians anything.

Mr. STOUT. Not a thing.

Mr. MANN. Is it not sufficient to set it aside as a reservation without promising that it will be permanent?

Mr. STOUT. I think the suggestion is a good one, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be amended by striking out the word "permanent."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinibolne Military Reservation and open the same to settlement," be, and the same is hereby, amended by the addition thereto of the following sections:

"Sec. 10. That fractional townships 28 north, ranges 15 and 16 east, and fractional townships 29 north, ranges 14 and 15 east, Montana principal meridian, within the boundaries of said reservation, embracing a total area of approximately 56,035 acres, are hereby set apart as a permanent reservation for Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas and such other homeless Indians in the State of Montana as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to locate thereon, and the said Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, to allot the lands within the reservation hereby created under the provisions of the general allotment act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), as amended.

"Sec. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to patent to the city of Havre, Mont., for reservoir purposes, the following-described lands lying within said reservation: The west half southeast quarter, west half section 25, and the southeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, section 26, township 31 north, range 15 east, Montana principal meridian, comprising reservoir site No. 1 and embracing an area of approximately 480 acres; and the northwest quarter west half northeast quarter, north half southwest quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, section 33; and the southwest quarter southeast quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, section 28, township 30 north, range 16 east, Montana principal meridian, comprising reservoir site No. 2, and embracing an area of approximately 440 acres: Provided, That the city of Havre shall pay for said land the sum of $1.25 per acre: Provided further, That if the said city of Havre shall at any time hereafter abandon the lands above described and cease to use the same for said purposes, said above-described lands shall revert to the Government of the United States.

"Sec. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and set aside as a permanent park or camping ground the following-described land in said reservation lying on both sides of Beaver Creek within townships 29, 30, and 31 north, 15 and 16 east, to wit: The west half section 34; all of sections 33, 29, and 21; the west half southwest quarter, northwest quarter, section 22; all of section 16; the south half, northeast quarter, west half northeast quarter, section 9; the east half northeast quarter, section 8; the east half southeast quarter, section 5; the west half, northeast quarter, west half southeast quarter, section 4, township 29 north, range 16 east; and the south half southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter, northeast quarter southeast quarter, east half northeast quarter, section 33; the southeast quarter southeast quarter, north half southeast quarter, southwest quarter southwest quarter, north half southwest quarter, north half, section 28; the west half southeast quarter, west half northeast quarter west half, section 21; the east half southeast quarter, east half northeast quarter, section 20; the west half section 16; east half, east half northwest quarter, section 17; the east half southwest quarter, east half northwest quarter, east half, section 8; the west half southwest quarter, west half northwest quarter, section 9; all of section 5; the northeast quarter section 6, township 30 north, range 16 east; and the southwest quarter section 32; the south half, northwest quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 31, township 31 north, range 16 east; and the east half southeast quarter, section 25; southeast quarter southeast quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, northeast quarter northeast quarter, west half northeast quarter, east half northwest quarter, northwest quarter northwest quarter, section 26; south half southwest quarter, south half southeast quarter, section 23, township 31 north, range 15 east, Montana principal meridian, embracing an area of approximately 8,880 acres."

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

On page 3 strike out all of lines 14 to 25, inclusive, and on page 4 all of lines 1 to 25, inclusive, and on page 5 all of lines 1 to 3, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be amended by striking out the word "permanent" in line 7, page 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "permanent."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STOUT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAND FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15096) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over on the calendar. I am not quite prepared myself to take it up to-day, although as far as I am concerned it will be soon.

Mr. RAKER. We can not hear the gentleman over here.

Mr. MANN. It is possible we may be able, as far as I am concerned, to take it up on the next unanimous-consent day, if nobody else has objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the calendar and be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TRANSFERRING LAND TO FLANDREAU, S. DAK., FOR PUBLIC PARKS, ETC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14944) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 47, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playground.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the city of Flandreau, in Moody County, S. Dak., the following-described real property situated in the city of Flandreau, Moody County, S. Dak., viz: The south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 47, which shall be permanently used as a public playground for the Indian and white school children of the vicinity on equal terms, which playground shall be maintained by the city of Flandreau without governmental expense.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out "forty-seven" and insert "forty-eight"; page 2, line 1, after the word "public," insert the words "park or"; page 2, line 3, after the word "which," insert the words "park or," and amend the title.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend page 2, line 4, by striking out the word "governmental" and inserting after "expense" the words "to the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the word "governmental" and after the word "expense" insert the words "to the United States."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the language of the bill provides that the city of Flandreau shall maintain this without governmental expense. Of course, it can not be done, and my amendment proposes that it read "without expense to the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the first word in the bill. In the report on this case there is printed a letter from the Civic Improvement League, written by Mrs. L. M. Hardin, secretary, in which the Civic Improvement League asks for the transfer of the title of the north half of the lot. In fact, about the only information obtained about the bill is this statement: The bill carries provision for the south half instead of the north half of the lot. My recollection is that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] told me that he had looked this matter up, as I had called attention to it when before the House before—

Mr. DILLON. Yes; it is the south half.

Mr. MANN. It is the south half the ladies want, although they did not say so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DILLON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to transfer on certain conditions the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 48, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public park or playgrounds."

UNIFORM STANDARDS OF CLASSIFICATION OF COTTON.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15913) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish uniform standards of classification for cotton; to provide for the application, enforcement, and use of such standards in transactions in interstate and foreign commerce; to prevent deception therein; and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the author of this bill, is in conference on the Agricultural bill. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PUBLIC LANDS IN THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15156) granting public lands to the State of Oklahoma.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will have to object. If the present Speaker pro tempore wants to be on the floor when it comes up—

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly withhold his objection to allow a brief statement?

Mr. MANN. Well, I suppose a brief statement from my friend will produce one from me; however, I will withhold it. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, Oklahoma when admitted to the Union was composed of two Territories—the Territory of Oklahoma and Indian Territory. That portion known as the Indian Territory comprised something like 19,800,000 acres.

And the wonderfully strange thing about this is that there was not a single, solitary acre that could be made taxable, for the reason that all of it belonged to the Indians. Oklahoma Territory, on the other side, consisted of 29,979,200 acres, and the peculiar thing about this is that there were some 7,778,670 acres that belonged to the Indian tribes and were not taxable. I want you to take into consideration that my State, when admitted to the Union, when you figure up the number of acres of public lands, had less than one-fourth of the same taxable. This condition caused the citizens of Oklahoma in the early days to have extraordinarily heavy burdens to bear.

Mr. Speaker, when the statehood bill was passed there was a provision put in the same giving to the State of Oklahoma in lieu of section 16 and section 36 the sum of $5,000,000. Senator Dolliver, in speaking upon this bill in the Senate, said that in his opinion the land that was taken away from the State at that time was worth from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. And I dare say if you go to that State to-day you could not buy sections

16 and 36, in the Indian Territory, for even $100,000,000. So the State of Oklahoma comes here to-day with a bill asking that it be given the same consideration as the 14 States admitted to the Union since the years 1862 and 1866. There was an act passed in 1862 which gave to every Territory when admitted to the Union as a State 30,000 acres of land, based upon its Senators and Representatives in Congress. Later on, in 1866, this act was enlarged and extended so that the State should have three years to accept the provisions of the act; and in calling attention to this measure, I find that each of the 14 States that have been admitted since 1862 has either participated according to the terms of these two acts or they were given lands in lieu or were especially exempted from the terms of these two acts, with the exception of the State of Oklahoma. So, Mr. Speaker, we are here with clean hands, asking for only that which we think is right. We would not accept a single dollar if we did not have precedents that have already been established for this kind of legislation.

In calling attention to this, we find that the State of Arkansas was admitted to the Union in 1866. About that time we had the Civil War trouble, and so this State did not participate in the provisions of the act until six years later; but then there was a special act of Congress passed, which gave to the State of Arkansas scrip in lieu of the number of acres it was entitled to, based on its representation in Congress. And the following language was used in the act:

Whereas the State of Arkansas has complied with all of the provisions and requirements of an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and other acts amendatory, etc.

The Secretary of the Interior was authorized to issue scrip, and scrip was issued, and the State of Arkansas participated according to its representation in Congress.

Next we have the State of West Virginia. That State was admitted in 1862, with five Representatives in Congress. Later on, by the act of April 14, 1864, the State received the benefit of this act, and was given 150,000 acres in scrip.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. Do the provisions of your bill give two sections in each township to the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The provisions of my bill go back to the act of 1862, which provided that each State admitted to the Union should be given 300,000 acres, based upon its representation in Congress. The State of Oklahoma when admitted had five Representatives and two Senators. We were entitled to 210,000 acres of land. The legislature of my State promptly accepted the provisions of this act by passing a joint resolution, and through the governor and attorney general we made application to the Secretary of the Interior. As a precedent for this application I desire to state that a decision was rendered some time ago that where a State had complied with the act of 1862 the benefit inured to that State without further legislation, but when it was passed up to the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it was held that we could not receive that benefit unless by direct act of Congress.

Mr. TOWNER. My question was directed to what you now ask for. What is the extent of the grant you desire made from these public lands of Oklahoma?

Mr. McCLINTIC. We are asking that we receive the same treatment that every other State has received.

Mr. TOWNER. What does that amount to?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will get to that in a minute. Every State has received lands since the act of 1862 was passed, unless especially excepted, or given scrip in lieu thereof. When the State of Oklahoma was admitted to the Union, the enabling act did not except my State from the benefit of the acts of 1862 and 1866, and consequently we are asking that we be given 210,000 acres of land or, in lieu thereof, the sum of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. Speaker, going on further, I desire to state that the facts connected with this case probably more favorably compare with the State of Colorado than any other State in the Union. Colorado was admitted to the Union in 1875. The terms of its enabling act did not except it from the provisions of the terms of the act of 1862. Nine years later the Representatives of that State came to Congress and presented a bill asking that their State be treated in the same way as the other States that had gone before. Oklahoma, like Colorado, has had an application pending for nine years, and consequently as a Representative of Oklahoma I bring the same kind of bill to this body and ask that my State be given the same benefits that have been given to all other States, unless especially excepted or given lands in lieu of the acts of 1862 and 1866. The Department of the Interior in referring to the case of Colorado used the following language, which supports the contention of the State of Oklahoma that no reference was made to the grant of 1862 and 1866 when the State was admitted to the Union. And when the State of Colorado made application for the benefit coming under the terms of these two acts, this language was used:

The only new matter contained in section 3 of this act is the declaration of the number of acres to which Colorado was entitled under the act of 1862, and since this enabling act did not exclude it from the benefits of said acts, the provisions of which are duly accepted by the State, this is the sole and only purpose of said section, which was enacted, as stated in the caption "To secure to the State" the benefits of the act of 1862.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see how that compares. The Secretary of the Interior says that the State of Colorado was not given the benefits of this act; that no mention or no reference was made to the acts of 1862 and 1866.

The enabling act for the State of Oklahoma is practically identical, in that no reference is made in it to the act of 1862 or the act of 1866, and there is not a single word in the language of that act which exempts my State from the provisions of the acts of 1862 and 1866.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take issue with the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic], and yet there are a lot of other bills on the calendar, and we have been through this bill very carefully and through the history of the legislation, and I venture to say that there is not the slightest merit in this bill.

Mr. McClintic. If the gentleman can point out to me a single, solitary word in any act where my State has received the benefit of these two acts I will withdraw the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think I can do it, but I do not want to take the time this afternoon to do it.

Mr. McClintic. Well, as a Representative of the State of Oklahoma I would not stand on this floor and contend for a single dime that I did not believe my people are entitled to, and if the gentleman desires to object or to call for the regular order, of course he can do so.

Mr. MANN. I am going to object, and I will say this with reference to this bill, that if there is any merit in this bill at all, then we owe to the States of New Mexico and Arizona not only an apology but several hundred thousand acres of land.

Mr. McClintic. Mr. Speaker, in reference to that I have made a study of this proposition, and in the enabling acts of Arizona and New Mexico you will find that they are especially given lands in lieu of the acts of 1862 and 1866, and that being the case, the State of Arizona and the State of New Mexico have had a day in court and can not come in here and ask that they be given the land the gentleman refers to.

Mr. MANN. The State of Oklahoma was proposed to be admitted under an act which admitted Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. McClintic. That act did not pass.

Mr. MANN. Let me make my statement. The State of Oklahoma was admitted under an enabling act which proposed to admit as one State the States of Arizona and New Mexico. It was proposed to give to Oklahoma for agricultural and mechanical college purposes the amount of land that is in the law, and it was proposed to give to the new State of Arizona and New Mexico 300,000 acres of land in precisely the same language—practically the same language—as it was given to the State of Oklahoma. In neither case was the act of 1862 mentioned.

Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma claims that because the act of 1862 was not mentioned in the enabling act therefore Oklahoma is entitled to the land under the act of 1862. But the States of Arizona and New Mexico did not come into the Union under the enabling act. We passed two enabling acts thereafter, and gave them precisely the same amount of land that had been proposed to be given them in this first enabling act for agricultural and mechanical college purposes. But in the second enabling acts we inserted the language covering the act of 1862, showing clearly that we contemplated under the first enabling act that they were getting land in lieu of the act of 1862. They got the same amount the second time that we proposed to give the first time, only the second time we inserted the language showing that it was in lieu of the act of 1862. And if it was in lieu of the act of 1862 for Arizona and New Mexico, it was for Oklahoma. It was as plain as the nose on your face. There is not the slightest merit to the bill.

Mr. McClintic. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to criticize the gentleman, the leader of the minority, when I say that the enabling act of Oklahoma specifically states that in lieu of the grant of land for internal improvements and the swamp act, so many acres are given the State of Oklahoma, and not a single word refers to the act of 1862 or the act of 1866.

Mr. MANN. There is no question about that, and neither did it in section 34 of the same act, where provision is made for the new State of Arizona and New Mexico; and yet when we admitted those States by subsequent enabling acts we said, "This land is in lieu of the act of 1862," showing what the intention of Congress was.

Mr. McClintic. Mr. Speaker, of course the gentleman and I differ as to the language of this bill.

Mr. MANN. There can be no difference about these facts.

Mr. McClintic. But this is one statement that I have been unable to find—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need only look at section 34 of the act under which the State of Oklahoma was admitted.

Mr. McClintic. I do not desire to take up the time of the House this afternoon, when many other gentlemen are interested in other important measures, and I will therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record, and that the bill be allowed to remain on the calendar.

Mr. CANNON. I concede that that may be right, and yet I want to refer to a matter that has been spoken of. Under the various treaties with the Indians, which had great rights, when you extinguished the title my recollection is that we paid the Indians for land, where the titles are extinguished, $2 and perhaps $3 an acre, and the homesteader could homestead and pay the amount we paid the Indians. Under the leadership of Dennis Flynn, then a Member of the House, I do not know how much, but in the whole bill it must have amounted to $30,000,000 or $35,000,000, and half of it, I take it, and more, went to the citizens of Oklahoma, and the Government was out the amount that the original law provided.

Mr. McClintic. Just to keep the record straight, Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that we were as a State given $5,000,000 in cash in lieu of sections 16 and 36 in the Indian Territory because there was not a single acre of the same taxable.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of what your citizens got. When they homesteaded the land they were to pay for that land into the Treasury as the price of homesteading what the Government had paid to the Indians, and it amounted to from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000.

Mr. McClintic. I have no record of anything of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. I have a clear recollection of it.

Mr. McClintic. I know that the homesteaders proved up by paying the Government $1.25 per acre, but if there has been a single dollar of this money ever returned to the people of Oklahoma, I have not heard of it.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that the enabling acts of every State have been carefully read; that the reports made by the House and Senate committees in 1906 when the bill admitting Oklahoma was considered have been diligently searched; that every speech made on this subject, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all other records fail to show that it was the intention of Congress to except the State of Oklahoma from the provisions of this particular grant.

Inasmuch as all records are silent, and it has been held in the Colorado case, where the enabling act was silent as to this particular grant, that it did not take from this State the right to participate in this grant, and later on Congress by a special act did grant to this State 30,000 acres of land for each Senator and Representative in Congress when the State was admitted, I have introduced this bill and am asking that my State be given the same consideration as the other 13 States that have been admitted to the Union since the year 1862.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McClintic] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McClintic. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE OVER MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, through inadvertence the House a few minutes ago passed the bill (H. R. 12999) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., when there was a Senate bill (S. 5886) for the identical purpose on the Speaker's table. I ask unanimous consent to vacate all the proceedings taken by the House in connection with the House bill 12999.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to vacate all proceedings of the House in regard to H. R. 12999. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is to extend the time for completing a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill S. 5886 be laid before the House, a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the bill (S. 5886) extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of a bridge now in the course of construction across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., which the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co., its successors or assigns, was authorized to construct, maintain, and operate by an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved July 20, 1912, entitled 'An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River,' approved August 23, 1912," be, and the same is hereby, extended to the 1st day of April, 1917.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia what was the time fixed by the original act for the completion of the bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. By the last act the time for completion was April 17, 1916, and they are seeking to extend the time one year.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was the time fixed by the act of 1912?

Mr. CARAWAY. April 17, 1916.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How far is the bridge toward completion?

Mr. CARAWAY. The railway portion is practically complete. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, after line 6, by adding the following proviso:

"Provided, That the wagon-way portion of said bridge and the approaches thereto shall be completed within said time."

Mr. MANN. Let us know about this. There was nothing in the original report in regard to that. The gentleman can not do that without making an explanation of it. A simple bridge bill is one thing, but I do not know the purpose of this.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I will make a short explanation. The bridge company, when it was granted this charter to construct the bridge, entered into a contract with the county of Crittenden, in Arkansas, whereby it was to construct a wagon way and approaches thereto for a consideration of $65,000, to be paid by the county of Crittenden; this was to be a free wagon way. Crittenden County has paid $25,000 of the $65,000 that was to have been paid and has given a bond for the payment of the remainder. The bridge company constructed a portion of the wagon way, but none of the approaches to the wagon way, and has quit the construction of the wagon way altogether.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over and put on the Unanimous Consent Calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over and put on the Unanimous Consent Calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas if he is willing to take that course, or would he forego the amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want to forego the amendment, because it is very important to the people.

Mr. MANN. All I ask is time to look into the matter. The bill has been on the calendar for several months and passed over at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas, who never made a suggestion of this kind.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee had nothing to do with the amendment, but for several weeks we did pass it over.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Georgia asked unanimous consent to vacate the action on the bill without any knowledge of this sort, and then this amendment is offered, which nobody knows anything about except the gentleman from Arkansas, who offers it, and, of course, he knows all about it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know that two or three times the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. CARAWAY, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. McKELLAR, said that they were trying to agree on an amendment to offer.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is true, and this is the amendment that we have agreed upon.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think the gentleman from Illinois is right and that the bill should be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. I ask that it go over and take the place of the House bill on the calendar and that the House bill lie on the table.

Mr. ADAMSON. Would that cause it to lose its privileged status as a Senate bill on the Speaker's table?

Mr. MANN. It has already lost that; it has been laid before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill under consideration take the place of the House bill on the calendar and be passed over without prejudice, and that the House bill lie on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE VIRUS, SERUM, AND TOXIN ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15914) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license establishments for and to regulate the preparation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 43) in relation to the location, entry, and patenting of lands within the former Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite or other like substances, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MAYES. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next two bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, Nos. 281 and 282 (S. 4371 and H. R. 10774), authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the two bills which he indicates be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FERMENTING TUBS IN DISTILLERIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10749) amending section 3285 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3285 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows: "That every fermenting tub shall be emptied at or before the end of the fermenting period; no fermenting tub in a sweet-mash distillery shall be filled oftener than once in 72 hours unless the distiller, upon giving the proper notice, is granted permission by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to fill not oftener than once in 48 hours; nor in a sour-mash distillery oftener than once in 96 hours; nor in a rum distillery oftener than once in 144 hours; nor in a distillery where the filtration-aceration process is employed—that is, where the mash, after it leaves the mash tub is passed through a filtering machine before it is run into the fermenting tub, and only the filtered liquor passes into the fermenting tub, and the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue being secured, oftener than once in 24 hours. The provisions hereof relating to filtration-aeration process shall apply only to sweet-mash distilleries."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HURON CEMETERY, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10989) making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. TAGGART. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, this is a cemetery two acres in extent, in the very heart of the business section of Kansas City, Kans., the largest city in the State. It is a piece of ground that was granted to the Wyandotte Indians as a perpetual burial place, and for that purpose only. It has been and is now the property of the United States. The city of Kansas City is not authorized by law to spend any of the city funds in improving the cemetery. It is located right alongside a beautiful spot of ground called Huron Place, in the midst of which is the Carnegie Library. I have a letter from the city engineer stating that the surface of the cemetery is more than 12 feet above the surrounding streets. Some time ago an act was passed by Congress requiring this cemetery to be sold. The Wyandotte Indians have moved away from there down into Oklahoma. There was so much protest made by a few of their descendants who live in the city that the act was repealed by another act, and now the cemetery is the property of the Government. The Government is maintaining an eyesore in the midst of the greatest city of the State. If it was out in the suburbs, or out in the country, or any other place except directly opposite and across the street from the main business block of the city, nobody would ask for an appropriation to protect the surrounding property from the falling away of the banks of the cemetery.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. I will yield for a question, yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says the Government is maintaining an eyesore there. Did not the Government endeavor to sell the property, and did not the people there protest against the sale?

Mr. TAGGART. No; the people there were satisfied to have the property sold, but a few of the descendants of the Indians made such a bitter protest that a Senator from Kansas was moved by it and introduced a bill in the Senate and secured its passage, which canceled the power to sell the cemetery. I will state further a matter that was noticed in nearly all the newspapers, that two young ladies, the Misses Conley, who are descendants of the Wyandotte Indians, established a house in the cemetery and lived there sometime and threatened to resist with force any attempt to remove the bodies that were in the cemetery. I can not be too emphatic in stating that this is a case to which the Government ought to give some attention. The cemetery extends across two blocks of the city. It has a frontage on the main street. It has some 400 feet of boundary unprotected by a wall, where the bank is falling down on the adjacent property. One of the finest buildings in the city, the Masonic Temple, is at one corner of the cemetery property, and the cemetery rises 8 or 10 feet above the surface of the surrounding ground, and the bank is falling away.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. I will yield for a question; yes.

Mr. MANN. What is done there now in the way of taking care of that cemetery?

Mr. TAGGART. Absolutely nothing, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. There is no one authorized to spend a dollar on it.

Mr. MANN. Is there any caretaker?

Mr. TAGGART. There is no caretaker.

Mr. MANN. Are the weeds cut?

Mr. TAGGART. The weeds are not cut. There are old dead trees on the ground. The tombstones have fallen down, and, shocking to relate, the skeleton of one of the bodies that has been buried there, or a part of it, fell into the back yard of some business property at one corner of the cemetery some years ago.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that I have a recollection of the legislation which we passed before, authorizing the sale of this cemetery. Some of the Wyandotte Indians made a very bitter protest against it.

Mr. TAGGART. Extremely bitter; yes.

Mr. MANN. And Congress rescinded its action for the sale. Why should it cost $20,000—I see the Secretary of the Interior says $25,000—to put in very good order 2 acres of a cemetery which is practically a grass plot?

Mr. TAGGART. I do not think it will cost that, and the bill does not authorize any appropriation except as much as may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. The bill as introduced proposed $50,000. The Secretary of the Interior recommended $25,000. Of course he knew nothing about it, had no occasion to know anything about it, I mean, and the committee recommended $20,000. But why should it cost $25,000 to put in very good shape a cemetery of 2 acres of land?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I notice that the gentleman said that the surface of this cemetery was in some places at least 10 feet above the street.

Mr. TAGGART. Yes; more than that.

Mr. TOWNER. That would undoubtedly require that retaining walls should be constructed.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that Kansas City shall build a retaining wall.

Mr. TAGGART. Allow me to call attention to the bill—walls are to be built only where the cemetery does not bound the streets.

Mr. MANN. There is no occasion for a retaining wall anywhere else.

Mr. TAGGART. Let me read the letter from the city engineer, a very responsible man:

Subject: Huron Cemetery.

DEPARTMENT OF STREETS AND PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS,
City of Kansas City, Kans., July 18, 1916.

HON. JOSEPH TAGGART,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Yours to Mayor Green, in regard to walls around "Huron Cemetery," was referred to me.

The outside boundary, not abutting on streets, is as follows:

On the west side, 445 feet.

On the south side, 189.5 feet.

On the east side, 462 feet.

The height of surface of the cemetery above Minnesota Avenue is 16 feet.

The height of surface of the cemetery above Seventh Street is 12 feet.

The question of cost of wall, where necessary on boundary not abutting on streets, is not easy to give. There are walls along the west line now, some to the surface of the cemetery, others not half way. I would consider it necessary to build a wall along the south boundary, and probably what would be equal to 200 feet of wall along the west boundary, which will take 600 cubic yards of masonry.

Some of the wall will be exposed and some in rear of buildings.

Averaging it at $7.50 per cubic yard will make $4,500.

You will understand that much will depend on the idea, as to the necessity and kind of wall, of the one who plans the work.

Yours, truly,

WM. BARCLAY, City Engineer.

The $4,500 would be for the walls alone on that part of the boundary of the cemetery not abutting on the streets.

Mr. MANN. This ground was probably level originally where this cemetery is?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If somebody else has excavated ground up to the cemetery, the Government is under no obligation to build a wall there for the protection of the cemetery ground. That is the duty of the other man.

Mr. TAGGART. But if the abutting owner wants to protect his property from the falling of any of the embankment he may build a wall, but he can not be compelled to build it.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. The Government owns that cemetery, and there is nobody else under obligations to build any wall there. The city can not use its money to build a wall where the cemetery is not bounded by a street. It can go on and look just as ugly as nature can make it, and there is not a living soul—the city or anyone else—that can be made to do anything with it.

Mr. MANN. I was trying to help the gentleman get his bill passed, but I have not been able to see how you could expend $20,000.

Mr. TAGGART. I think you can.

Mr. MANN. In putting in repair 2 acres of land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This bill provides that the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is to be appropriated. It is not to be presumed that they will use a sum unnecessary. I think that is the safeguard that the committee had in view.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that the cemetery unquestionably needs some attention this year. Can the gentleman from Texas tell us how much would be necessary, in case an objection is raised to the full amount of $20,000?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the amount estimated for and agreed upon by the committee after full investigation of the whole matter. We thought that would be sufficient, but in order to guard against an overcharge we used the language "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. BORLAND. There is no question but that the cemetery needs attention, and that it needs it from the only owner able to give it—the Government. The United States Government must take care of it, because there is no one else to do it; but I was inquiring how much it would take this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, when I read the report I was under the impression that the bodies in the cemetery had been disinterred and that it was capable of sale. I have obtained information from the gentleman that gives me a more accurate idea of the situation, but I could not consent to such a large appropriation as $20,000. I think $8,000 would be ample under the circumstances.

Mr. TAGGART. Let me say to the gentleman that the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians moved there in 1844. This cemetery was given to them, and they began burying their dead there at that time and have continued to do so until a few years ago. Several hundred bodies have been buried there, and among the dead there I understand are the bones of soldiers who served in the Revolutionary War, in the War of 1812, in the Mexican War, and in the Civil War.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how the Revolutionary soldiers could well get there.

Mr. TAGGART. They got there as early as 1844, only 61 years from the treaty of peace.

Mr. MANN. They must have had a wearisome time of getting out there, at 100 years of age.

Mr. TAGGART. They were only 80 when they got there—not any older than some of our Civil War soldiers are now. It was only 61 years after the Revolutionary War closed when they moved there. I believe the Interior Department will not be extravagant. I think the department will spend the money carefully.

Mr. STAFFORD. The author of the bill is rather liberal in his reduction, and I am not going to haggle on this hot day over $2,000. Therefore, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I renew the objection. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas one or two questions. What is going to happen when this bill becomes a law? Will the next request be for a caretaker to go out there and take care of that cemetery, at a cost of $1,200 or $1,300 a year, or will Kansas City obligate itself to take care of it?

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that there is no provision for a caretaker in this bill. If these walls are constructed so as to retain the banks and hide away that unsightly horror, of course, nothing will need to be done with it for centuries to come.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that there are thousands, at least hundreds, of Indian cemeteries scattered all over the United States that have no caretakers.

Mr. COX. That is all true, but here is a great big city that wants to get rid of this eyesore, as the gentleman from Kansas said, and I do not blame them, but I question very much the work of Congress taking care of an eyesore of the city of Kansas City, which, with the legal power and legal provision, will come to Congress later on and get a caretaker to take care of it.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. This cemetery was reserved by the city with the Wyandotte Indians—

Mr. COX. I have read the report.

Mr. BORLAND. By which they surrendered their lands at the junction of the Missouri and the Kaw. In 1906 an attempt was made to sell the cemetery in violation of the treaty, and the descendants of the Wyandotte Indians, including Miss Lida B. Conley, a very bright young woman, objected very strongly. She and her sister camped on the place and finally took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. Sentiment became so strong that the Government saw it was not proper to sell the cemetery, because it actually contained these bodies that had not been removed, and they repealed the legislation requiring the sale. That left the title in the Federal Government. Now, that cemetery is in the very center of Kansas City, Kans. When I was a boy it was on the outskirts of the town, a beautiful rural place.

Mr. COX. Is this place a part of the district of the gentleman from Kansas or the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BORLAND. It is in the district of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART]. The Federal Government is the owner of the cemetery, and it is the only one authorized to take care of it and see that it is put in condition. This preliminary appropriation is necessary this year to put it in condition.

Mr. COX. What is going to be necessary next year?

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman permit me—

Mr. BORLAND. I will undertake to say the expense of keeping it up will be nominal, and be probably assumed by the local authorities. They are willing to assume it and they are able to do it.

Mr. COX. That is what I am trying to get at. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations—

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. COX. And he will agree with me this law, if it passes now, is strong enough later on to justify the Committee on Appropriations to make appropriation for a caretaker.

Mr. BORLAND. It would be, but I do not think we would make the appropriation for a caretaker for the care of the cemetery. Usually there is an appropriation of $250 or $300 for the care of such small cemeteries; $250 or $300 is amply sufficient to take care of a small cemetery, and it would not require a caretaker.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I remember the original bill carried something like $500 annually for the care of the cemetery and the Committee on Indian Affairs struck that out; that is my recollection.

Mr. BORLAND. Usually it requires from $250 to $500 to take care of a small cemetery. It provides for cutting the grass, looking after the headstones, and so forth.

Mr. COX. Not often; I do not remember it.

Mr. REAVIS. Are these Indian girls still in possession of the cemetery?

Mr. BORLAND. No. They went there and camped there and held possession for about two years. Then they took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States and this young lady came to me and I took her over and introduced her to the court, and they held that as she was arguing her own case she was permitted to appear before the Supreme Court of the United States without license to practice in that court. She did appear, and although the law was against her and the legal proposition which she offered was against her, she made it so clear the Federal Government had committed itself to the Wyandotte Indians when it took over their lands at the junction of the Missouri and the Kaw that this would be maintained perpetually, as the Indians say, as long as water runs and grass grows, that the sentiment was in favor of the repeal of the law. Now it is not probable that in the immediate future there will be another law passed to sell the cemetery, and therefore some provision for its care is necessary.

Mr. REAVIS. What became of the Indian girls?

Mr. BORLAND. They are still living with their friends in Kansas City.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa demands the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless the gentleman in charge of the bill agrees to an amendment striking out the proviso. My opinion is we are on a proposition to expend $20,000 of the people's money over a matter of pure sentiment affecting two more or less misguided—probably well meaning—Indians. The property should be sold, and if it were anything but an Indian cemetery it would be sold. The city ought to use it in some way, either for a park or build upon it, but yielding to this sentiment, which we all approve, we are proposing to expend $20,000 of the people's money in maintaining, for a time at least, this old cemetery, which some day must be abandoned.

But in doing that we certainly should not do the foolish thing of making declaration that this is to remain a cemetery for all time to come for the Wyandotte Indians.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit me, I think it is put in in pursuance of the treaty with the Wyandotte Indians.

Mr. MANN. If it is a treaty, why put it in there?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Unless some part of the bill should repeal it perhaps it will not be necessary.

Mr. TAGGART. I will say that I remember speaking to the committee about this at the request of the descendants of the Wyandottes, who are much concerned about it.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. They do not pay any money. It does not do any good in here so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. BORLAND. This law is subject to repeal at any future time, and it would not hurt anything to put it in here.

Mr. TAGGART. Congress can do as it pleases with the Government property at any time.

Mr. MONDELL. As the gentleman from Illinois suggests—

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. Congress can not do as it pleases. Because it has legal power it does not affect its moral obligations.

Mr. MONDELL. So far as the cemetery is concerned, it has not the power to sell and dispose of it.

Mr. MANN. We have no right to make a promise to-day that we are to break to-morrow.

Mr. TAGGART. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to the effect that hereafter Kansas City shall take care of it?

Mr. MANN. You can not do that very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TAGGART. I do not think we can do that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire why the city of Kansas City, Kans., can not take care of this property, which is within the boundaries of the city? If legislation is necessary, let us enact it. It seems to me absurd to impose upon the Federal Government the expense of taking care of a cemetery in a city simply because red people are buried there instead of white people.

Mr. MANN. After all, we make an obligation to the Indians about cemeteries. We have made many profligate obligations pertaining to western lands. We have not always lived up to them. But here is an Indian cemetery. We promised that it should remain an Indian cemetery. We have taken the lands of the Indians. There is no one else to take care of it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Why can not the city of Kansas City take care of it?

Mr. MANN. They can not be expected to unless we turn the land over to them, and we can not be expected to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. We can give them authority to take care of it by act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. We could give the State of Idaho authority to spend money there, but they could not be expected to do so.

Mr. TAGGART. The charter governing the city of Kansas City does not provide for it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The charter could be amended by the legislature so as to permit the city to take care of this land within its own borders.

Mr. TAGGART. Here the Government is asked to take care of its own property.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether there is any precedent for the National Government taking care of one of these Indian cemeteries?

Mr. TAGGART. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I am informed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs that this is the only Indian cemetery that is located in a city in the United States.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Of course, there are hundreds of those old Indian family cemeteries.

Mr. TAGGART. But out in the country.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. At various places, as well as cemeteries for white people, and unless the people of the community exercise care of these cemeteries is it necessary for the Government to take care of them?

Mr. TAGGART. Let me say to the gentleman from Alabama that this is a particularly unsightly piece of property owned by the United States, across the street from the main business block in a large city, and 12 or 15 feet higher than the surrounding streets, with the banks of it falling over onto private property abutting on it, and without anybody having authority to do anything with it at all, or to spend a dollar of the city's money to take care of it. There is no way of compelling the abutting landowners to put retaining walls there.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think we should establish a precedent for looking after these Indian cemeteries?

Mr. TAGGART. It is not a precedent, because there is not a similar situation like it in the whole Union.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Not identical.

Mr. TAGGART. I am informed by the Department of the Interior there is nothing even similar; that there is no Indian cemetery in the midst of a city elsewhere.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute submitted by the committee in place of the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the substitute will be reported in lieu of the regular bill.

There was no objection.

The substitute was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10989) making appropriation for the preservation, improvement, and perpetual care of Huron Cemetery, a burial place of the Wyandotte Indians, in the city of Kansas City, Kans.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the preservation and improvement of Huron Cemetery, a tract of land in the city of Kansas City, Kans., owned by the Government of the United States, the use of which was conveyed by treaty to the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians as a cemetery for the members of said tribe: Provided, That the authorities of Kansas City, Kans., will construct and maintain all necessary retaining or outside walls along all the boundaries of said cemetery abutting on streets: And provided further, That said tract shall remain perpetually as a cemetery exclusively for the use of the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians and their descendants, and the right of burial in said cemetery for any Indian of the Wyandotte Tribe, or any descendant of said tribe, shall not be infringed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 3, page 2, by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 3, page 2, by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$10,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the words "And provided further" on line 13, and all of lines 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out the proviso following the word "streets," in line 13, as follows:

"And provided further, That said tract shall remain perpetually as a cemetery exclusively for the use of the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians and their descendants, and the right of burial in said cemetery for any Indian of the Wyandotte Tribe or any descendant of said tribe shall not be infringed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that this provision does not extend any existing law, but, if anything, it confines the cemetery exclusively to the treaty purposes for which it was established. The Federal Government has the general title to that property, and it might use it for other purposes. But the purpose is to use it only for cemetery purposes; and if the time comes when it is not available for that, it can be entirely relinquished. Possibly the gentleman has not looked at it from that standpoint—that this is a restrictive clause, and not extensive.

Mr. MONDELL. If this is a treaty provision, it is not necessary. This is new law.

Mr. MANN. It will not be perpetually preserved as a cemetery. Everybody knows that. What is the use of unnecessarily lying?

Mr. BORLAND. The word "perpetual" might come out, but the words "exclusively for the Wyandotte Tribe" ought to remain in it.

Mr. MONDELL. Whatever their rights may be, they will be preserved and the treaty provisions ratified.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming to let the proviso remain and have it read this way: Provided further, That the right of burial in said cemetery for any Indian of the Wyandotte Tribe shall not be infringed."

Mr. MONDELL. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the members of that tribe now have, no doubt, that right, and therefore that provision is not necessary.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, let me say that the tribe moved over to Oklahoma, and not a great many members of the tribe remain. Of course, perhaps in the course of time the tribe might cease to exist, but this treaty will remain. In that event there may be people descended from the tribe who would like to be buried there.

Mr. MONDELL. Whatever their treaty rights are, they continue unaffected by the improvement we make.

Mr. TAGGART. As I recall the language of the treaty, this tract shall be set apart for the use of the Wyandotte Indians as a cemetery.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Kansas think we will be under obligations, every time a Wyandotte Indian dies in Oklahoma, to transport the remains and bury the deceased in this cemetery?

Mr. TAGGART. No; I do not think that.

Mr. MANN. We will be called on to do that if this provision stays in.

Mr. TAGGART. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAGGART, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IMPORTATION OF VIRUSES, SERUMS, TOXINS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 199) to regulate the importation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, to regulate interstate traffic in said articles, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a companion bill to a bill that has been passed over.

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no; it is not a companion bill; it is a parent bill. It has been reported several times before.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a similar bill that was passed over without prejudice; a bill relating to serums and viruses pertaining to cattle, and this pertains to the human species and is of the same general character. Therefore, I will ask to have it passed over.

Mr. ADAMSON. This relates to humans and not hogs. I ask that it be passed over and remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over and remain on the calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BILLS OF LADING IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 19) relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I noticed when the title was read—

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The title, as read by the Clerk, was "An act relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce." The title, as printed here, is much broader than that.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk read it correctly. I ask to have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That bills of lading issued by any common carrier for the transportation of goods in any Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from a place in a State to a place in a foreign country, or from a place in one State to a place in another State, or from a place in one State to a place in the same State through another State or foreign country, shall be governed by this act.

Sec. 2. That a bill in which it is stated that the goods are consigned or destined to a specified person is a straight bill.

Sec. 3. That a bill in which it is stated that the goods are consigned or destined to the order of any person named in such bill is an order bill. Any provision in such a bill or in any notice, contract, rule, regulation, or tariff that it is nonnegotiable shall be null and void and shall not affect its negotiability within the meaning of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk has not completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a long bill, and it will take considerable time to read it. It is very evident to all of the gentlemen present that the House can not, under unanimous consent, consider a bill as important as this, that has as many important features as it has; and while I do not know that there is anything in the bill of which I do not approve, I shall be compelled to object, because of the importance of the measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not object to letting the bill keep its place on the calendar. I think myself that while it might not be possible to pass the bill in the remainder of this afternoon, it would not take a great while to pass it on the next unanimous-consent day, if it stays on the calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall remain on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I have no doubt it is excellent legislation, but we can not give it the time this afternoon that it requires.

Mr. CULLOP. I will say to the gentleman that we could not devote our time this afternoon to a better purpose than to considering this bill.

Mr. MANN. It is now nearly 4 o'clock, and I am quite sure you could not finish the bill to-day. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] ought to ask unanimous consent to pass the bill over without prejudice.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course that is what I will ask if the bill is objected to. I hoped the gentleman would not insist on the objection.

Mr. MANN. Let us be on the square about it. Everybody knows we could not finish it to-day. It is possible that on the next unanimous-consent day we may get it up and pass it, and I hope we may.

Mr. ADAMSON. I supposed that everybody understood it and was ready to vote on it.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to be on the square about these things. I am acting on the square myself, and gentlemen ought not to bluff about these matters. It makes me tired when they do.

Mr. CULLOP. We are not bluffing. We could pass it if gentlemen would stay here and consider it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana is not in good faith about the matter—

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman from Indiana is in good faith. We could have a session to-morrow if we did not get through to-day.

Mr. MANN. We could not. We have already agreed to adjourn over until Saturday.

Mr. CULLOP. We could take it up Saturday.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not have the nerve to make that request in the absence of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and he knows it.

Mr. CULLOP. We can have the gentleman from North Carolina come in here on Saturday—

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know what gentlemen are talking about on either side about bluffing. I do not want to make any bluff, or fall over any, but if objection is made, then I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. If we are to have a meeting next Wednesday, it is likely that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will be called. Will the gentleman call up this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state to the gentleman that I am authorized by the committee to avail myself of any parliamentary method I can in order to get it considered at any time.

Mr. ESCH. Then it will be possible to take it up Wednesday?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. There are a good many matters which ought to come up. I do not think this bill ought to be considered.

Mr. EVANS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Montana objects. Does the gentleman object to the bill remaining on the calendar?

Mr. EVANS. Not at all. I am simply objecting to its present consideration for the purpose of getting the gentleman from Georgia to request that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to that.
Mr. ADAMSON. There is no objection to the bill remaining on the calendar.

Mr. EVANS. Not at all.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar and be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

MILITIA OF GEORGIA.

The next business on the calendar for unanimous consent was the bill (S. 708) to make immediately available for the use of the State of Georgia in paying expenses incurred by said State in connection with the joint encampment held at Augusta, Ga., July 22 to 31, 1914, certain sums appropriated for arming and equipping the militia of said State.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. I think the gentlemen interested in it are looking up some information.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 108) to confer upon the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma the authority now conferred by law upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting lands allotted to the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes and their individual moneys.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. I object.
Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will not the gentleman from Wisconsin consent that the bill remain on the calendar and go over without prejudice?
Mr. STAFFORD. No; I can not consent to that. I am decidedly opposed to the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

STREET RAILWAYS IN HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16640) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, as amended by an act approved July 25, 1914.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the present, I object.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?
Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve it.
Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, this is a case in which the franchise for this street railway system in the district of Hilo is about to expire. The right to the charter will expire on the 1st of August. Unless it is passed this afternoon it will probably be the last chance that we will have to get it through the House and the Senate in time to prevent its expiration.

Hilo is a little city of 9,000 inhabitants on the island of Hawaii. The people are extremely anxious for this road. It is simply a street car privilege. Its terminus is at the wharf, where the people have been subject to extortion by hack drivers who convey the passengers from the steamers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think that a 10-cent fare for a taxi is outrageous?

Mr. WATKINS. No.
Mr. STAFFORD. I can testify that that is the charge.
Mr. WATKINS. I have been there, and I never got carried for that price. The uniform price is 25 cents, I am informed. Sometimes when there is a large crowd they charge much more. But, Mr. Speaker, regardless of that, the people want this privilege. They are in a financial condition now to avail themselves of the privileges of the charter.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WATKINS. Yes.
Mr. BORLAND. What has been the cause of their not availing themselves of the franchise within the limits of the act?
Mr. WATKINS. Because the promoters of the enterprise were not able to raise the funds or the capital, and it is only until recently that they have made financial arrangements whereby they can avail themselves of the privilege.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it ascertained that they are going to be able to finance it now?

Mr. WATKINS. That is what those interested in the passage of the bill say; the representative from the island—the Delegate—and the governor of the Territory and Members that have appeared before the Committee on the Territories all vouch for that fact.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there any contention made that they are trying to dispose of the franchise, to treat it as an asset and use it for speculation, or anything of that kind?

Mr. WATKINS. Not at all. Three of the wealthiest inhabitants of the island are among the promoters.

Mr. BORLAND. And they really intend to build the road and put it in operation?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman advise the House what was the purpose of exempting from taxation for a period of 10 years all the property of every kind and nature used as a part of the railway and power system? You would include under that phraseology not only the rolling stock, the roadbed, but you would exempt any power plant that furnished them any power even in an incidental way in the operation of this street-car system. The gentleman can not approve of any such exemption as that.

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; I do, and for this reason: The Territories are not in a financial condition as are the States of the United States; they have not got the capital or the facilities.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, some of them have more capital than the States have.

Mr. WATKINS. A few individuals, those interested in sugar.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but banks and bankers.

Mr. WATKINS. There are some wealthy banks in Honolulu, but not in Hilo, or only one at the most. The great mass of the people are impoverished. All the enterprises in Honolulu—the gas companies, electric light plants, traffic, and power plants—have a similar privilege of exemption accorded to them for the purpose of encouraging them to make investments.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean to say that if a power plant is established and a part of the power is used in propelling a street car system that thereby it should be completely exempt from taxation for 10 years?

Mr. WATKINS. Not unless it is a part of the corporation itself, a part of the enterprise.

Mr. STAFFORD. This would grant exemption from taxation any power plant whose power was used incidentally in the propulsion of this street car system.

Mr. WATKINS. That is not the object of the bill, and if the gentleman wishes I will accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over until the next unanimous-consent day.

Mr. WATKINS. If the gentleman takes that course, it virtually vitiates the whole enterprise. The bill has to go to the Senate and then to the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not my fault; I am not responsible for the phraseology reported in the bill. It is in a form that would exempt any power plant that furnished a part of its power for this street railway system.

Mr. WATKINS. I would be glad if the gentleman would offer an amendment to strike that out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not the amendment prepared to correct that evil.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman any objection to the bill remaining on the calendar?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I have already stated that I have not.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL LAND IN ABANDONED MILITARY RESERVATIONS, NEV.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 5466, an act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry and desert-land entry, and to amend an act entitled "An act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry," approved October 1, 1890.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have that bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman prefer that I would object?

Mr. RAKER. No; I ask that the gentleman withhold his request.

Mr. MANN. I will. I have no bill on the calendar that I want to reach, but I can not consent to this bill going through by unanimous consent. This bill has a title that has no relation to the bill and it shows that the author has given no study to it. The bill says "to amend an act entitled an act to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entrance," approved October 1, 1890, and there is no reference to such an act in the bill. That shows that the gentleman who reported the bill has not read it.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes; the gentleman has.

Mr. MANN. Not carefully.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; very carefully. Let us get the facts before the House.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to take up the time of the House, very well.

Mr. RAKER. I will take up a few moments, if the gentleman will withhold his objection. The gentleman has made his statement, and I think I should be permitted to make a statement in reply. The committee fully considered this bill, and the title of the report is the same title that the Senate used.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but the Senate having used the title and the bill having been passed, to cover agricultural land in the military reservations the committee thought to use this same title. That is all there is to it, agricultural land in the military reservations that is subject to homestead—that is, subject to desert-land entry—and the Committee on the Public Lands amended the bill so as to make it specific and to cover the question and the only question in the bill, namely, that desert-land entries should be permitted only upon land that the desert-land law applied to, and, therefore, covered the report of the Secretary of the Interior. We gave that due consideration for that purpose, and I asked the committee myself, was appointed chairman of the subcommittee, and asked that the bill be amended and wrote the amendment myself upon the matter so as to correspond with the secretary's report, to the end that the people of Nevada might get exactly what they wanted, and we thought that we were creating a good act for them. I trust that the gentleman may see his way clear to withdraw his objection.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report and examined the bill. How many acres will the bill affect?

Mr. RAKER. I will read the report to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not read it to me. The report does not show. Does not the gentleman know that?

Mr. RAKER. The report shows.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report and the report does not show how much acreage is affected by the bill. What the report does say is, quoting the letter from the Secretary of the Interior:

There are six reservations in the State of Nevada that will perhaps be affected by the proposed legislation.

Then it gives the acreage of those reservations, one of them 257 acres, and so forth. To say that that shows how much acreage will be affected by the bill is ridiculous. There has been no investigation even by the Interior Department. They say there are perhaps six reservations which will perhaps be affected. Nobody knows anything about it, unless it is my distinguished friend from California [Mr. RAKER]; and if he does, he has not told us.

Mr. RAKER. Of course I could not develop it all at once, but I want to say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] appeared before the committee, and, in addition to this statement, gave to the committee information—

Mr. MANN. He may have the information, and therefore I ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have the bill passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DECLARATIONS OF INTENTION TO BECOME CITIZENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4594) to validate certain declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question, can the gentleman state when these petitions for naturalization were dismissed by the court?

Mr. RAKER. The record here does not show, but the hearings do show, my recollection is, though that was not the main thing before the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration. They have been dismissed within the last year, as I recollect.

Mr. WALSH. Only within the last year?

Mr. RAKER. That is my recollection; yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States filed prior to the passage of this act in the counties of Cascade, Chouteau, Teton, Hill, Blaine, and Valley, State of Montana, under the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," as amended by the acts of March 4, 1909, June 25, 1910, and March 4, 1913, are hereby declared to be as legal and valid as if such declarations of intention had been filed in the judicial district in which the declarants resided, as required by section 4 of said act of June 29, 1906: Provided, That such declarations of intention shall not be by this act further validated or legalized.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, after the word six," insert: "and that the petitions for naturalization dismissed on account of such invalidity in the declaration of intention shall be given a rehearing without additional cost, upon informal application therefor by the candidate for citizenship to the clerk of court upon notice to the Bureau of Naturalization."

Page 2, line 13, after the word "legalize," insert: "and that this act shall apply only to those persons who have heretofore made homestead, desert land or timber and stone entries."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STREET RAILWAYS IN HAWAII.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill (H. R. 16640) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1912, as amended by an act approved July 25, 1914, as we have agreed to strike out section 7 of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to recur to the Hawaiian street railway franchise bill H. R. 16640. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act granting a franchise for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway system in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii," as amended by an act approved July 25, 1914, is hereby amended by striking out subsections (b), (c), and (f) thereof and inserting new subsections (b) and (c), which shall read as follows: "(b) 'Commission' shall mean the public utilities commission of the Territory of Hawaii.

"(c) 'County of Hawaii' shall mean the present county of Hawaii, or such political division as the legislature shall from time to time designate, including the district hereinafter defined."

SEC. 2. That wherever the words "board" or "governor" or "board with the approval of the governor" are contained in said act there shall be substituted "commission," if being the intention to grant the powers granted in said original act to said board and the governor to said commission, excepting, however, that where the word "board" is used in subsections (a), (f), and (h) of section 4 of said original act, the said word "board" shall refer to and mean the board of supervisors of the county of Hawaii.

SEC. 3. That section 4 of said act is hereby amended so that subsection (e) thereof shall read as follows:

"(e) The construction of the railway shall be commenced and at least the sum of $20,000 shall have been expended or contracted to be expended on or before August 1, 1918, and at least 2 miles shall be completed, equipped, and ready for the transportation of passengers within two years after such commencement.

"At least two additional miles of the railway shall be completed, equipped, and ready for operation within six years from the passage of the amendatory act by the Congress of the United States, and in case of failure to comply with such requirements the privileges granted by section 2 of this act shall cease as to any streets, roads, thoroughfares, or places not then occupied:

Provided, That if there is any period during which work shall be suspended by reason of bona fide actions, suits, or injunctions instituted through no fault of the association but causing delay in the construction or commencement of operations of said railway, the time so lost shall not be counted as part of the periods of limitation above specified.

"Additions and extensions of the railway shall be constructed by the association, and when so constructed, or constructed by others, shall thereafter be maintained and operated by it whenever, after notice and an opportunity to be heard, it shall be directed so to do by the public utilities of said Territory: Provided, That the commission shall not so direct unless in its opinion the earnings of the association when operating such additions and extensions, together with its previously existing railway system, will be sufficient for its reasonable expenses of maintenance and operation, interest, and sinking fund on its indebtedness, and dividends of 8 per cent per annum on its issued stock; and the commission may likewise permit the association to cease the maintenance and operation of any portion of the railway system whenever in its opinion conditions so warrant or require."

SEC. 4. That section 8 is hereby amended by striking out the second paragraph in said section relating to a public-utility board.

SEC. 5. That section 12 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "chapter 64 of the Revised Laws of Hawaii," in lines 10 and 11 thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "chapter 52 of the Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1915."

SEC. 6. That section 15 of said act is hereby amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 15. That the rights, privileges, and franchises hereby granted to the association shall continue during the pleasure of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, with the approval of the Congress of the United States, subject only to the limitations in this act contained."

SEC. 7. That section 16 of said act is hereby amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 16. That all property of every kind and nature forming or used as a part of the railway and power system of the association, including this franchise, shall be exempt from any and all taxation under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii until the expiration of 10 years from and after the passage of this amendatory act."

SEC. 8. That section 17 of this act is hereby amended as follows: Strike out all after paragraph 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The association shall pay to the county of Hawaii, within one month after the expiration of each year, 2½ per cent of the gross receipts derived from transportation during the preceding calendar year."

"No member of the association, or of any assignee or successor of the same, and no stockholder or officer of any corporation securing any or all of the rights herein granted to the association shall become interested, directly or indirectly, in any contract made by the association, its assignees or successors, for the construction of any part of the railway or for the supply of its rolling stock."

SEC. 9. That section 19 of said act is hereby amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 19. The Territory of Hawaii, the county of Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, within or including the district of South Hilo, may at any time after the expiration of 20 years from the date of the passage of this act by the Congress of the United States, and upon six months' notice in writing to the association, given pursuant to proper authority, when so authorized by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, acquire by purchase all the property of the association, subject to the then existing charges thereon."

"The amount to be paid to the association for such purchase shall be determined by a commission of three persons, one to be appointed by the association, or, in case it should fail to do so within 30 days after having been requested to do so by the purchaser, then by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii; one by the purchaser, and the third by the two so appointed; or, in case they should fail to agree upon the third member within 30 days, then by said chief justice, any such action by the chief justice to be taken only after giving to each party notice and an opportunity to be heard; but such amount shall in no case exceed the actual cost or the actual value of the tangible property or the actual cost of reproducing or replacing it less depreciation and less the charges thereon. The value of the franchise or good will or any other intangible element shall not be considered in determining the amount to be paid."

"Either the association or the purchaser may appeal to the Supreme Court of Hawaii from the decision of such commission by filing a written notice of appeal with the commission within five days after the decision is rendered. It shall thereupon be the duty of the commission immediately to certify up to the supreme court the record of its proceedings, showing in such certificate the valuation claimed by the association, the valuation claimed by the purchaser, and the valuation as determined by the commission. Such certificate shall be accompanied by copies of all papers, documents, and evidence upon which the decision of the commission was based and a copy of such decision. Upon any such appeal the supreme court may in its behalf take or require further evidence to be introduced by either party."

"Within six months after the determination of the purchase price, as aforesaid, the same shall be paid to the association, and thereupon the franchise granted hereby shall cease and determine, and all the property of said association shall become the property of such purchaser without any further conveyance; but said association shall make all such further conveyances as may be desired by the purchaser and approved by said commission or said court on appeal."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out section 7.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, since this bill was under consideration I have examined the original section which this section 7 seeks to amend and find that it is substantially in the language embodied here, except the general provision that requires the assent of Congress. The striking out of this merely leaves the law as it is, and I can not see any reason for striking it out. Therefore I shall not insist upon the amendment, and will ask the gentleman from Louisiana to withdraw it.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WATKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LAND NEEDED FOR TOWN SITES IN CONNECTION WITH IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15958) to amend an act providing for the withdrawal from public entry lands needed for town sites in connection with irrigation projects.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the bill reported and some explanation made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of an act entitled "An act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for town-site purposes in connection with irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes," approved April 16, 1906, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for town-site purposes in connection with irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes,' approved April 16, 1906," be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That whenever a development of power is necessary for the irrigation of lands under any project undertaken under the said act, or any opportunity is afforded for the development of power under any such project, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease for a period not exceeding 50 years, giving preference to irrigation districts duly organized under State law and to municipal purposes, any surplus power or power privilege, and the money derived from such leases shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be placed to the credit of the project from which said power is derived: Provided, That no lease shall be made for such surplus power or power privilege as will impair the efficiency of the irrigation project: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to make such a lease in connection with the Rio Grande project in Texas and New Mexico for a period not exceeding 50 years, with the approval of the water users' association or associations, under any such project organized in conformity with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in pursuance of section 6 of the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902."

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "act" insert the words "of February 24, 1911." Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "said act" and insert the words "reclamation law." Page 2, line 10, after the word "Interior" insert the words "with the approval of the legally organized and acting water-users' association or associations under any such project." Page 2, line 13, after the word "preference" insert the words "to municipal purposes and." Page 2, line 15, strike out the words "and to municipal purposes." Page 2, line 21, after the word "project" strike out all down to and including line 4, page 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have reserved the right to object. As I understand this bill, the purpose of the amendment is to increase the power to grant these leases of water power from 10 to 50 years?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is the purpose of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there anything else in the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Nothing except it provides that the water users shall give their permission to any leases that may be entered into by the Secretary of the Interior before such leases become effective. The present law does not contain that provision, and inasmuch as many of these projects are almost completed and will be turned over to the settlers, it was deemed advisable to insert this provision requiring the permission of the water users to any leases that the Secretary should enter into with those who desire to lease the surplus power.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, the gentleman is aware of the fact that the dams themselves will not be turned over to the water users?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I understand they are reserved to the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. They will remain the property of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; they remain the property of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. And exactly what is the necessity now of putting the veto of the water users upon the operation by the Government of its own property?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The water users living within a project naturally feel that they have a direct interest in the project, and that the Secretary of the Interior should not enter into a lease without the permission of the water users' associations, and there is no particular objection to this provision as far as the department is concerned, and I think it would have a tendency to make the water users more satisfied if they are consulted before the contracts are entered into to lease this power, especially in view of the fact that they pay the cost of constructing the projects.

Mr. MONDELL. And is not this true, the settlers being upon these projects they pay for the dam? They pay all the expenditures that produce the power. It is true that the title to the dam remains in the Government, but the settlers really own it in that they are the people who pay for it, and therefore there should not be any long-time contracts for the use of power developed at the expense of the settlers except with the approval of the settlers. I will say to my friend I think it will result in greater care in the granting of these contracts, and a more careful scrutiny of them than heretofore.

Mr. BORLAND. Under this amendment the gentleman will observe it does not make any difference whether a lease is a long-time lease or not. This gives the right to approve any lease, but the period is not to exceed 50 years, but a lease for six months would be just as much subject to their veto as a lease for 50 years. It is not confined to long-time leases.

Mr. MONDELL. I discussed that matter with some members of the committee, and suggested to them that so far as some of the short-time leases were concerned it probably was not necessary to have that provision in the bill, and I think no one would especially object to an amendment which would authorize the Secretary to make the short-time lease. The intent is for the water users to have something to say about the leases, especially for a considerable length of time, and personally I can see no real objection to having the water users consulted in case of any lease. If the lease was only for a brief period, the probability is it would only require formal action on the part of the water users' association. They could be gotten together very promptly, I think, without any delay, and even if the lease is only for a year or two I think they ought to be invited in and their advice sought in the matter. So even for a brief period I think it is a very good provision, although it seems to me there would be no very great objection to giving the Secretary authority to make short-time contracts. We have reached the time when these improvements ought to begin operations.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman realizes that there is one dam, the Arrowrock Dam, I think, to which this is especially applicable; but the general situation is ripe where the power is practically completed. There are other dams in the course of construction and in order to realize on them their surplus power temporarily must be disposed of.

Mr. MONDELL. What possible objection could the settlers have to entering into a lease—

Mr. BORLAND. There occasionally arises friction between the water-users' association and the Reclamation Service, sometimes about the imposition of charges, sometimes about the collection of charges, and there might not be complete harmony of action on every project between the service and the settlers. The hands of the settlers and the service would be tied.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The Committee on Irrigation, having charge of this matter, you will notice simply amended the bill so that in all instances not only in the one provided by law, but in all instances hereafter before this lease can be made, it must be approved by the legally organized water-users' association or associations. This bill, instead of simply allowing the municipality to lease, extends it to irrigation districts that may be organized in the State, with the consent of the water-users' association. I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri, it seems to me no better piece of legislation could be passed than to permit this water-users' development in the way of electrical energy to be established, and I trust the gentleman will not make an objection to this. Really it is valuable and means much to those irrigation projects, and brings a revenue to them.

Mr. BORLAND. The department can be expected to get the best revenue out of the dams and water power. It does the best it can on that, but it seems to me during the construction days the hands of the department ought to be free. They ought not to be asked to have the approval of the water-users' associations, who in some cases have not contributed anything to their construction.

Mr. RAKER. If you are going to permit the leasing of that power the man who pays for it eventually ought to have some say in regard to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a bill to lease water power?

Mr. RAKER. Surplus water power in reclamation projects, if there is any development. The Secretary must have the consent of the association before he can do it. There is a law now on the statute books allowing the municipality to do it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think a bill of this importance better keep its place on the calendar and go over for a few days, until we have a chance to look at it. The leasing of water power is the greatest question before the American people, or one of the greatest, to-day. Otherwise I shall have to object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment? This bill is simply to amend an existing law. The present law provides for a lease of 10 years for sale of surplus power on Government irrigation projects. It has nothing to do with general legislation affecting power sites or dam sites, absolutely nothing, and because of the short period of time provided by the present law it is impossible to get the money to build power plants that are necessary, costing from $100,000 to $500,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You want to make this 50 years?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Not exceeding 50 years.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is modest.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is within the discretion of the Secretary; not exceeding 50 years.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Forty-eight years would be considerable time. I shall object, unless it can go over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Unless it can go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make that request?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE OF COAL DEPOSITS IN MONTANA.

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate joint resolution No. 50, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the coal deposits in and under certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MAYS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Utah object?

Mr. MAYS. If the gentleman from Montana wants to make a statement, I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. STOUT. I do not know that the statement will make any difference if the gentleman has his mind made up to object. He is on the committee. This simply provides that the Republic Coal Co., which is a subsidiary company of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co., may lease from the Government 1,440 acres of coal land at prices which will be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. In further explanation of that I will simply state that the information which we have been able to gather leads to the conclusion that the railroad company is practically without coal for a distance of 1,300 or 1,400 miles of its railroad. The competing lines have all the coal they need. They secured it in the early days, before the present restrictive provisions with reference to the disposition of Government coal lands were passed; but this road, having been built out there within the last 10 years, was not in position to take advantage of such opportunities. There is no way to get coal unless they buy it from the competing line, and a competitor will not sell coal on a reasonable basis. The Senate passed a resolution for the sale of coal land to this railroad company on terms fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, which appeals to me to be entirely fair. We have 8,000,000,000 tons of coal in that field there. This takes up only 8,000,000 tons of it. We get our price for it, and I can see no reasonable objection whatever for handling the matter in this way. I trust that the gentleman may in time see fit to withdraw his objection.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOUT. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does the resolution provide for outright sale or royalty?

Mr. STOUT. It shall be leased as provided by the House committee.

Mr. COX. It provides for royalty?

Mr. STOUT. It provides for any sort of a price that the Secretary of the Interior may fix—royalty, cash price, or anything.

Mr. COX. For the benefit of the railroad or the people along the railroad?

Mr. STOUT. Well, it is a necessity for the railroad, and the railroad naturally performs a function for the public.

Mr. COX. Was there any estimate as to how much coal they have got there?

Mr. STOUT. There is an estimate here in the report. There is in that coal field several hundred thousand acres of coal land, with 8,000,000,000 tons of coal, and this proposes to sell something like—

Mr. COX. Is there any estimate as to what the value of the 1,500 acres is?

Mr. STOUT. Well, it is appraised by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COX. That is what I wanted to find out—what it is appraised at.

Mr. STOUT. I have not the figures, but being acquainted with the coal fields in that section, I would say it is appraised at $40 or $50 an acre. It is a low-grade coal, fit only for steaming purposes. This particular railroad had only a section of coal land to start with and they worked that out, and they now have no coal land from the Missouri River to the coast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MAYS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah objects.

BAGGAGE IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a request to consider the bill known as the Cummins amendment to the interstate commerce law, affecting baggage.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. RAKER. I will withhold it for a minute.

Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that next Wednesday, as soon as the preliminary business on the Speaker's table is disposed of, I may be recognized for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS], asks unanimous consent that on next Wednesday, after the disposition of routine business on the Speaker's table and conference reports, he may be recognized for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the copper-tax feature of the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the copper-tax feature of the revenue bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. If we are to sit next Wednesday, will the almanac calendar be called?

Mr. MANN. I take it that the gentleman from Georgia wants it called.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask for information. That is "sacred Wednesday." I want to be prepared.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the child labor bill and infantile paralysis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subjects indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a resolution passed by the women voters of the eighth congressional district of Kansas at the Wichita Club on July 17, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the resolution indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the resolution referred to:

Resolved, That we women voters of the eighth congressional district, meeting this 17th day of July, 1916, at the Wichita Club, Wichita, Kans., determine to do all in our power to help the women of the East secure Federal recognition, hereby call on our representative in Congress, the Hon. WILLIAM A. AYRES, to work constantly to bring about the passage of the Susan B. Anthony amendment in the quickest, surest way possible; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to Hon. WILLIAM A. AYRES with the request that it be read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mrs. THOR JÄGER,
Chairman Woman's Party for the Eighth Congressional District.
BERNICE BEACHY,
Secretary Woman's Party for the Eighth Congressional District.

Passed unanimously July 17, 1916.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14576. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13620. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 12194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 11240. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bill (S. 5425) to standardize lime barrels.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 968. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Huron Cemetery bill that passed to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until Saturday, July 29, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1916.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 25, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15774) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that every morning at 10 o'clock there are only three or four Senators in the Chamber, and if we are not going to be on time I think the hour of meeting ought to be changed. In order that we may have a quorum some one is compelled to call for it every morning. Therefore I suggest the absence of a quorum again this morning.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I wish to support what the Senator from Utah said. Many of us try to get here at very great inconvenience. I left a number of engagements at my hotel this morning, and I shall have to go back there; and it is a waste of time.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a regular farce.

Mr. PENROSE. I have never believed, in my long service here, in meeting at 10 o'clock. Senators do not come here, we do not accomplish anything by it, and we curtail the time that ought to be devoted to matters outside of this Chamber. I think the gentlemen on the other side who are managing the proceedings of the Senate ought to seriously consider whether we would not really accomplish just as much business by meeting at 11 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Nelson	Simmons
Brandegge	Husting	Norris	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Gorman	Smoot
Chilton	Jones	Overman	Stone
Clapp	Kenyon	Page	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Penrose	Thompson
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Townsend
Curtis	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Walsh
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Williams
Gallinger	Myers	Sherman	Works

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. GRONNA, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is the first amendment in the bill, known as the half-and-half plan of taxation in the District, striking out from line 3 on page 1 to line 10 on page 2 and inserting from line 11 on page 2 to line 17, inclusive.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, strike out lines 11 to 17, inclusive, and insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by good and sufficient deed of conveyance, to the Government of the United States all property of the District of Columbia of every kind and nature, real, personal, and mixed, and the United States Government, in consideration of such conveyance, shall, and does hereby, assume and will pay all the debts of every kind and nature of the said District of Columbia.

That the municipality of the District of Columbia shall, upon such conveyance of its property, be, and it is hereby, dissolved and abolished, and its powers, duties, and obligations transferred to and vested in the United States, and the said District shall become and the territory now constituting the District of Columbia shall hereafter be known and designated as the City of Washington; and said City of Washington is hereby declared to be the Capital of the United States and under the direct ownership control, and supervision of the Government, without the intervention of any municipal corporation or body.

That until otherwise provided by act of Congress the officers of the District of Columbia shall be and continue as the officers of the National Government, and shall perform for the Government the same duties now performed for the District of Columbia, and be subject to all laws and rules and regulations now in force as to their appointment, terms of office, and removal until otherwise provided by law: Provided, That such commissioners shall hereafter be known and designated as the Commissioners of the City of Washington, and all other officers of said District shall be known, respectively, and designated as officers of said City of Washington.

That all privately owned property in the District of Columbia, hereafter to be designated as the City of Washington, shall be subject to reasonable and just taxes, to be used to pay the expenses of said City of Washington: Provided, That the rate of taxation and the basis of assessment of property shall remain as now provided by law, and all other provisions for raising revenues for said District shall remain in force and be applied to the payment of the expenses of the City of Washington as herein provided.

That all moneys derived from such taxation assessments or other means provided by law shall be paid into the United States Treasury, to be applied to the expenses of said City of Washington, but the expenses of the City of Washington shall be paid by the Government out of its Treasury by appropriations made by Congress, without regard to the amount collected from privately owned property, and the property owners, within the District shall not be responsible therefor, except for the payment of their taxes, the purpose and intention being to constitute the District of Columbia, hereafter to be known as the City of Washington, the Capital of the Nation, and to make the Government wholly and alone responsible for its government, maintenance, upbuilding, and beautification, and to deprive the municipal government of all control over the same, and to relieve the property owners and residents of the District of all such responsibility or control, except for the payment of such taxes as may be lawfully assessed against them or their property.

That until otherwise provided by act of Congress taxes shall be levied, assessed, and collected as now provided by law, except that the same shall not be based upon the estimated expenses of the District, or the one-half thereof, but upon a reasonable and just estimate of the obligations of property owners and residents of the District as compensation for the benefits and advantages resulting to them from the maintenance and support of the Capital by the Government in which they live or own property, according to the rate of taxation and basis of assessment above provided for.

That all causes of action that might under the laws as they now exist be prosecuted against the District of Columbia, whether arising before or after the passage of this act, may hereafter be prosecuted by appropriate action in the courts against the United States the same as they may, under existing law, be prosecuted against such District.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I am not disposed just at this moment to raise the point of order upon this amendment. It is certainly new legislation, and legislation of the utmost importance. I think, however, that the Senator from California may have some views to express, and at this time I shall not raise the point of order. I may do so later on.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that is very kind of the chairman of the committee. I should have said about the same in dealing with the general subject of the half-and-half, whether this amendment were declared out of order or not. So no time will be lost by the concession made by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I have been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia ever since I have been in the Senate. In the performance of my duties I have tried to represent what seemed to me to be the best interests of the District, not alone of the people who happen to live in the District but in the broader sense the interests of the whole country, as this is the capital of the Nation.

Unfortunately, there are a good many people in the city of Washington who seem to think that this is purely a local question, and that the District of Columbia is maintained and managed and controlled in the interest of the people who live within the District. The broader view of the fact that it is the capital of the Nation and that the people in my State and other States of the Union are interested in the District of Columbia is to a very great extent overlooked.

Unfortunately for the District, it is located a little too far east and south. It has suffered from the deadly conservatism of the East and the mañana, never do anything to-day that you can put off until to-morrow, of the South. They are both too well content with things as they are.

We are living under what is called the organic act, which was enacted nearly 40 years ago and which is entirely inadequate and inefficient to meet the needs of the District as it is to-day. That I shall attempt to demonstrate in the course of my remarks.

I am not going to enter into a detailed history of the District. That can be found by Senators, if they desire to look into it, in the extensive hearings which were held by a joint select committee of the two Houses that performed the duty imposed upon it during the last vacation.

I want, however, to call attention, in a very general way, to the conditions as they have existed since this became the seat of government. The District of Columbia was acquired for that purpose, because it was found by experience that it was exceedingly unwise and undesirable to undertake to maintain the capital of the Nation within one of the States, where conflicting interests were constantly arising, and which finally resulted in riots in the city of Philadelphia. Therefore it was acquired for the purpose of giving absolute and exclusive control over the territory covered by the seat of government to the Congress of the United States. It certainly was not intended that there should be any local municipal organization for that purpose. The Constitution provides in express terms that Congress shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia; but when the Government took possession of its seat of government it was exceedingly poor, and, as might be expected, it lacked the means to build up the National Capital and to make the necessary improvements that were called for at that time. Congress was content, therefore, to leave in existence the municipal corporation that then existed within the territory, including the city of Washington, the city of Georgetown, and the city of Alexandria.

That experiment of divided authority and divided responsibility as between a local municipal corporation and the National Government proved a failure. Then it was attempted to form a government taking in the whole of the territory, the government of which was constituted of a mayor and city council, which was eventually largely under the control of Mr. Shepherd, who came to be called "Boss" Shepherd, and who, by the way, did a great service to the District of Columbia and the Government by pressing improvements that should have been made. He brought some life into the administration of the District of Columbia; he brought about improvements of the greatest consequence to the District; and he did it largely in defiance of law and without authority. In doing it he involved the District in an indebtedness of something over $20,000,000. The District as a local government was totally unable to meet that debt. The Government of the United States was compelled to come to the rescue in order to maintain its own credit and to meet its obligations. It did so by funding that debt, in the first place, and in the enactment of the law provided that the indebtedness should be paid one-half by the District of Columbia and one-half by the National Government, but providing a sinking fund to meet the principal, so that the obligation on the part of the two was simply the payment of the interest accruing upon the bonds, and to gradually pay off the principal of the debt.

That debt has been reduced now, until there is an indebtedness upon the District of Columbia, so called, of something like $6,000,000, and the question as to how that obligation should be met was one of the things that was considered by the committee to which I have referred.

So the second venture—if it was the second; there may have been others—by which it was attempted to govern the District of Columbia through a mayor and a city council, or municipal organization, proved to be a complete failure. Something had to be done by the National Government in order to meet the situation. That resulted in what is now called the "organic act," that was passed in 1878, nearly 40 years ago, by which it was provided that one-half of the expenditures necessary to carry on the government of the District of Columbia should be paid by the National Government and one-half by the District of Columbia. In bringing that condition of things about, however, the District of Columbia, as a municipal government, was stripped of all authority, of all power, and was left a mere shell. It is a municipal corporation merely in name. It has no power to collect money; it has no treasury; it has no power to pay out any money; it has no power to legislate; in fact, Mr. President, it has no power to do anything; but while it is maintained in this anomalous way the Government of the United States, acting through Congress, is the sole power to deal with the questions that are presented in the District.

The statute providing for the half-and-half payment was a compromise. It was brought about by an endeavor to bring the District out of the difficulties that had resulted from the Shepherd administration of affairs, and to put the District upon a more solid basis. I think the Members of Congress who brought about that compromise statute had no idea that it would last until now.

I am going to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony before the committee of one of the ex-Senators who had himself to do with that matter, who was at the time the organic act was passed a Member of the other House, who so testified before the committee, and who gives it as his opinion that as conditions now are the half-and-half principle ought not to be maintained.

Ever since I have been in the Senate, and I do not know for how long before that, there has been a controversy between Congress and the people resident in the District of Columbia over this half-and-half question, and, very unfortunately, as it seems to me, some of the Members of Congress—and I think I may fairly say Congress as a body—have placed the Government of the United States in the peculiar situation of imposing upon the taxpayers of the District the burden and an obligation of managing and maintaining the District of Columbia, and the Government has contented itself with being a mere contributor to the fund necessary to pay the expenses of its own Capital.

Mr. President, that is utterly foreign to my ideas of what the District of Columbia should be and of the obligations of the National Government and the duty of Congress in dealing with the affairs of the District.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from California to ask him a question?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. If I understand the Senator from California, one of his objections to the present situation is that the residents of the District are required to pay taxes and that they are having no voice in their own affairs locally. I understand the Senator himself to favor the election of a Delegate, does he not, to the House of Representatives, at least, from the District?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was not intending to discuss that question at the present time. I have no objection, however, to giving my views upon the subject, as the Senator seems to desire that I shall.

Mr. POMERENE. I should like to have the Senator express his views upon that subject, with this thought in mind: The Senator's amendment contemplates the taking away from the people of the District their public buildings and deeding them over to the Government of the United States. We have these helpless people here without any voice in their affairs, and they are thus to be stripped of the municipal property which they in part own, without their having anyone of their own choice to represent them on the floor of either the Senate or the other House. That would place them in an even more helpless condition than they now are.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio makes the common mistake that has resulted in much of the controversy on this subject, that the people of the District of Columbia have any public buildings or that they have any protection through the District of Columbia. There never was a greater mistake. While the legal title to some of the public buildings rests in the District of Columbia, the District is a mere naked trustee for the Government. The people have no more share or interest in the public buildings which are now held in the name of the District than have the people of my State.

I am utterly opposed, Mr. President, to anything like local self-government in the District. I do not believe that it is possible, under conditions as they exist and under the provisions of the Constitution, for any such double authority to exist in the District; but, looking at it from my own point of view, that this is the National Capital pure and simple, and that there is in fact no District of Columbia and no municipal government at all having any control over this situation, I do believe, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, that the people of the District of Columbia, just like the people of my State, should have representation in Congress, not because I believe they have any superior rights here in the District, for I do not, but because I believe that every American citizen should be represented in the Congress of the United States, wherever he may live, and in that way have the right of a voice in the Halls of Congress in dealing with the Capital, in which he is interested just the same as I am.

Mr. President, as I have said, this controversy has been going on right along ever since I have been in the Senate. It came up at the last session of Congress, the House taking the position that it takes now, that the half-and-half system should not prevail, but that the people of the District of Columbia should be compelled to pay all that could be gotten out of them and the National Government contribute only the additional amount necessary to meet the expenses, and the Senate taking the position that the half-and-half system should be continued in force and that the Government should meet one-half of the expenses; or, in other words, meet an amount equal to that raised in the District by taxation, whether it met the needs of the District or not.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I want to ask the Senator a question. When he used the phrase "compelled to pay all that could be gotten out of them," he meant by that, did he not, by having them pay a fair rate of taxation?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that is a disputed question. There is a very strong feeling among the people of the District that they have been overtaxed. I will come to that after a while. There is also a strong feeling on the part of some Members of Congress that the people here have been undertaxed, and that is one of the crucial questions that has called up all this controversy on the subject. The result of the conflict between the two Houses on that subject was that the conference committee inserted in the bill then under consideration the provision that a joint committee of the two Houses should be raised for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the whole matter of the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the Government, and it so happened that I was honored by an appointment upon that committee.

The joint committee made the fullest possible investigation of the whole question. It opened the hearings to everybody who desired to be heard. There was absolutely no limitation upon it. The difficulty was that only one side of the question was adequately or scientifically presented to the committee, and that was the side favoring the half-and-half principle. A committee of one hundred was appointed by some of the citizens of the District to represent that interest, and three of that committee, very able gentlemen, presented the whole matter to the committee. Mr. Henry B. F. Macfarland, who has had this matter in hand for a good many years, and who has probably made speeches enough about it to fill a number of volumes, and Theodore W. Noyes, who has written enough on the subject to fill 20 volumes, were two of the members of that committee who were called upon to present the matter to the joint committee. These men have become popular heroes in the minds of the people of the District of Columbia because of their efforts to maintain what they conceive to be their rights in dealing with this question.

These are very estimable gentlemen, and I have nothing to say against them; but I do believe, Mr. President, that they have done more to injure the District of Columbia with respect to this matter than any two men within the District. They have kept the District tied to the dead body of the half-and-half system and kept alive the controversy between the people of the District and Congress that has led to much animosity and discord that has been very injurious to the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while I have been, and still am, a believer in the law as it stands on the statute books to-day, I was the author of the provision under which the joint committee was appointed; and I had this thought in mind, that the Members of the two Houses of Congress who would sacrifice themselves to that work—because I knew that it would be a very laborious and thankless task in a sense—would make a careful investigation of the whole subject, as they did, that they would make a report, as they did, and that then the Committee on the District of Columbia of the two Houses of Congress would formulate a bill and that we would have legislation covering this subject.

Nothing has been done in that direction at all, and I think the Senator will agree with me that it is rather a violent way of trying to solve this disputed question to have it put on an appropriation bill at the present time.

Mr. WORKS. No; I do not acquiesce in the Senator's views in that matter, I am sorry to say, principally because the trouble apprehended here is wholly imaginary. It has no real substance, as I shall try to point out; and if there were a direct provision made—as I shall ask to be done if the amendment that I have now offered is either held to be out of order or is voted down—that the money for the maintenance of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the National Treasury, that is a very simple way of settling this question. It is not going to harm anybody. In fact, it is leaving the situation just as it is to-day. The Government is paying all of these expenses out of the National Treasury, and it is getting a part of them in by taxation. That is the whole situation. That is precisely as it should be, except that we are making this false issue; we are creating discord and inharmoniousness between Congress and the residents of the District upon the fictitious idea that there is another government, that it has a treasury, and that part of this money is being paid out of that treasury, which is not true in any sense, as I shall attempt to show before I conclude.

I recognize the justice of the position taken by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the Government should contribute toward the expenses of the District. I do not question that at all. I am not at all in sympathy with the position taken by the House upon that question. But my own position is that this is a Government affair; that the people of the District of Columbia have no rights except the same as are held by citizens of different States in the country; that there is but one Treasury and that the money should be paid out of that Treasury, and the people of the District be taxed a reasonable amount on account of the benefits that they receive as citizens of the District of Columbia. The popular idea about it is that because the Government owns a large amount of property within the District that is untaxable it should contribute toward the expenses of the District, and not leave it to the taxpayers here to pay all of the expenses.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it not true that if a plan were adopted to make the Government pay all the expenses, and the present law were continued as to the assessment or tax collected per hundred dollars, the residents of the District would pay about 66 per cent of the taxes and the General Government would pay only about 34 per cent?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that depends altogether upon what the appropriations are.

Mr. CURTIS. I meant, with the appropriation as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. WORKS. But the trouble about it is, Mr. President, that the proper appropriations are not made, and the Government does not contribute what it ought toward the keeping up and maintenance of the Capital, and it is prevented from making the proper appropriation that should by all means be made by the half-and-half system, in this way:

The law provides for taxation of the residents of the District. It fixes the rate of taxation at one dollar and a half per hundred dollars, and the valuation at two-thirds of the value of the property, which definitely fixes the amount that the taxpayers shall pay, dependent only upon the work of the assessor, who may assess the property too high or too low. But the amount to be paid by the taxpayers of the District is fixed now. It would not be changed in the least by the amendment that I have offered. They would pay just the same, if the District of Columbia were abolished and this made a national affair, that they are paying to-day. It does not change the situation in the slightest degree.

The Senator from Kansas says that the National Government would pay about 34 per cent. The truth about it is that the half-and-half plan, as I shall show further along, is not maintained. It has not been in practice. Sometimes the District has paid more than half, and in certain years the Government has paid more than half; but taking a general average, as the testimony taken by the committee shows, it is now very nearly an equal division of the amounts paid by the two. But, now, look at this situation:

By the law that is now in existence, the Government is confined in its contribution to an amount equal to that raised by taxation. For instance, if the estimated amount of taxes to be realized by the assessment should amount to $8,000,000, under this law the Government would be required to put up a like sum.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I am reminded of this suggestion by the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas. Assuming that it is true that the District does pay more than half, if the people of the District are fairly and honestly assessed, who ought to object to it? What objection can there possibly be if the District pays all, providing its people are not overtaxed?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I just make a suggestion there, if the Senator pleases? The objection to the citizens of the District paying 66 per cent and the Government only 34 was covered by a statement made by the Senator from California. Under the appropriation bill as it comes from the House, and even as it comes to the Senate, the improvements that ought to be made in this city are not provided for, and unless Congress will appropriate what is needed, then it is unfair to the people of this District to make them pay a greater percentage of the tax than the Government pays, because the Government gets the greater benefit, and you do not give the people what they really need and what they deserve.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not relieve the people of the District from the payment of an honest and fair tax; and as long as they pay that, and the Senator from California assumes that, I can not see how anybody can object if Congress does not appropriate enough.

Mr. CURTIS. I would only make them pay their fair share of what was used for the benefit of the District.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, that shows the false quantity that enters into this whole question under the half-and-half act. There ought to be no question about who should contribute the expenses of maintaining the Capital of the Nation. The Government should do it. Nobody else should be called upon to do it, except in the way of taxation. The Government should levy fair and reasonable taxes upon the residents or property owners within the District, and they should be paid into the National Treasury, and then the Government of the United States should take care of its own Capital.

There is no escaping from the justice of that position. There is no escaping from the law of it; because, under the Constitution, the Government is given absolute control over the District of Columbia, and is responsible for its maintenance. But here is the difficulty: The people of the District of Columbia are afraid, and they have some right to be afraid, that Congress will levy taxes upon them and will not appropriate the amount of money that should be appropriated to maintain and build up the Capital; and we should give some weight to that position. It appeals to them, it appeals to any just-minded man, that that ought not to be done. But, on the other hand, the Government is limited by this act, so that it can not appropriate what it should do without violating its provisions. That is to say, it is limited to a certain amount to be appropriated for the good of the District.

Now, how simple it would be, how just it would be, and how reasonable, to say, irrespective of the other provisions of the amendment I have submitted here, that the Government should do what is its plain duty—pay the expenses of its own Capital out of its own Treasury. Why should we provide that any part of the expenses of carrying on the Capital of this great country of ours should be paid by somebody else, or out of some other treasury? To my mind, the thing is not only unjust but it is absurd.

As the evidence before the committee developed, there are two things that have been moving the citizens of the District here to contest this question for years past. One of them—and they very frankly admit it—is the fear that they will be overtaxed, with the hope on the part of Congress that the National Government may be spared the appropriation from its Treasury of the amount that should be appropriated. That is one thing. Then they are afraid, even if they are taxed a reasonable amount, that the Government will not appropriate sufficient money to carry on and maintain and upbuild the Capital in which they are interested.

That is the whole secret of their insistence upon the half-and-half system. They do not question the fact that the position I am now taking here upon the floor of the Senate is a just and fair position. Some of them went so far as to say that it was the ideal way of maintaining the Capital of the Nation; but they are distrustful of Congress, and fear that it will not do its duty in dealing with its own Capital.

Well, that is a sorry situation of things; is it not? It is an imputation upon Congress. But let me tell you, Senators, it is an imputation that is not wholly without foundation. Congress has not made the necessary and proper appropriations to carry on and maintain the Capital of the Nation. It has contented itself with and held itself down to contributing only the limited amount that is provided by the half-and-half system. It is a very narrow view to take of it, I think a very unpatriotic view, but that has been the situation. There are things in existence in this Capital to-day that might have been removed by proper appropriations that should bring the blush of shame to every American citizen who knows of their existence, and who knows that they are allowed by the Congress to continue to exist. The slums are one of them. I have talked about that matter here until I have made myself a sort of nuisance. I am not going to continue it, except to say that I think Congress should, without any delay—it should have done it in this appropriation bill—provide for the removal of these plague spots here in the Capital of a great nation. They have allowed a hospital condition to prevail here that is a disgrace to the country. They have allowed the engine houses, occupied by the firemen, to continue in a condition that is a reproach to Congress and to the Nation. They have left the police stations in the same condition. I see there is a slight appropriation in the present bill to remedy in part that condition, and I am glad of it.

They have permitted a system of building here, the construction of insanitary attached buildings, that should never have been allowed in a city like this. So the people of the District—not attempting to enumerate other things that I have in mind—have a just right to complain that Congress has not done its duty to its own Capital, and has been shifting upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of the District the duty that belongs to the Government.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has referred to the select committee that was appointed to investigate and to report upon this whole situation. He says he had hoped, and so have I, that some legislation would be offered in Congress to supersede what is called the organic or half-and-half act, and try to settle this question as between the Congress of the United States and the taxpayers of the District. Why should it be allowed to continue? There is no reason for it. As a matter of fact, there is no foundation for it except in fear and distrust, the one of the other. There is no substantial foundation for it at all.

I had expected that my Democratic associates upon the committee, who naturally would be expected to act in the matter, would present some form of bill to meet what was reported by the committee; but for some reason they have not done so. I am not saying that in criticism of them. They may have thought it unnecessary; but it seems to me that it would be the wise thing to do, as the Senator from New Hampshire has suggested. But, as I have stated, this matter was fully investigated by the committee. They made their report. The hearings are printed. I should just like to know how many Members of this body have read the evidence taken before that committee so as to inform themselves of the actual conditions. I see that one Senator holds up his hand. Are there any others? Two of them.

I should like to know how many Members of this body have read the reports that were made by that committee. I see one hand raised now. There are two. I wonder, Mr. President, whether it is true that after raising this committee by a vote of Congress, and after two months of hard labor, conscientiously done, with a view to settle this question, only two Members of this body have read those reports.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I want to somewhat enlarge that number. I was busy on another matter and did not raise my hand.

Mr. WORKS. Then we have three, Mr. President. That is a little bit better. Now, I want to say to Senators in all good will that I think they have not treated this committee with common and ordinary courtesy, to say nothing of their failure to perform the duty that rests upon them of investigating this question as the committee has done, in order that they might come here to-day and be informed in their own mind as to what ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President—

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from California, speaking of those who have read the report, that I have endeavored to inform myself as to what is in the report, and, as probably the Senator is aware, possibly many have done so, though they have not read it all. As far as I am concerned, I have endeavored to inform myself as to the report of the commission.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is a melancholy fact that the Congress of the United States will appoint a committee upon an important matter of this kind, involving the future prosperity and building up of the Capital of the Nation, and then pay no sort of attention to the reports that were made by the committee or the evidence that was taken upon that important question.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. CHILTON. As illustrating what the Senator is now saying, he took it for granted a moment ago that the people of the District of Columbia are for the half-and-half plan. Is not the Senator of the opinion from the evidence actually taken before the commission, what we ascertained from the citizens outside of the few who are undertaking to run the city of Washington, and, as some of us think, the Congress of the United States, that a majority of the people of the District of Columbia are not for the half-and-half plan?

Mr. WORKS. I have not reached that point yet.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator will recall that those opposed to it asked Congress to give them a plebiscite, and they said it would show that the great mass of the people are not in favor of it.

Mr. WORKS. I have already said, Mr. President, that practically only one side of this question was presented, and it was very ably presented, too. But the committee of its own motion endeavored to get in a few of the residents within the city to find out what their individual views were on the subject. Some of them did not come at all. They were afraid to come. They knew what was being done by this committee of one hundred to maintain the half-and-half, and they were afraid it would be unpopular to appear in opposition to what was being maintained by that committee. Some of them did come, however, and the statement was made by some of them that they believed the majority of the people within the District were opposed to the half-and-half system, and thought it ought to be abolished.

Mr. President, in view of the disclosure made here that Senators have not read the report of the committee and have not read the evidence, I am going to burden the Senate for a little while with the reading of some extracts from the report and some of the testimony that was taken by the committee in order that the Senate may know that at least we had a foundation for the unanimous conclusion the committee reached. I do hope that Senators, however uninteresting what I am saying may appear to them, will stop a little while here in the Senate and listen to some of this testimony and the views that are expressed by the committee.

Mr. President, I want to read first an extract from the report of the whole committee, in which the committee was unanimous, as showing just what conclusion was reached and in a brief way their reasons for it, as follows:

REPORT OF JOINT SELECT COMMITTEE.

The committee next determined the question of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia or any branch thereof which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively.

We find after a most careful consideration of all of the evidence and circumstances as shown to exist at this time that there is no reason for any arbitrary rule of proportionate contribution for the expenses of the District of Columbia by the residents thereof and by the people of the United States who reside outside the District of Columbia; that the correct rule should be that the responsibility in taxation of the residents of the District of Columbia be as fixed and certain as the responsibility of residents of other American cities comparable with the city of Washington; that with the payment of such taxes as may be equitably and properly assessed against privately owned taxable property, the financial responsibility of the residents of the District should be concluded; that the present assessment valuation of privately owned real estate in Washington is fair and reasonable; that the sum of money collected as such taxes be paid into the Treasury of the United States, there to be incorporated into a trust fund for the benefit of the District of Columbia, and that the revenues thus collected be expended in the government of the District of Columbia and for no other purpose; that the United States pay from its moneys all the balance of whatever sum is deemed necessary to appropriate for the proper municipal expenses of the District of Columbia after consideration of the reports and estimates of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the needs of said District; and as a conclusion, which should be of the greatest weight, we urge upon Congress that its appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia should always be in such sum as will not only continue the city of Washington and the District of Columbia in every respect as the splendid and beautiful central residence of this great Nation, but also cause it to become and be forever maintained as a model for all the cities of the world.

The Constitution of the United States of America in clause 17 of section 8 gives Congress the power—

"to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings."

The expressed provision of "exclusive legislation" necessarily makes the control of this body of land known as the District of Columbia vest in the National Government and makes this highest national power the government of this Federal District.

Mr. President, I myself prepared and filed a separate report. I am going to read from it, if Senators will pardon me, because it states in a brief and more satisfactory way than I could orally what my views are on the subject in relation to the existence in the District of Columbia of the half-and-half system, and, in addition, to quote from it in part some of the evidence upon which I founded my own personal opinion. Some quotations will be found also of a like kind in the general report of the committee. I shall follow it by calling the attention of Senators to testimony that was given that is not quoted at all in the report.

In this separate report I have this to say in part, and I think if Senators will listen to the evidence that was taken or take the pains to read it they will find that the statements I make here are fully sustained by the evidence.

Mr. STERLING. Can the Senator give the page of the printed report?

Mr. WORKS. I am not sure whether I have done so; probably not. It might compel the Senator from South Dakota to read all the evidence in order to find it, which I think would not be a misfortune, for I believe it is all instructive:

EXTRACTS FROM THE SEPARATE REPORT OF MR. WORKS.

The bill raising the committee provides: "Whose duty it shall be to prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which shall be borne by said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based."

Evidently the imposition of duty upon the committee in this form proceeds upon the theory that there are within the territorial boundaries of the District of Columbia two distinct corporate or governmental organizations, each of which is responsible, in part, for the administration of the District and liable for a portion of its expenses. Nothing could be further from the truth. The District is the Capital of the Nation. Congress is by the Constitution given complete and exclusive jurisdiction and control over it. Being exclusive, this power can not lawfully be delegated to any other municipal organization or body. In fact, none of this power or jurisdiction has been delegated to the District of Columbia. It is a nominal municipal corporation only, without officers, without authority, and without any function whatever to perform as such. The so-called District officers are appointed by and are in fact the officers of the National Government. It can make no laws, but is governed wholly by laws enacted by Congress. Its treasury, so called and mentioned so often in appropriation bills, has no existence in fact. It has no money and no power to collect any. Its nominal officers, who are in fact officers of the Government, are only instruments of the Government for the levying and collection of taxes from property owners within the District. It can not make appropriations or pay any of its expenses.

The money collected as taxes from property owners is not paid into the treasury of the District, because it has none, but into the National Treasury. It is not paid out by the District, but by the Treasurer of the United States upon the order of Congress. The title to some of the property in the District is held in its name, but the property belongs to the Government and is held by the District as a mere naked trustee without power or control over it. In short, the nominal municipal corporation of the District of Columbia is a mere shell, without any authority, power, or responsibility, and without any of the attributes or functions of a municipal government. It is worse than that. It is a delusion and a snare. It has led the people of the District to believe that they have a local government that is some shield and protection to them as against the power of Congress, and at the same time has led some Members of Congress and people outside of the District to believe that the National Government can divide the responsibility of maintaining, building up, and beautifying its own Capital with such a local government. The situation is wholly misleading and hurtful.

This bill, directing the committee to ascertain the proper proportion of the expenses of the Capital to be borne, respectively, by the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, is founded upon a wrong impression of the conditions as they exist and is itself misleading. The District of Columbia never has been liable for any proportion of the expenses of the District and never can be, properly. It has never paid any part of the expenses and probably never will. Its nominal officers, who are in fact the officers of the Government, have collected taxes from private individuals within the District and paid them into the National Treasury without any responsibility or liability of any kind on the part of the District as a municipal power or entity. Obviously, therefore, the real and only possible question before the committee is not what proportion of the expenses of the District shall be paid by the District of Columbia but what proportion of such expenses to be paid by the National Government shall be raised by taxation of the privately owned property in the District?

SHALL THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BE ABOLISHED?

I need say but little more on this branch of the subject. I have shown that practically the District of Columbia is a mere name without authority or responsibility. This is the Capital of the Nation, for which the Nation alone is responsible. It must be apparent that there can be no divided authority or responsibility. I think the Government should once for all take over its own Capital and provide for and maintain it. And the name of it should be changed. To call the Capital of the country a "district" is incongruous and anything but pleasing. It should be made the City of Washington. Commissioners of the City of Washington should be appointed as a branch of the Government with authority within proper limits to manage and control its affairs. The commissioners should be Government officers and responsible as such. I am convinced that they should be given much broader and more comprehensive power and authority in dealing with local affairs than the District commissioners now have. Provision should be made by Congress for a complete readjustment of conditions in the District. The laws regulating assessments and collection of taxes are badly in need of revision. So I have no doubt are other laws affecting District affairs.

The District of Columbia as a municipal corporation, as I have already pointed out, is worse than useless and should be speedily abolished.

SHALL THE HALF-AND-HALF SYSTEM BE ABOLISHED?

It may well be inferred from what I have said that in my judgment there should be no half-and-half system nor any other proportionate liability for the expenses of the District of Columbia as between the District and the Government. It is the Capital of the Nation, over which the Government has full and exclusive jurisdiction and control. Its obligations and responsibilities should be equally broad and exclusive. It can not either lawfully or justly transfer any part of its duty or responsibility to the so-called municipality, the District of Columbia, or anybody else. It should have no wish or desire to do so. But that is just what it has attempted to do by the act of 1878, by which the half-and-half system was established. Congress fixes by law the tax rate and the basis of assessment and then matches what is raised by taxation, dollar for dollar. So Congress not only shifts half its responsibility to the taxpayers of the District, but limits its own responsibility by the amount thus raised.

The so-called organic act, after requiring the commissioners to estimate the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the District, provides:

"To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof; and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia."

This clause of the act expressly limits the amount to be appropriated by the Government to 50 per cent of the amount estimated. It was contended at the hearing that there was no limit upon the amount that might be appropriated by the Government. But this is in the very face of the law and can not be maintained without doing violence to its express and unambiguous terms.

This system may have been justified at that time as a compromise and as a means of extricating the District from a very unfortunate condition, but that reason no longer exists and there is no reason or excuse for even its nominal continuance.

But, as a matter of fact, the half-and-half system has never been in effect in any practical sense. The amount of taxes to be assessed and collected has never been founded upon the one-half of the expenses of the District. On the contrary, as I have said, Congress has fixed the rate of taxation at $1.50 a hundred and the basis of assessment at not less than two-thirds of the true value of the taxable property. The needs of the District have nothing to do with the amount raised. If it happens that the amount raised by taxation on this fixed basis, matched by an equal amount contributed by the Government, exceeds the needs of the District for the year there must be a surplus. If it falls short of the needs of the District, then the District must go without and suffer the consequences. And the fact is that the estimates for the expenses of the District are founded on the previous revenues raised by this hard-and-fast system of taxation and not by the actual needs of the District. It is an illogical and unjust system, whatever proportions may be fixed, and is wholly indefensible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I apprehend it has not escaped the attention of the Senator from California that for several years, when the revenues of the District were inadequate to meet one-half of the expenditures of the government, the General Government loaned the District money at 2 per cent, to be repaid—and all of which has been repaid—for the purpose of enabling the District to meet its obligation of paying one-half?

Mr. WORKS. I have not overlooked that.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that the District has never suffered because of inadequate revenues on the part of the District of Columbia.
